VOLUME 74.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 369 OF 1923.
June 1, 1923.
Present:—Mr. Justice Moti Sagar.
NIDHI RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
PARSA RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 35 (2)—Execution of decree—Symbolical possession—Warrant, copy of, not affixed on property, effect of—Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), s. 141—Trees, whether land.

The failure to affix a copy of the warrant on property of which formal possession is to be delivered as required by r. 35 (2) of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code is a material defect and renders the delivery of formal possession uneffectual.

Where the law lays down a definite procedure for the delivery of possession which is purely symbolical, that procedure must be strictly followed and any omission therein must be regarded as material.

Khub Ram v. Surat, 39 Ind. Cas. 753; 20 P. R. 1917; 26 P. L. R. 1917; 22 P. W. R. 1917, followed.

Trees are land within the meaning of section 141 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, and possession of trees cannot be delivered in execution of a decree except through the Collector as provided for in that section.

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 20th November 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Kaithal, District Karnal, dated the 2nd October 1922.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Appellant.
Mr. Shmair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a pecision of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Karnal upholding a decision of the Munsif of Kaithal dated the 2nd of October 1922, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for possession of a certain number of mango trees growing on the defendant's land at Thanesar. The suit was based on the allegation that the trees originally belonged to one Nandan who got possession of them under a decree against one Udho Ram, the father of the present defendant, and that, subsequently, he had made a gift thereof in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants repudiated the claim and contended that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors-in-title had ever been in possession of the trees in question within 12 years prior to the date of the institution of the suit. It was further alleged that the trees belonged to the defendants and that the plaintiff had no right to sue.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by limitation. On appeal the learned District Judge upheld the decision of the Munsif on the question of limitation and held further that the gift upon which the plaintiff was relying was not a valid gift in law and that he was consequently not entitled to maintain the suit. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the plaintiff through Mr. Sagar Chand, while Mr. Shamair Chand has appeared on behalf of the respondents.

After hearing the learned Counsel on both sides I am of opinion that this appeal must fail and that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. It appears that in 1910 Nandan obtained a decree for possession of these trees against Udho Ram, the father of the present defendants. This decree was put into execution and it is alleged that the decree-holder obtained symbolical possession of these trees in execution of his decree. On behalf of the appellant it is argued that the decree-holder, having obtained symbolical possession in October 1910, it is open to him to bring a suit for actual possession within 12 years from that date and that the present suit, which was instituted in April 1922, is within limitation. On behalf of the respondents it is pointed out that the trees are land within the meaning of section 141 of the Land Revenue Act, and that possession could not be delivered except through the Collector as provided for in that section. It is further contended that a copy of the warrant for delivery of possession was not affixed on the spot and that, consequently the requirements of law essential for symbolical possession were not complied with. In my opinion these contentions are well founded, and it must be held that the so-called symbolical possession upon which the plaintiff relies was no pessession in the eye of the law. It has been held in Khub Ram v. Surat (1) "that when the law lays down a definite procedure for the delivery of possession which is purely symbolical that procedure must be strictly followed and any omission therein must, therefore, be regarded as material" I do not think there is any essential difference between the facts of the two cases, and the principle laid down in Khub Ram v. Surat (1) is fully applicable to this case. The mere fact that the dakhlnama filed in the previous case was signed by Udho Ram does not make any difference, and, in my opinion, Nandan never got symbolical possession of the trees which he subsequently purported to transfer in favour of the present appellant Nidhi Ram. I think the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct and the suit was clearly barred by limitation. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs throughout.

Z. K. & N. H. Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS CASES NOS. 211, 212 AND 213 OF 1923.

June 1, 1923.

Present:—Sir Grimwood Mears, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Piggott.

SURAJ NARAIN—PETITIONER

JANG BAHADUR AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 20, 23—Election petition, presentation of—Verification, whether necessary.

In a District where the practice exists of delivering petitions intended for the Collector to a subordinate official, the presentation of an Election Petition will be good within the meaning of section 20 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, if it is handed over to that official and in fact reaches the Collector within the time fixed by that section. [p. 3, col. 1.]

An Election Petition can only be lodged by a candidate in whose favour votes have been recorded and who claims in the petition to be declared elected in the room of the person whose election is questioned or by ten or more electors. It cannot be presented by a person who though he was a candidate, did not actually go through the contest. [p. 4, col. 1.]

It is not necessary for an Election Petition to be verified in accordance with the provisions for verification of plaints. It is only after the petition has been duly presented that the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code has to be followed. [p. 4, col. 2.]

Civil miscellaneous reference made by the Commissioner of Allahabad Division, dated the 23rd of April 1923.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The Municipal Elections were held in Cawnpore in March 1923. Suraj Narain was a candidate, as was also, one Muhammad Siddiq Hafiz. Both of these men were defeated by an opponent who secured a large number of votes. Both of these gentlemen thought they had a case for unseating their opponents and each of them proposed to proceed under the Municipalities Act, Local Act II of 1916, and lodged petitions. Section 20 prescribes the form and the manner in which the petition shall be presented, and it also defines who are the persons who are permitted by law to present a petition. Section 22 defines who is to hear petitions, and clause (2) of that section lays down how the proceedings may start by presentation.

Taking the case, first of all, of Suraj Narain,

M scellaneous Case No. 211 of 1923, the material dates and facts are as follows:— The election was held on March 20th, 1923, and on the 23rd of March Suraj Narain attended the Court of the Collector. The petition which he had with him was, as regards formal parts, in proper form, that is to say, it was headed as being a matter which would be dealt with in the Court of the Comm ssioner (it was stated to be presented "through the Collector, Cawnpore District") and recited that it was a petition under section 19 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, II of 1916. When Suraj Narain reached the Court the Collector had not arrived, but the Joint Magistrate was sitting and the Joint Magistrate, in answer to an enquiry by the petitioner, has recorded in a letter of April 7th, that a practice does exist in that Court, which undoubtedly is for the convenience of the public, whereby petitions intended for the Collector are received by the Joint Magistrate and made over to the Collector on his arrival. Suraj Narain, relying upon that practice, in fact handed to the Joint Magistrate the petition, and the Joint Magistrate, in pursuance of that practice, handed over to the Collector the document. That was done on the 23rd of March. So that Suraj Narain who had originally 15 days within which to deliver to the proper authorities a proper petition in fact had got that petition into the hands of the proper authority, namely, the Collector, by the 23rd of March. It is suggested that we are bound to construe sections 20 and 22 so strictly as to hold that no presentation of a petition can avail the petitioner unless the petitioner himself personally comes face to face personally with the Collector, and delivers it into the Collector's hands. That undoubtedly is the safest and wisest thing to do. But the position as regards the Collector's Court at Cawnpore was that, in reliance upon the practice, Suraj Narain was content to follow that practice of handing documents intended for the Collector to the Joint Magistrate. Inasmuch as the petition reached the Collector well within time, we are of opinion that it was a proper presentation and that petition ought to have been heard and disposed of upon the merits.

The next case with which we propose to deal is that of Muhammad Siddiq Hafiz, because there is some similarity in the facts. We will deal with the case of Durga Shankar later.

The elections for this particular Ward in Cawnpore were held on the 19th of March, and that gave Muhammad Siddiq Hafiz up to the 3rd of April within which to be in time for the lodgement of his Election Petition. Fifteen days is specified by the Act, and the first broad question appears, is did he by any means whatever get into the hands of the Collector by the 3rd of April the petition? The answer is that he did not do so, and that in, our opinion, makes a material difference in this case. On the 3rd of April, which was the last day, we are told that he presented the petition to a Deputy Collector, by name Mr. Ashfaq Husain. There is not in the papers relating to this case any evidence which suggests that there was any practice whereby this Deputy Collector was authorised, or was accustomed short of actual auhorization, to receive petitions of that nature and was a recognised official channel for their transmission to the Collector. That being so, we think that the petitioner in this case took the risk. If it happened that the Deputy Collector had forwarded the document to the Collector within time and the Collector had chosen to accept it from the Deputy Collector, that might possibly have been a good presentation. We do not say that it would have been a good presentation, that matter would have to be enquired into with some care and might depend to some extent on whether we believed that there was in existence a recognised practice. However, we are satisfied that, in the absence of any evidence of that character, the petitioner when he handed the document to the Deputy Collector, who no doubt gave him an assurance that it would be forwarded to the Collector, took the risk of its reaching the Collector within time. It did not reach the Collector within time and was not received by him until the 4th of April. In these circumstances, we hold that as regards the petition of Muhammad Siddiq Hafiz that petition was not presented wit-in time and is one which should not be entertained.

We now come to the petition of Durga Shankar. He, like Muhammad Siddiq Hafiz, handed the petition to a Deputy Collector, and again there is no evidence on this record that the Deputy Collector was a recognised channel for the transmission of these documents. We need not decide whether that petition was properly presented for this reason, that we are unable to understand how Durga Shanker comes before the Court as a petitioner. It appears that he was one of several candidates and that at a meeting it was considered desirable that there should not be so many candidates but that the choice of the two gentlemen who should contest the Ward was left to the decision of a gentleman of high standing, who was regarded by the seven candidates as being likely to make the best selection. Two gentlemen were in fact selected. Durga Shankar was amongst the five whose names were passed over and he, having the belief that a candidate who was thus declared elected could be unseated on various grounds, conceives that he has a right to come forward and raise that question. These petitions can be lodged by a candidate in whose favour votes have been recorded and who claims in the petition to be declared elected in the room of the person whose election is questioned, that is, a person who went through the contest in whose favour votes were recorded and who alleges that strict scrutiny of votes and striking off the names of people who should not have voted or by reason perhaps of disqualification of the person who has been elected that he himself will be the person who will become the elected member in the event of the petition being enquired into and upheld. That is the only one person who can present a petition, but a body of men, ten or more electors, may join together and present a petition. Durga Shankar's position in this case has no locus standi in the matter of law, and on that ground was incompetent to present a petition and on that ground his petition must be rejected.

Mr. Stowell, the Commissioner, also enquires whether a petition must be duly verified in accordance with the rule applicable to plaints. We think not. When the petition has been duly presented the hearing follows along the lines prescribed for a civil suit. The Act is silent as to the verification of the petition and it is only after due presentation of the petition that the civil suit procedure rules operate.

We are, therefore, of opinion that a petition need not be verified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit against some of several appellants—Prejudice.

O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code gives a right to a plaintiff to withdraw a suit or abandon any part of his claim and a similar previlege is inherent in an appellant. But a plaintiff-respondent cannot, when the litigation has reached the stage of an appeal, as of right, be allowed to defeat the appeal and prevent its being heard by withdrawing the suit as against the appellant. [p. 5, col 2.]

Plaintiff brought a suit to establish his right to a certain channel feeding a Government Tank and to prevent interference by Government and by other pattadars holding lands irrigated by the tank. The Government and the pattadars were impleaded as defendants. The plaintiff got a decree in the Court of First Instance. The Government did not appeal but the other defendants did so. In appeal the plaintiff applied and was allowed to withdraw the suit as against the appellants-defendants. The decree against the Government was confirmed;

Held, that the pattadars-defendants were materially prejudiced by the decree against the Government since it prevented the Government from using the plaint channel as a supply channel and thereby exercising its permanent right of distributing the water supply and that, therefore, the order allowing the suit to be withdrawn as against them was illegal. Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 28 of 1919, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Srivilliputhur, in Original Suit No. 255 of 1919.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and A. Swaminath Aiyar, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader and Mr. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute which has given rise to the present litigation is in connection with a channel, which is claimed by the appellants to be a poramboke channel feeding the Karisakulam Tank which irrigated their lands but which the respondents, who were plaintiffs in the First Court, claim to be a portion of their patta lands and to have no connection at all with Karisakulam Tank. The suits were brought to establish the rights of the plaintiffs in the channel and to prevent interference by Government, who are impleaded under the designation of the Secretary of State as the first defendant, as well as by the other defendants, who are pattadars holding lands irrigated by the Karisakulam Tank. In the First Court the plaintiffs were successful and were granted the reliefs prayed for by them. Government did not appeal, holding, as is now explained by the learned Government Pleader, that their interests were not sufficiently involved in the matter to make it worth their while to contest the decrees of the First Court in appeal. The defendants, however, did appeal; when the appeals came on for hearing, the plaintiffs-respondents claimed that they were entitled as of right to withdraw their suits as against the present defendants-appellants, and to content themselves with the decrees against Government who have not appealed. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted this plea and allowed the suits to be withdrawn and dismissed as against the present defendants-appellants, and the decrees against the Secretary of State were confirmed.

It is now contended on behalf of the appellants that the Subordinate Judge was wrong and that the plaintiffs could not claim as of right to be allowed to withdraw their suits at the stage which the litigation had reached, that they were prejudiced by the decrees of the First Court, even supposing the latter to be confined to a decree against Government, and that their appeals should have been heard and decided on their merits. We think these contentions are justified. The provision of law relied on by the plaintiffs-respondents is O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides for the withdrawal of a suit by a plaintiff and abandonment of part of his claim. This the rule gives as a matter of right and it is not disputed that a similar privilege is inherent in an appellant as regards his appeal but we have not been referred to any ruling or provision of law which would extend this privilege to a plaintiff-respondent, nor can we see any reason why when the litigation has reached the stage of an appeal, the respondent should be allowed the right to defeat the appeal and prevent its being heard by the simple process of withdrawing his suit as against the appellant. It may, of course, be argued that although this is not a right of the appellant, nevertheless it is in the discretion of the Court to allow him to do so but that will depend on considerations which, we think, have not been appreciated by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court has held that the appellants in these cases have no right of appeal because they are not prejudicially affected by the decrees in so far as they are decrees against Government. We do not think this is so. The defendants represented themselves as holders of lands under a Government tank and the irrigation of their lands as depending on the supply of water allowed to them by Government. The effect of the decrees is to declare that a certain channel to the Government tank is not such a supply channel and to prevent Government from using it as such and exercising its paramount right of distributing the water supply therefrom. We think that they clearly are materially prejudiced by the decrees against Government and that they should have a right of appeal against them. This is in accordance with the decision in Sivasailam Iyer v. Ramakrishna Aiyar (1). It has been argued on behalf of the respondents that this is not so, because the appellant's rights have been negatived by the decision of this Court in another litigation terminating in Second Appeal No. 1198 of 1913. So what extent the decision in that appeal is conclusive of the rights of the parties in the present cases is a matter for argument; but it is a question which must be decided in the course of the hearing of these appeals. We are most anxious to express no opinion on a point which would have to be determined by the lower Appellate Court, but it is argued on behalf of the appellants that the points for decision in that case are not identical with those which may arise for consideration in these cases and in effect that the rights claimed by the plaintiffs in that case were more extensive than those which are prejudicially affected by the decrees in these cases.

This is a point which we must leave to the lower Appellate Court to determine.

The decrees of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside and the appeals remanded to the lower Appellate Court for re-hearing and disposal on their merits. The plaintiffs-respondents will pay the defendants-appellants their costs in this Court. The costs of Government in this Court will be provided for in the final decrees. The Court-fee paid on the present appeals will be refunded to the appellants.

Arbitration—Irregularity in proceedings—Failure to object—Waiver.

A party to an arbitration having knowledge of an irregularity in the proceedings cannot lie by without objection and take his chance of an award in his favour and then, when he finds that the award has gone against him, seek to set it aside on the ground of the irregularity to which he failed to object. [p. 7, col. 1.]

Special second appeal against a decree of the Divisional Court, Hanthawaddy, passed in Civil Appeal No. 48 of 1921.

Mr. Bomanji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Surty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Heald, J.—The parties, who are Burmese Buddhist monks, had a dispute about the treasures, enclosures and lands of the Malit Monastry and referred all matters so in dispute between them to the arbitration of two eminent members of their Order. Those two arbitrators after examining witnesses gave an award. Appellants, to whom the award was unfavourable, instituted a suit to have it set aside on the ground that it was the award of only one of the two arbitrators and that it was not in accordance with the agreement, the latter ground being presumably intended to mean that the arbitrators had determined some matter not referred to arbitration. This second ground seems to have been abandoned though an attempt was made to resurrect it on appeal, and the only issue on which the suit went to trial was whether the award was made, pronounced and signed by both the arbitrators and was binding on the parties.

On this issue the Trial Court found that the award was made and pronounced by both the arbitrators and was signed by one, and on behalf of the other by his representative, he being too old and too infirm actually to sign it himself.

It was, however, argued that because one of the arbitrators was absent at the second of the three sittings at which witnesses were examined the award itself was vitiated. This objection was not taken at the time of the arbitration and was not mentioned in the pleadings, and the Court held that appellants could not be allowed to take it at that stage of the proceedings.

The suit was accordingly dismissed. Appellants appealed and the lower Appellate Court on the evidence agreed with the Trial Court that the award was the award of both arbitrators. As for the alleged failure of one arbitrator to attend one of the sittings, the lower Appellate Court referred to the Upper Burma case of Ma Mi Tu v. Maung Naing (1) and on the authority of that ruling decided that appellants must be held to have waived any objection to the irregularity by attending the subsequent sitting of the arbitrators without objection. The appeal was, therefore, dismissed.

Appellants now come to this Court in second appeal on the merits and on the ground that the award was invalid by reason of the absence of one of the arbitrators at one of the sittings.

No appeal lies against the concurrent findings of the two lower Courts that the award was in fact the award of both arbitrators, but the appeal was admitted for a consideration of the correctness of the Upper Burma ruling.

Appellants' learned Advocate cites various English authorities, but since none of them deal with the question of waiver of objections it is unnecessary to consider them in detail. It is perfectly clear and is in fact admitted by the first appellant, who alone gave evidence, that appellants went on with the arbitration without objection after the irregularity had occurred, and in my opinion there can be no doubt that by their conduct they condoned the irregularity. The law relating to such cases was carefully considered in the Upper Burma Ruling and I agree with the conclusion at which the learned Judic al Comm ssioner arrived. A party having knowledge of an irregularity cannot lie by without objection and take h s chance of an award in his favour and then, when he finds that the award has gone against him, seek to set it aside on the ground of the irregularitry to which he failed to object.

I, therefore, see no reason to interfere and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

May Oung, J.—I concur.

Civil revision against an order of the Munsif, East Budaun, dated the 9th of July 1921.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Opposite-party.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that on the 15th January 1921 Dan Singh, the opposite party, put in an application under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure for cancellation of sale in favour of the applicant and recovery of the property on the allegation that the property did not belong to the judgment-debtor of the applicant. The application of Dan Singh was struck off in default on the 28th May 1921. On the 11th June 1921 Dan Singh moved the Court to restore his application that was struck off in default. Objections were taken on behalf of Bhikam Khan, the applicant before me. The learned Munsif rejected the objections and restored the application of Dan Singh on the 9th July 1921. The present application for revision is against the order of the learned Munsif restoring the application of Dan Singh which had been struck off in default.

In my opinion the applicant must succeed in view of the case-law on the subject. I would refer to the latest case on this point of our own Court, namely, that of Bharat Indu v. Asghar Ali Khan (1). This is a Division Bench case and I must follow it. I, therefore, allow the application and set aside the order of the learned Munsif dated the 9th July 1921 restoring the application of Dan Singh.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Mr. N. C. Vatsh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents, Akbar Ali and Bande Ali, for the recovery of certain land which the Collector purported to acquire on behalf of the Secretary of State for a public purpose under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act of the year 1894. A notification was duly issued under section 6 of the Act, stating that the land was required for a public purpose, and, under section 7 of the Act, the Collector of Etawah was directed to take order for the acquisition of the land. The usual acquisition proceedings under subsequent sections of the Land Acquisition Act followed and, ultimately, the Collector took possession of the land under section 16 of the Act. Sub-section (3) of section 6 of the Act declares that a declaration under this section shall be conclusive evidence that the land is needed for a public purpose or for a Company as the case may be. The sole ground on which the suit has been decreed in the Courts below is that, in spite of this declaration, the land was not really needed for a public purpose. It is said that certain land of Bhatele Shiam Behari Lal had been acquired for the purpose of the Islamia School and under an agreement entered into between the Collector of Etawah and Shiam Behari Lal prior to the acquisition the land now in dispute was acquired in order to be given over to Shiam Behari Lal in return for his land which had been acquired. Before, however, the Courts can enter into the question whether the purpose for which the land was acquired was a public purpose or not, it must be found that they have jurisdiction to do this. In fact, the argument of the plaintiffs, which has been accepted by the Courts below is, that sub-section (3) of section 6 does not mean what in plain language it says, and that although the Statute declares in so many words that the declaration is conclusive evidence that the purpose for which the land was acquired was a public purpose, it is nevertheless open to the Courts to go into evidence and adjudicate upon the question whether it was a public purpose or not. In support of this startling proposition reliance is placed on two rulings, the ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (1), and the ruling of a Single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in an original suit, Manick Chand Mahata v. Corporation of Calcutta (2). In fact neither of these cases turns on the construction of section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. The Privy Council case turns entirely upon the construction of certain sections of the Calcutta Improvement Act and their Lordships expressly say that during the course of the argument their attention was directed to a number of decisions upon various Acts of Parliament giving compulsory powers for the acquisition of land, but that in each case the decision must depend upon the provisions of the particular Act and the purpose for which and conditions under which in such Act land may be compulsorily acquired. This case is no authority on the construction of section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. The other case was one in which certain land had been acquired on behalf of the Improvement Trust by the Calcutta Corporation. A Notification had been issued under section 6 of the Act. Mr. Justice Greaves, who decided the case, held that however conclusive a Notification under section 6 of the Act might be, it did not prevent his enquiring into the question whether the Calcutta Corporation had statutory powers to take steps at all for the acquirement of this land. This decision also, therefore, does not touch the point before us. The language of section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act is perfectly plain and clearly bars the Courts from enquiring into the question whether the purpose for which land in respect of which a declaration under section 6 has been issued is a public purpose or not. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and we accordingly allow it and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Buddhist Law—Burmese—Ancestral property—Joint estate—Onus—Presumption.

The question of the burden of proof in respect of the jointn ss or otherwise of ancestral property in the hands of Buddhist co-heirs depends on the facts of each case. [p. 10, col. 2.]

Ma Hnin Zi v. Ma Hnin Ye, S. J. L. B. 22, dissented from.

There is no presumption under the Buddhist Law that prope ty left by a person long deceased is part of an undivided estate among his heirs According to the circumstances of the case, it may require much or very little evidence to sufficiently prove that the property is undivided, but, when land has been in exclusive possession of others for a long period, the person asserting that it forms part of an undivided estate should be required to prove the fact. [p. 10, col. 2.]

Maung Lu Pe v. Maung Lu Gale, 2 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 418, relied on.

Mr. Villa, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Chari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—U Yan Shin and Ma Dwe In were husband and wife. The wife died before the husband, who died sixteen years before the suit. They left four children. They were, to give them in the order of their births, Ma Shew Pu, Ma Shwe U, Maung Po Tu and Maung Po Lu. They were all dead at the time of the institution of the suit and before Letters of Administration proceedings, to which reference will be made presently.

Ma Shwe Pu was never married. Ma Shwe U married Maung Shwe La, and she died, leaving Maung Shwe La, but no children, three years before the suit. Maung Po Lu pre-deceased Ma Shwe U, leaving his children Ma Kywe and Ma Kin Tin. Po Tu left some children who need not be mentioned. Ma Kywe applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of Ma Shwe Pu, including the house in the present suit as forming part of the estate. Maung Shwe La objected on the ground that all the property included by Ma Kywe in the estate of Ma Shwe Pu, belonged to Ma Shwe U, his deceased wife.

The District Court rejected Ma Kywe's application on the ground that Shwe La's statement about the property was correct. Ma Kywe then applied to this Court, and it was held that the ground of the District Court's decision was not sound, because the point as to what the estate consisted of was not the point to be decided in considering the question, which of the two contesting parties should be granted administration.

This Court pointed out that a decision should have been arrived at by a reference to section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act. The Court then stated that Ma Kywe's father, Po Lu, died before Ma Shwe Po, and held that Ma Shwe U, having survived Ma Shwe Pu, was Ma Shwe Pu's heir, and that the children of Po Lu were not heirs either solely or co-existing with Ma Shwe U, on the principle that the nearer in degree excludes the more remote.

During the pendency of the proceedings in this Court Ma Kywe applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of U Yan Shin and Ma Dwe In, including the house in suit as part of that estate. Subsequently, her application was granted. Maung Shwe La then filed the present suit against Ma Kywe and four others. It was for possesion of the house, and Ma Kywe and the other defendants were made parties because they were in occupation of the house. The plaintiff claimed the property to belong to the estate of Ma Shwe U, his deceased wife. The defence was that it belonged to the estate of U Yan Shin and Ma Dwe In. The following facts were admitted.

The house was built by U Yan Shin and Ma Dwe In, though it is not stated when they must have occupied it for some time. Amongst the property which they left was this house, that is to say, they died possessed of it.

Maung Shwe La's case was that there was a division of the estate of the old couple, and that the house fell to the share of Ma Shwe U. The defence say that there had been no division of that estate, and the house still remained part of it.

Mr. Chari for the defence contends that it is for the plaintiff to prove that there was a division.

The law as to the burden of proof, and what the presumption is as to the division of a Burmese Buddhist's estate, has been dealt with by me in Maung Po U v. Maung Po Thin (1). In that case I said :—

"The learned Additional Judge of the District Court held on the authority of Ma Hnin Zi v. Ma Hnin Ye (2), that the burden of proving the alleged division was on the plaintiff, and that as he had not discharged it he must fail. The ruling in that case is to the effect that the burden of proving the division of ancestral property is upon the party asserting the division. It was given by Mr. Sanford, Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma, in 1874. No authority is cited in support of it. As a rule of English Law, it cannot be supported by any known principles of the subject. Nor can I find any authority in the Dhammathats in suupport of it. I am unable to see how any rule as to the burden of proof can be laid down without reference to the facts of the particular case in which the question arises. All that Mr. Sanford says in his judgment is, that he who asserts that an estate is divided must prove his assertion. Upon what facts this view is based I am not able to find in the judgment. With due respect to the learned Judge, I am bound to say that the ruling as stated boldly cannot be held to be sound, unless Buddhist Law says that ancestral land must be presumed to remain undivided until the contrary is proved. That there is no such presumption in Buddhist Law I have no doubt. No such presumption can possibly be justified, having regard to the fact that among the Burmese Buddhists the division of ancestral estate among the co-heirs is the rule, cases of co-heirs remaining in commensality being extremely rare."

In the result I held that no general rule can be laid down as to the burden of proving jointness or seperation without regard to the facts and circumstances of each particular case. I cited, with reference to the case, Maung Lu Pe v. Maung Lu Gale (3) in which Mr. Copleston, Judicial Commissioner, said :—

" There is no presumption that property left by a person long deceased is part of an undivided estate. According to the circumstances of the case, it may require much, or very little, evidence to sufficiently prove that property is undivided, but, when land has been in the exclusive possession of others for a long period, the person asserting that it forms part of an undivided estate should be required to prove the fact. "

Now, what are the facts of this case?

According to the evidence adduced by that plaintiff, Ma Shwe U and Shwe Pu got the house on a division of the estate of the old couple by " paying the price."

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 985; 9 Bur. L. T. 164.
(2) S. J. L. B. 22.
(3) 2 U. B. R. (1897-1901) 418.

This evidence means that there was a division of property, and that the other heirs were bought out of this property by Ma Shwe U and Ma Shwe Pu. They occupied this house, and after the death of Ma Shwe U, which took place three years before the suit, her husband, Maung Shwe La, the plaintiff, paid revenue due on the house. There is also evidence to show that after the death of the old couple, Ma Shwe U applied for a grant of the house site in her name, jointly with those of her nephew, Po Tu, and niece, Ma Kin Tin. At that time the nephew and niece must have been of tender years. The real applicant for the ground was Ma Shwe U, and, more probably than not, she allowed the names of her nephew and niece to be coupled with hers, because she had some good intentions towards them at that time.

Mr. Chari contends that the fact that the names of the nephew and the niece were added, indicates that they had an interest in the property, and that there had been no division of the estate. I cannot agree.

Another point to be noticed is that Ma Kywe and the others lived in that house. I do not think that that indicates that the estate still remained in tact. The conduct of Ma Kywe in treating the house as belonging to Ma Shwe Pu, shows that it must have been well-known in the family that the property belonged to the two sisters, Ma Shwe Pu and Ma Shwe U jointly, or to either, and that this property fell to the share of Ma Shwe Pu or Ma Shwe U on a division of the property of the estate of the old couple.

It does not now matter whether the property belonged to Ma Shwe Pu or to Ma Shwe U, or to either jointly. Ma Shwe U, in her capacity as heir, would have inherited the house, and Maung Shwe La, as Ma Shwe U's widower, would have inherited it from Ma Shwe U.

There are acts of ownership on the part of either Ma Shwe U or Ma Shwe Pu, and there is long possession in favour of both, or either, and, therefore, the presumption arises that there must have been a division of the estate of the old couple because otherwise it is difficult to say how the two sisters, both or either, came to excercise acts of ownership, on the house, to the exclusion of their two brothers.

Besides the presumption, there is the evidence I have set out above. On the side of Ma Kywe there is nothing whatsoever. The other defendants depend upon Ma Kywe. They do not actually contest the suit. The position is that if Ma Kywe fails, they also fail. The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36—Government of India Act 1915, (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107—Order including person in list of touts—Power of High Court to interfere—General principles.

The High Court can only interfere with the order of a District Judge including a person's name in the list of touts, in the exercise of the general powers of superintendence conferred upon it by section 107 of the Government of India Act. [p. 12, col. 1.]

In the matter of the Petition of Madho Ram, 21 A. 181; A. W. N. (1899) 15; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 825, relied upon.

The High Court will not interfere with an order such as the above in the exercise of its powers of superintendence where the sole ground on which interference is sought is, that the decision of the District Judge is against the weight of the evidence. [p. 12, col. 2.]

But the High Court will interfere if the District Judge, in contravention of the direction given in section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, has included in the list of touts the name of a person to whom no notice was given to show cause why his name should not be so included. [p. 12, col. 2.]

The decision of a District Judge to include a person's name in the list of touts need not necessarily be based on direct evidence, or evidence which must be legal or relevant; it is enough if there is laid before the District Judge circumstantial evidence from which he draws the inference as against that person that he habitually acts as a tout. [p. 13, col. 1.]

KASHI NATH v. EMPEROR.

Civil miscellaneous application from an order of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 3rd October 1922.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We have before us four applications from persons in respect of whom the District Judge of Benares has passed an order under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879; that is to say, the names of each one of these four persons have been put by the District Judge in a list of persons who are proved to his satisfaction by evidence of general repute or otherwise habitually to act as touts. The word "tout" we may note is defined by section 3 of the same Act. In the case of two of the persons concerned, namely, Kashi Nath and Sarju Dat, notice was ordered to issue and the learned Government Advocate has appeared to support the order of the District Judge. The other two applications, namely, those of Abdul Hamid and Sital Pandey, were simply ordered to be laid before this Bench, to be dealt with in such manner as this Court might see fit after hearing arguments in the other two cases. The learned Government-Advocate has raised the general question of the right of this Court to interfere in revision with an order passed by the District Judge, or other competent Court, under section 36 of Act XVIII of 1879. That is a question which has more than once been before this Court; but the standard authority on the subject is the decision of a Bench of two Judges. One of them, the then Chief Justice of this Court, passed In the matter of the Petition of Madho Ram (1) in the year 1899. We agree with the learned Judges who decided that case, that this Court could only interfere with an order such as that now before us, in the exercise of the general powers of superintendence conferred upon it by what is now section 107 of the Government of India Act. We are satisfied that those powers are extensive enough to authorise this Court, in the exercise of its discretion, to send for the record of such a proceeding in a Subordinate Court, namely, the record of an enquiry conducted by a District Judge with a view to drawing up a list of persons proved to be touts, and to examine such record and thereafter issue such orders or instructions to the District Judge as might appear to be proper. The question remains, however, what principles this Court should lay down to govern the exercise of its discretion in this matter. The learned Judges who decided Madho Ram's case (1) above referred to laid down one principle of considerable importance. This was that this Court would not interfere in the exercise of its powers of superintendence where the sole ground upon which interference was asked for was, that the decision of the District Judge was against the weight of the evidence. We desire to stand by that principle. It is quite clear from the wording of section 36 of Act XVIII of 1879 that the Legislature intended to confer upon the Courts therein mentioned; including the Court of a District Judge, a very wide discretion in the matter. The District Judge is authorised to frame and publish a list of persons proved to his satisfaction, by evidence of general repute or otherwise, habitually to act as touts. It has been pressed upon us that the word "touts" as used in this section, refers back to the definition in the preceding section No. 3 of the same Act. This is undoubtedly so: but what is laid down in section 36 is that the District Judge has discretion to frame and publish a list of persons who are proved to his satisfaction to behave in the manner set forth in the definition of the word "tout" in section 3. The only qualifications imposed by the Act on the exercise of this discretion are that the District Judge must be satisfied by evidence of general repute or otherwise, and further that no person's name is to be included in such a list until he has had an opportunity of showing cause against such inclusion. We may say, in this connection, that we should certainly hold it a valid ground for interference by this Court, in the exercise of its general powers of supervision, if the District Judge had disobeyed this latter direction and had included in his list of touts the name of a person who had never been allowed an opportunity of showing cause against such inclusion. We return now to the obvious fact that it was never the intention of the Legislature to allow anything of the nature of an appeal againt the decision of a competent Court under section 36 of Act XVIII of 1879. We cannot allow our general powers of supervision to be invoked so as, in effect, to create a right of appeal which was never intended by the Legislature. In the cases now before us it is sought to bring the matter within the scope of the revisional jurisdiction, represented as falling somewhat short of the jurisdiction exerciseable by a Court of Appeal, by representing that the record of the enquiry conducted by the District Judge discloses, as against each of the four persons whose petitions lie before us, no legal or relevant evidence to warrant the finding arrived at by the District Judge that they habitually do act as touts. The plain fact of the matter is that, as regards each of these four persons, direct evidence was wanting, but there was laid before the District Judge certain circumstantial evidence, from which the District Judge drew the inference as against each of these persons that they were habitually acting as touts. In our opinion it would be straining the powers of superintendence conferred on this Court and setting an undesirable precedent if we were to take it upon ourselves in every instance of this kind to consider whether the circumstancial evidence relied upon by a District Judge, and set forth in his order, was or was not evidence upon which we ourselves would have drawn the same inference. We think the Legislature intended that the Distict Judge should be master in his own Court to this extent. The result is, that we are not prepared to interfere in any one of the four cases before us, and each of the applications stands dismissed accordingly.

ABDOOLLA HAJEE ABBA & CO.—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Rangoon Rent Act (Burma Act II of 1920), s. 9 (1)—Lease on favourable terms—Salami paid to lessor, recovery of.

At the time of the grant of a lease, the lessor, in consideration of the tenant's paying, a salami, agreed to take a small rent, not to turn the tenant out during a certain period, not to ask for more rent, and to make certain alterations in and additions to the premises leased. In a suit by the tenant to recover back the premium under section 9 (1) of the Rangoon Rent Act:

Held, that these agreements on the part of the landlord were conditions of the lease and formed a part and parcel of the same and that, therefore, the payment of the premium was within the contemplation of section 9 (1) of the Rangoon Rent Act and the amount was recoverable by the tenant.

Special first appeal from the judgment of the Rangoon Small Cause Court, in Civil Regualr No. 2944 of 1921, dated 11th August 1921.

Mr. Hamlyn, for the Appellant.

Mr. Munshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case under the Rangoon Rent Act, 1920.

The plaintiffs alleged that the house in question was let to them by the defendant at the rental of Rs. 200 per month, and that at the time of the lease, which was the 6th July 1919, the plaintiffs paid the defendant Rs. 2,000 as salami. The plaintiffs, therefore, asked for the return of this Rs. 2,000 under the provisions of section 9, clause 2, of the said Act.

The defendant in his written statement admitted having let the premises at the rent of Rs. 200 on the date mentioned in the plaint. His case, however, is that the rent was not the proper or fair rent but a less rent; and the sum of Rs. 2,000 was received as part of the consideration of the letting of the premises at a less rent. The defendant then goes on to say that he did not receive the said sum of Rs. 2,000 as premium or salami, but that it was paid for the consideration mentioned in paragraph 1, viz., "for receiving a less rent, and also by way of not requiring the plaintiffs to remove from the premises for five years, or asking for more rent, and also by way of making certain alterations for plaintiffs in the premises as to providing lavatories, etc., which defendant did in fact provide." For these reasons, he said, that there was no cause of action against him.

The learned Judge of the Court below did not take any evidence, and held on the pleadings that the payment of Rs. 2,000 was such as is contemplated by section 9 of the said Act and he decreed the suit.

The defendant has appealed, and his learned Counsel contends that evidence should have been taken and that the defence put forward by the defendant was a good one.

Section 9 provides as follows:—"(1) It shall not be lawful for any person in consideration of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy of any premises, to require the payment of any fine, premium or any other like sum in addition to the rent; (2) where any such payment has been made after the 1st day of July 1919, the amount shall be recoverable by the tenant by whom it was made from the landlord, and may, without prejudice to any other method of recovery, be deducted from any rent payable by him to the landlord: Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to any payment under any written agreement entered into before the 1st day of April 1918."

Now, the defence put forward means this: The rent agreed upon was Rs. 200 per month. For that rent the lease was granted. The lessor agreed to take a small rent, not to turn the tenants out during the term of five years, not to ask for more rent, and to make certain alterations in and additions to the premises. These agreements were made by the landlord at the time of the lease. They were, therefore, conditions of the lease, and, therefore, formed part and parcel of the grant of the lease. For granting a lease to the plaintiffs under those conditions, the defendant took the Rs. 2,000 in addition to the rent. Therefore, the payment is within the contemplation of sub-section (1) of section 9 of the Act. It was made after the first day of July 1919. Therefore, it is recoverable by the tenants who made the payment. The defence has been put somewhat ingeniously, but the real thing is as I have stated above. If any of these agreements were made subsequently, the result of the case might have been different.

In my judgment the lower Court was right. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 30th August 1921.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that it has abated. The facts are that two of the respondents, Bhagwat Pande and Chhotkan Pande, are dead and that no steps have been taken to bring their legal representatives on the record. As they admittedly died prior to 1st June last there is no doubt that the appeal has abated against them. The respondent contends, however, that under the circumstances of the case the appeal has abated against all the respondents. Chhotakan Pande was plaintiff No. 13 in the original array of parties and was No. 19 in the list of respondents in this Court. Bhagwat, son of Harihar Pande, is No. 7 in the list of plaintiffs-respondents attached to the memorandum of appeal. As a matter of fact, no such name appears either in the plaint or in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court and a comparison of the names in the plaint with those in the memorandum of appeal to this Court goes to show that this name has been written by mistake for that of Hanwant Pande, son of Sheoamber Pande. The name of the latter does not appear anywhere in the array of parties to the appeal.

The decree declaring them to be owners in possession of the plots in suit has been given to the plaintiffs jointly against the defendants jointly. The plaintiffs are Zemindars of one village, Bitni Khurd, and the defendants Zemindars of another village, Dippur, and the dispute was in which of these two villages the lands in suit fall. The appellant relies on the language of clause (3) of r. 4 of O. XXII, Civil Procedure Code. That rule says that where no application to bring the legal representatives on the record is made within limitation the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. By rule 11 of the same Order the word defendant includes a respondent. There is, however, authority for the view that, notwithstanding the wording of this rule, where a joint decree has been given in favour of the respondents the entire appeal fails if the appellant fails to make some of the respondents a party. This has been followed by the Patna High Court in Tej Narain Sahu v. Dal Ram Sahu (1). This was held in Basir Shekh v. Fazle Karim Biswas (2) where the defendants were appealing against a decree for joint possession and failed to serve notices of appeal on two of the plaintiffs-respondents. It was also held in Monmohan Panday v. Bidhu Bhusan Ray Chowdhury (3) a case in which the legal representatives of one of the co-proprietors of a firm were not brought on the record. Jamna v. Sarjit (4) [this case has been followed in the later case of Sardari Lal v. Ram Lal (5)], is another case exactly on all fours with the present in which the proprietors of a village had obtained a joint declaratory decree declaring their interest in the land in dispute. The same view was taken in another case of a declaratory decree, Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath (6), in which the whole case-law on the subject is reviewed. The ground of decision was that, although O. XXII, r. 4, only provides for the appeal abating as against the deceased respondent, the result of its abating against him may be in certain cases that the appeal has thereafter become imperfectly constituted, so that the appellant can no longer invite the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy. The representatives of the deceased decree-holders against whom the appeal has abated, have obtained an unassailable decree declaring that they, jointly with the other decree-holders, are proprietors in possession of the suit land. If the appeal were allowed as against the other decree-holders the result would be two contrary declarations, one declaraing that the proprietors of the respondents' village are entitled to and in possession of the land in question, and the other declaring that they are not so entitled and in possession. It has been held in these cases that this is a state of things which the law does not contemplate and which cannot be allowed. That it would result in very serious inconveniences in practice is self-evident.

It has been suggested on behalf of the appellants that I should adjourn the case to give the appellants an opportunity of ascertaining and stating by affidavit whether there are any heirs of Chhotkan Pande. This is not a request which can be accepted.

(1) 69 Ind. Cas. 624; 1 Pat. 699; (1922) A. I. R. (Pat.) 606; 4 P. L. T. 170; (1923) Pat. 207.
(2) 28 Ind. Cas. 703; 19 C. W. N. 290.
(3) 48 Ind. Cas. 309; 28 C. L. J. 268.
(4) 52 Ind. Cas. 510; 67 P. R. 1919; 90 P. L. R. 1919.
(6) 54 Ind. Cas. 822; 30 C. L. J. 217; 24 C. W. N. 44.

In the first place, it was for the appellants to bring the legal representatives on the record and they have not done so. In the second place, there must be some legal representatives even if it be, in the last resort, the Crown. This is not a case of an undivided Hindu joint family in which the right passess by survivorship. It is a case of an undivided Zemindari village in which the proprietors are tenants-in-common. For the reasons already given, I hold that the entire appeal has abated and I accordingly dismiss it with costs in favour of the answering respondents.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 264—Partnership, dissolution of, notified in public press—Retiring partner, liability of.

The mere publication of a notice of dissolution of a partnership in the public press is not sufficient to relieve a retiring partner from liability for goods supplied to the firm by persons having old dealings with the same.

Civil revision against a decree of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, passed in Civil Regular No. 999 of 1922.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Lentaigne, McDonnell and Clifton, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Respondents sued petitioner and one Solomon in the Small Cause Court to recover the price of goods sold and delivered.

The plaint set out that the defendants had been partners with one Sassoon in a firm known as the Sassoon Automobile & Taxi Company and that the goods were supplied to the firm in October 1921.

Solomon did not defend the suit.

Petitioner said that he retired from the partnership on the 28th of June 1921 and had no concern with its subsequent transactions. He denied respondents' allegation that they had no notice of his having left the firm.

The learned Judge in the Small Cause Court held that petitioner was liable, apparently on the ground that it was not proved that public notice of the dissolution of the partnership had been given.

No appeal lies, but peititioner asks me to interfere in revision on the ground that the learned Judge ought to have held it proved that the public notice required by section 264 of the Contract Act had been given.

I have read the lower Court's proceedings and heard the learned Advocates.

The case does not seem to have been taken very seriously in the lower Court by either party, probably because the amount in dispute was comparatively trivial and the evidence produced by both sides seems to have been about equally meagre. But even if I held that petitioner proved the publication of the advertisement which he produced, I do not think that it would help him. In a similar suit brought by another firm against the same defendants, petitioner put in the same defence as in this case and the Court, following the case of Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (1), held that in the case of old customers of a firm, as the respondents in this case were, the mere publication of a notice of dissolution in the public press was not sufficient to relieve a retiring partner from liability. That case also came before the Chief Court in revision and the learned Judge who dealt with it said that he was not prepared to differ from the view of the law taken by the Calcutta High Court and dismissed the application.

I, too, am of opinion that the ruling in the Calcutta case is good law, and I see no reason to interfere.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Where no application is made within time to bring upon the record the representatives of a deceased plaintiff, the suit abates automatically, and an application for substitution made thereafter must necessarily be considered as an application under O. Petition for revision of an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 8th February 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Karnal, dated the 23rd November 1922.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision has arisen are shortly these. On the 22nd of March 1921 one Hans Ram brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 1,020 against Badlu, petitioner, in the Court of Lala Gulwant Rai, Senior Subordinate Judge of Karnal. On the 19th of March 1922, while the suit was pending, Hans Ram was murdered and shortly after Badlu was arrested on the charge of murder and committed to the Sessions to take his trial under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. He was eventually acquitted by the Sessions Judge. On the 27th of July 1922 Musammat Narain, the widow of Hans Ram, made an application to the effect that she should be brought on the record in place of her deceased husband. The Senior Subordinate Judge rejected this application as barred by time under Act XXVI of 1920. An appeal was preferred against this decision to the District Judge of Karnal who set aside the abatement, holding that under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act there was sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation.

The defendant has now come up in revision to this Court and it has been argued on his behalf that no appeal lay to the District Judge from an order rejecting the respondent's application to bring the legal representative of the deceased on the record and that the order passed by him on appeal was consequently without jurisdiction. In my opinion this contention has no force and must be overruled. The application made by Musammat Naraini on the 27th of July 1922 for substitution of her name in place of her deceased husband was in substance an application for setting aside the abatement under O. XXII, r. 9 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order passed on her application was appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (k), of the Code of Civil Procedure. No application having been made within time to bring upon the record the representative of the deceased plaintiff, the suit abated automatically and the application for substitution made after the expiry of the prescribed period must necessarily be considered an application under O. XXII, r. 9 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure vide Lachmi Narain v. Muhammad Yusuf (1), Arur Singh v. Todar Mal (2) and Chuni Lal v. Kala Khan (3).

I do not see any force in this petition and I dismiss it with costs.

Special second civil appeal against a decree of the Divisional Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Appeal No. 68 of 1921.

Mr. Surty, for the Appellants.

Mr. Keith, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs sued for damages for loss of paddy due to the sinking of the sampan hired from defendants.

The sampan was sunk at night whilst moored.

Plaintiffs' case was that that the sinking was due to want of proper precautions on the part of third defendant and his man in charge of the sampan. The defence was that the wreck was due to overloading made under protest under the instructions of plaintiffs' representative.

The Trial Court found that the sampan was in fact overloaded but was not satisfied that the sinking was due to this fact. The Judge came to the conclusion that no one was to blame for the sinking which he held to be an accident and being unable to assign any other reason fell back upon the act of God.

The Divisional Court found that, as a matter of fact, the sampan was loaded in excess of her normal carrying capacity but agreed with the Trial Court that it was not proved that overloading was responsible for loss. On the evidence it came to the conclusion that that accident was due to the sampan being moored too close to the bank in consequence of which it stranded, took a list and shipped water when the tide rose.

I think there is no reasonable doubt that this is the correct explanation and it seems clear that the boatmen did not take sufficient precaution and were probably both asleep when the water first obtained access to the sampan. The burden of proving that he took as much care of the goods entrusted as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances lies on the bailees. For this there is ample authority. I need only quote one, Trustees of the Harbour, Madras v. Best & Co. (1).

On the evidence, defendants failed to prove that they took reasonable precautions.

There was a fresh breeze blowing but there was no apparent reason why the sampan, if properly moored and due precaution taken, should have been swamped.

The inference is that there was a lack of care on the part of the boatmen.

It is obvious the loss cannot be atrributed to the act of God and apparently the Trial Court only gave this as the cause because it was unable to understand how the accident happened. Had the Judge realised that the burden of proof was on the defendants he would probably have come to a different conclusion.

I agree with the learned Divisional Judge that all the defendants are liable. It is not necessary to re-state his reason, which I accept.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by manager—Benefit of estate—Mortgage to satisfy pre-emption decree, whether binding.

avert distress of the family ; yet the Hindu Law, as administered by the Courts in British India, does give effect to the doctrine of the benefit to the family.

Nathu v. Kundan Lal, 8 Ind. Cas. 836; 33 A. 242; 7 A. L. J. 1182, relied on.

A mortgage executed by a Hindu manager to satisfy a pre-emption decree, being for a family benefit, is binding on the family.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 22nd July 1921.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Tewari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point raised in this case is a very simple one and under the strict rule of Hindu Law the decision would have been in favour of the appellants. It appears that the plaintiff-respondent sued for foreclosure of a mortgage which had been executed for payment of a pre-emption decree. The sons of one of the mortgagors were also impleaded and their defence was that the mortgage-bond was not for consideration and at any rate was not for legal necessity. The Munsif held that consideration had passed but that the pre-emption decree was not satisfied by the mortgage-money and, therefore, he passed a decree against the pre-empted property exempting from liability the ancestral property charged in the mortgage. The plaintiffs appealed and the defendants put in cross-objections. The lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the mortgage went to satisfy the pre-emption decree and that the loan was for the benefit of the estate and decreed the claim against the whole property mortgaged. The defendants come here in second appeal. As I have already stated above, there is no rule of Hindu Law which warrants the manager of a joint Hindu family to alienate property for what is called the benefit of the estate. The only warrant for a valid transfer by a member of a joint Hindu family is to avert distress of the family. However, as I have said above, the doctrine of the benefit of the family has also been introduced in the Hindu Law, and having regard to the case of Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1) which is a decision of a Division Bench by which I am bound, I must hold that the mortgage in the present case was executed for the benefit of the family and was as such binding on the family. In this view the decree of the lower Appellate Court was a correct decree. I confirm it and dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. I extend the time for payment to six months from this date. The decree of this Court will only be drawn up in case the respondents make good the deficiency in Court-fees for the Court below. For this purpose I allow the learned Vakil for the respondents one month's time.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 164—Co-sharers—Suit for profits—Gross rental—Arrears, whether can be allowed—Compensation paid in Land Acquisition proceedings, whether recoverable.

In a suit for profits against a lambardar it was found that the amount of arrears was probably large, the village was canal irrigated, the bulk of the tenants were occupancy tenants, and the defendant had not filed proper and correct accounts. The Court passed a decree allowing profits on the basis of gross rental:

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the decree was a proper one.

Where, in a suit for profits against a lambardar, the Court gives a decree on the basis of gross rental, it cannot allow in addition any sums collected on account of arrears of previous years.

A co-sharer cannot in a suit for profits, recover his share of the compensation paid to the lambardar under the Land Acquisition Act, in respect of the acquisition of a plot of land, as the amount of compensation cannot properly be treated as sewai income.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 21st of November 1921.

PANDURANG v. KISHAN.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for profits. The appellant is the defendant lambardar. Two points have been pressed on his behalf.

The first is, whether a decree should have been given on gross rental or on recorded collections. The lower Appellate Court finds that the amount of arrears shown is probably large, that the village is canal irrigated, that the bulk of the tenants are occupancy tenants and that the defendant has not filed proper accounts and such accounts as he has filed are clearly and admittedly wrong. On these findings it is impossible to disturb the lower Court's decree allowing profits on the basis of gross rental.

The second point pressed is, that there is an obvious arithemetical mistake in the judgment in reference to the rent of khudkasht land. The learned Judge says that on the basis of the patwari's rates, which he accepts, the rent of khudkasht land comes to Rs. 464 but in the calculation which he has given just below he has substituted the figure 958. It is practically admitted that a mistake has been made and we allow this plea and reduce the decretal amount by substituting Rs. 464 for Rs. 958 as the khudkasht rental.

Cross-objections have been filed by the plaintiff-respondent and are pressed on two points. The first is, that the lower Court, following a published ruling of this Court to which one of us was a party, has held that when it gives a decree on the basis of gross rental it cannot allow in addition any sums collected on account of arrears of previous years.

This proposition has been held in two Bench rulings of this Court and we are not prepared to dissent from it in the present case.

The other point relates to a small amount of Rs. 81-4-0 received from Government as compensation for a small area acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The amount instead of being paid to all the proprietors was for some reasons paid to the lambardar who apparently has not given the plaintiff his share. Objection was taken in the lower Court that this could not properly be treated as sewai income recoverable in a profits suit under the Tenancy Act. As a matter of law, this contention appears to us well founded. The result is, that the appeal is allowed in regard to rent of khudkasht land to the extent indicated above but is otherwise dismissed.

We allow no costs to the appellant as he might have obtained amendment of the decree on the only point on which his appeal succeeded by applying to the Court below. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Promissory-note—Material alteration—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 87.

In suits for bond-debts brought on the basis of altered documents the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed. He cannot recover even the amount of which receipt is admitted by the defendant. A material alteration destroys the right of action on the document.

Civil revision against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Akola, dated the 29th April 1922.

Messrs. W. A. Forbes and A. V. Khare, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued on a simple money-bond, dated 15th April 1918, for Rs. 100 and interest and also on a pro-note. The claim on the pro-note has been decreed while that on the bond has been dismissed on the ground that the bond was originally executed for Rs. 70 and that it has been materially altered when in the plaintiff's possession, altered to a bond of Rs. 100. There seems to me good reasons for the Small Cause Court's decis on that an alteration in the bond had been made. The alteration as to Rs. 100 and the word 'Shambhar' is apparent to the naked eye. There is the defendant's own statement corroborated by one attesting w tness, that Rs. 70 only were advanced on the document and the other attesting w tness, one Bapu Ganaji, who appears for the plaintiff and states that the bond was for Rs. 100, wrote a letter during the pendency of the suit to the Chairman of the Co-operative Credit Society, Shelu Vetal, stat ng that this bond, dated 15th April 1918, was for Rs. 70. I accept as correct the finding that after execution there has been a material alteration in the document.

The question awaiting my decision is, whether despite this fact, the defendant having admitted receipt of Rs. 70, a decree should not pass for that sum with interest against him. It is settled law that in suits for bond-debts brought on the basis of altered documents the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed. A material alteration destroys the right of action on the document. The Court, in Sonajee Mali v. Uttamchand Bania (1), held that any mater al alteration made in a written instrument after its execution and without the privity of the party to be affected by it is fatal to its validity and the same rule of law was enunciated in Ganpat v. Ramkrishna Puri (2). The same view seems to have been taken in the H gh Courts: see Sitaram Krishna v. Daji Devaji (3), Ganga Ram v. Chandan Singh (4), Christacharlu v. Karibasayya (5), Oodeychand Boodaji v. Bhaskar Jagonnath (6), Harendra Lal Roy v. Uma Charan Ghosh (7), Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar Chandra (8), Amirtham Pillai v. Nanjah Gounden (9), and Lakshmammal v. Narasimharaghava Iyengar (10).

I, therefore, holdthat the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on the altered bond. This application for revision fails and is dismissed with costs. The applicant will pay the non-applicant's costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 15.

Court-fees—Mortgage-decree—Application for personal decree—Appeal—Court-fees payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6.

A mortgage-decree contained no provision for the recovery of the balance of the decretal amount, after the sale of the mortgaged properties, from the debtor. After the sale of the properties the decree-holder made an application under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, for a personal decree against the mortgagor for the balance of the decretal amount which had been ascertained as a result of the realisation by the sale, and the application was granted. The judgment-debtor appealed:

Held, that the memo. of appeal required an ad valorem Court-fee stamp on the amount in respect of which a personal decree had been made against the appellant.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 13th March 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

OFFICE REPORT.—The case out of which this appeal has arisen was not at all concerned with execution proceedings but with an application under

O. XXXIV, r. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure praying for a simple money-decree for Rs. 874-10-5 in favour of the petitioners, Sita Ram Misir and Raj Ballan Misir. The Trial Court having allowed the petition ordered the decree to be prepared as prayed. Bindhiachal Rai and Mahendra Rai, opposite parties, then went in appeal to the lower Appellate Court but that Court, too, upholding the decree of the First Court dismissed the appeal. Thereupon the same gentlemen preferred this second appeal valuing it at Rs. 874-10-5 but paying a Court-fee of Rs. 2 only treating it as an execution second appeal. The facts given above clearly show that it cannot be treated as an execution second appeal but as a regualar second appeal and Court-fee payable should be ad valorem on the amount claimed, Rs. 874-10-5, which comes to Rs. 66. In both the Appellate Courts, therefore, the Court-fee payable was Rs. 132 but annas eight having been paid in lower Appellate Court and Rs. 2 here, in all Rs. 2-8-0, there is a deficiency of Rs. 129-8-0 payable by appellants for this and for the lower Appellate Court.

REEERRING ORDER.

Ryves, J.—After the appeal was filed a note was made by the Taxing Officer of the Court that there was a deficiency in the Court-fees payable both in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court. This note was shown to the learned Counsel for the appellants and signed by him on the 13th of December 1922. The deficiency in the Court-fees payable to this Court was made good but on the matter being laid before Mr. Justice Daniels on the 10th of January 1923 the learned Counsel for the appellant stated that he would contest the alleged deficiency in the Court-fees paid in the lower Court at the hearing of the appeal. It seems to me that under rule 10 of the Rules of this Court of 18th January 1898 it is not open now to the learned Counsel to dispute the accuracy of the Taxing Officer's report. This matter seems to me of importance and, as far as I know, has not been previously decided. I think it is of sufficient importance to lay before a Bench of two Judges. I direct accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—We think that, having regard to the fact that the final decree of November 1915 contained no provision for payment of the balance and for the recovery of such balance from the debtor, the mortgagee was driven to make an application under O. XXXIV, r. 6. The position, no doubt, was a difficult one but we think that we ought to look at the substance, and an application under O. XXXIV, r. 6, was in substance an application for a personal decree of the balance which had been ascertained as a result of the realisation by the sale. That amount could not be finally ascertained until the sale had been confirmed. The view that the Court below took on the matter of limitation, therefore, was right and the view that our Stamp Reporter took that this was a regular appeal was also right. The appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

We exempt the respondent from any liability under which he may otherwise be for payment of the deficiency in the Court below.

The Court below must do its best to recover the deficiency from the appellant.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), s. 2 (12)—Registration of some members of Hindu joint family as Firm—Liability of family to super-tax on income of Firm.

The registration of some members of a Hindu joint family as a firm as defined under section 2 (12) of the Income Tax Act precludes the assessment of the family as an undivided family to super-tax on the income derived from the business of the firm unless the firm so registered is shown to carry on its business on behalf of and for the benefit of the joint family.

Members of a joint family may engage in trade in such a way as to embark on the adventure funds of the joint family property and pledge its credit to their undertaking. On the other hand, the members of a joint family may embark on a trade without involving the funds of the joint family in it, and, in that event, their profits as traders will be self-acquisitions and the losses would not be recoverable from the joint family property, the members who actually take part in the trade may enter into a deed of partnership between themselves, or between themselves and a stranger partner, which would regulate their dealings inter se and with the stranger partner, but need not necessarily affect the question as to whether and how far the property of the joint family is to be regarded as involved in the venture. It is not conclusive to show that some funds of the joint family were invested in the trade; because they might have been borrowed by the trading members as a loan of a definite sum to be re-paid by the trading firm just if it was a loan from strangers. [p. 24, col. 1.]

Case stated by the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Income-Tax, Madras, in his letter, dated the 5th August 1921; S. T. A. No. 27, under section 6 of the Super-Tax Act of 1920 read with section 51 of the Income-Tax Act of 1918 for a decision on the questions, "whether the registration of the Brothers as a firm as defined under section 2 (12) of Act VII of 1918 precludes the assessment of the family as undivided family to super-tax on the income derived from the business of this firm, and if not whether the mere constitution of partnership between some members of the family by a formal document precludes the assessment of the income of the partnership to super-tax as part of the income of the undivided family?"

The Government Pleader, for the Referring Officer.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and M. Subbaraya Aiyar, for the Assessees.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case stated by the Chief Commissioner of Income-Tax to the High Court under section 51 of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918 read with section 6 of the Super Tax Act 1920. The question for decision is whether the assessees who are the registered firm of M. Doraiswamy Aiyangar & Bros., are assessable to super-tax as an undivided Hindu family and the specific questions put to us are as follows:—

(1) Does the registration of the brothers as a firm as defined under section 2 (12) of Act VII of 1918 preclude the assessment of the family as an undivided family to super-tax or the income derived from the business of this firm ?

(2) If not, does the mere constitution of a partnership between some members of the family by a formal document preclude the assessment of the income of the partnership to super-tax as part of the income of the undivided family?

When this case first came before us, we thought it necessary to have more information than was afforded to us by the original case stated and, therefore, referred the case back for a finding of fact as to whether the original capital of the firm was wholly or in part derived from joint family funds. The answer to that is to be found in the Commissioner's letter dated the 5th August 1922, the concluding paragraph of which runs as follows:—

"On the whole, no adequate evidence has been adduced which would enable one to record a finding as a fact whether the original capital of the firm was wholly or in part derived from joint family funds."

To that is appended the following statement:—

"It can only be inferred from the conduct of the assessees and all the circumstances of the case that appellants intended to trade as a joint family and did trade as such."

We desire to say with regard to this last statement that it is in no way relevant to anything that we referred back to the Commissioner and that we decline to treat it as a finding of fact, by which we are bound in framing our answer to the questions referred to us. It appears to us to be a deduction of law from known circumstances rather than a finding of fact but, in any event, we disregard it as being in no way called for in connection with the matter that has been referred. In any event, it is vitiated by the laxity of reasoning which led up to and is evidenced by the language in paragraph (3) of the same document in which it is said that "the four brothers practically form the joint family." A joint family consists of certain definite persons and a given individual must either be a member of it or not. The general legal position appears to us to be beyond doubt. Members of a joint family may engage in trade in such a way as to embark on the adventure funds of the joint family and pledge its credit to their undertaking. On the other hand, the members of a joint family may embark on a trade without involving the funds of the joint family in it, and in that event, their profits as traders would be self-acquisitions and the losses would not be recoverable from the joint family property. The members who actually take part in the trade may enter into a deed of partnership between themselves or between themselves and a stranger partner, which, of course, would regulate their dealings inter se and with the stranger partner but need not necessarily affect the question as to whether and how far the property of the joint family is to be regarded as involved in the adventure. It is not conclusive to show that some funds of the joint family were invested in the trade, because they might have been borrowed by the trading members as a loan of a definite sum to be re-paid by the trading firm just as if it was a loan from strangers. In the present case the accounts appear to show that such a course has been pursued here and that the amounts advanced by Mr. M. Ananthachariar, the father of the assessees, and apparently the manager of the joint family of which they are all admittedly members, were treated as a mere loan for the purpose of the business to be re-paid with interest in the ordinary way and not as an indication that the business was conducted as a joint family business. But that is a question of fact and inference which is primarily at least for the determination of the Commissioner and not of this Court. We, therefore, answer the questions put to us in the only way we can answer them on the materials before us.

(1) Yes, unless the firm so registered has been shown to carry on its business on behalf of and for the benefit of the joint family.

(2) The answer is in accordance with the preceding answer.

The mere constitution of a partnership between some members of the family will not preclude the assessment in cases where the partnership is conducted on behalf of and for the benefit of the joint family.

As we have been unable on the materials before us to give a final determination of the rights of the parties we make no order as to costs.

U.P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 23 (e)—Municipal Election—Withdrawal of candidate after opening but before close of Poll—Declaration of election of rival candidate.

A candidate for election as a member of a Municipal Board can withdraw before the time for polling arrives, and can also do so during the polling as also after he is elected. [p. 25, col. 2.]

If out of two candidates for one seat one withdraws after the Poll opens and before the time comes for it to close, it is legal for the Returning Officer to close the Poll and declare the one remaining candidate to have been duly elected. It is not necessary that the Poll should remain open, and that in the end the Returning Officer should declare the election of the remaining candidate. [p. 25, col. 2.]

Reference made by the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 27th April 1923.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference to the High Court under O. XLVI of the Code of Civil Procedure read with section 23 (e) of the Municipalities Act, II of 1916. In Ward No. 4 of the Fatehgarh Municipal Elections five candidates were nominated for the Moslem Constituency. Three of them withdrew before the polling day. On that day two candidates were opposed to each other by name Omrao Khan and Abdul Hamid. There being only one seat the Poll was duly opened and voters commenced to record their votes in favour of one or the other candidate. At some time whilst the polling was open and continuing, Omrao Khan went to the Returning Officer and told him that he no longer desired to contest the seat. Thereupon the Returning Officer, thinking that that was the determination of Omrao Khan, closed the Poll and declared that the one remaining candidate Abdul Hamid was duly elected to the one vacancy. It is suggested in the petition that the withdrawal of Omrao Khan was due to some political manœuvring: but, be that as it may, we can only deal with what were the facts relating to the procedure. The fact was that the Poll opened with two candidates for one vacancy, and before the time came for the Poll to close and votes to be counted and the Returning Officer to declare who was elected, before that time arrived there was only one candidate and that one candidate a candidate for the one vacancy. We think, in the circumstances, the Returning Officer acted with propriety and common sense and that he acted quite reasonably. Rule 36 (1) of the Municipal Rules and by-laws of this particular Municipality, provide that a Poll shall be taken on the day for the election when the number of duly nominated candidates who are entered in the schedule and who have not withdrawn their candidature before the time fixed for the Poll exceeds that of the vacancies. When you have got duly nominated candidates in excess of vacancies you have got to have an election. Rule 36 (2) provides if the number of such candidates is equal to the number of vacancies, all such candidates shall be deemed to be elected. Therefore, if there are three candidates and three vacancies, all such candidates shall be deemed to be elected; similarly two, similarly one. Now, it is true that in terms rule 36 (2) does not contemplate, nor is there any where any provision which contemplates, the withdrawal of a candidate during the few hours during which the polling is in progress; but by analogy to the duties of the Returning Officer before the opening of the Poll, we have no doubt that it was the proper course for the Returning Officer to act in conformity with rule 36 (2) and he finding only one candidate left for the one vacancy, to declare that man duly elected.

Dr. Sen, voicing no doubt to some extent the suggestion thrown out by the Commissioner, said that the Poll ought to remain open and in the end the Returning Officer should declare the remaining candidate duly elected. The difficulty about that is that if the poll remains open, votes are being recorded for a candidate who has withdrawn his candidature and is no longer one of the contestants. It is quite clear that just as a candidate can withdraw before the time for polling arrives, so he can withdraw during the polling, so also can he withdraw as soon as he is elected or he can withdraw at any time after his election. A man does not bind himself that he will not withdraw either as a candidate or as a member of a Municipality. He is entitled to withdraw at any moment. In the circumstances, we are of opinion that the Returning Officer acted in the circumstances legally and properly and rightly in accordance with his duties and dealt with the matter in a proper way. We are of opinion that his declaration that Abdul Hamid was duly elected was a proper decision and in accordance with the law. This is our answer to the Reference. The costs of this hearing, including fees actualy certified by Counsel on both sides, will be dealt with by the Commissioner in his discretion in disposing of the Election Petition.

The principle applicable to prescription by the public is the same as that recognised in connection with prescriptions for easements or profits a prendre. [p. 27, col. 1.]

As regards prescription of this kind the thing to be established is dedication, not user. What can be proved is that the public has acquired an easement or a profits a prendre by a grant, or dedication, actual, if direct evidence of one is available, or to be presumed, in case such evidence is not available; and in the latter alternative evidence of enjoyment will be relevant and may go far towards supporting the inference that a grant or dedication, which is lost, at some time was made. [p 27, col. 1.]

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The property in dispute in this case is a small piece of vacant ground outside the boundary wall of the plaintiff's premises, those premises having access to it and the adjoining road by a gate.

The suit by plaintiff is for a declaration of his right to the property outside his boundary wall. The Government registered the land as poramboke at the recent Survey; and he claims it as his jenm property. Issues were framed as to the sustainability of the suit for mere declaration, the defendant, the Secretary of State, denying the plaintiff's possession; as to the ownership of the property, and as to the title set up by Government by adverse possession.

The first objection to the lower Appellate Court's judgment is, that it contains no distinct finding as to title its discussion of the evidence being confined to a conclusion that the measurements in the plaintiff's documents could not be accurate, although the question whether they could be trusted as to any part of the disputed land was left open. If the measurements could not be trusted, the lower Appellate Court should have considered whether it could not act on the principle that title goes with possession and it should have decided whether the plaintiff had discharged the burden of proof, which in view of his failure to establish his alleged right in connection with the Survey, was, it is not disputed, on him. That, however, matters comparatively little. For the lower Appellate Court has in fact found in favour of the defendant's possession and against that of the plaintiff in connection with the plea of prescription and it would presumably have, if it had looked at the case in the manner suggested, applied that finding to support a conclusion in favour of the defendant's title and also against the plaintiff's right to sue only for a declaration.

Its decision on prescription is based on findings that first the public has prescribed, and second, the defendant, Secretary of State, represents the public and can have the benefit of its prescription.

As regards the first of these points, the lower Appellate Court's treatment of the evidence is summary. It mentions only that the land has been used as a cart stand and that the public has occupied it freely, the plaintiff's user by taking goods to his gateway being no more than any member of the public might have done. The case may really be stronger than appears from the judgment. In fact we have been shown evidence that there was once a pound on the site. But the stronger objections to the lower Appellate Court's findings are that if the public can prescribe at all, a piont which we return to, the lower Appellate Court has not referred to any evidence, that those who used the land did so on behalf of the public and not in their individual capacity or to any exclusion of the plaintiff, or anything inconsistent with the continuance of his ownership, subject to a right against him of the description referred to in section 2 (b) of the Easements Act, V of 1882. And a right of that description is not what defendant claimed, and, if it were claimed, it could be no defence to the suit. These distinctions are exemplified by Lutchmeeput Singh v. Sadaulla Nushyo(1), where, however, the form of the plaint prayer admitted of enquiry into the existence of such a right as a defence.

In fact, however, the lower Appellate Court and the parties were wrong in considering the possibility of prescription by the public at all. For the public cannot prescribe. No doubt, no authority as regards prescription by it for ownership has been produced. But the principle applicable to such prescription will be the same as that recognised in connection with prescription for easements or profits a prendre. As regards prescriptions of the latter kind authority is clear: Smith v. Andrews (2) and Attorney-General v. Esher Linoleum Co., Ltd. (3), and this position is assumed in the Indian case last mentioned. As was said, in the second English case "it is necessary to remember that the thing to be established is dedication, not user. What can be proved is that the public has acquired an easement or a profits a prendre by a grant, or dedication, actual, if direct evidence of one is available, or to be presumed in case such evidence is not; and in the latter evidence of enjoyment will be relevant and may go far towards supporting the inference that a grant or dedication, which is lost, at some time was made." The lower Appellate Court must at the re-hearing, which we are about to direct, bear this in mind. It will also bear in mind the necessity for proof that the dedication, if any, was to the public at large and not to any section of it. Poole v. Huskinson (4) and Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan v. Municipal Committee of Karnal City (5).

There will still, however, be one more question for the lower Appellate Court to consider. In its judgment it has assumed that acquisition of a right by the public will be equivalent to its acquisition by the Secretary of State. That case was not put forward in the written statement and its sustainability is not obvious. For we know that the public, or a portion of it, sometimes prescribes or attempts to prescribe against Government. The lower Appellate Court has given no particular reasons for this part of its decision, and at the re-hearing we must ask it to consider the matter more fully, if its other findings at the re-hearing render it necessary.

The lower Appellate Court has misconceived the law at every point. We set aside its decision and remand the appeal for re-admission and re-hearing in the light of the foregoing. Costs to date here and in the lower Appellate Court will be costs in the cause and will be provided for in its decree.

Stamp value on the appeal memorandum in this Court will be refunded on application.

These appeals came on for hearing on the 20th, 21st, 24th and 25th July 1922, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry dismissing their suit for a declaration "that the plaint properties belong to their Thavazhi and that the decrees of the Temporary Sub-Court of Tellicherry in Original Suit No. 18 of 1914 and of the High Court of Judicature at Madras in Appeal No. 96 of 1916, preferred therefrom, are not binding on the Vazhayil Thavazhi" and for incidental reliefs. The plaintiffs' case is that they and defendants Nos. 41 to 60 are members of a Thavazhi, known as Oliyath Vazhayil Thavazhi, the first defendant is the Karnavan of the Tarwad of which the plaintiffs' Thavazhi is a branch, the defendants Nos. 1 to 37 are members of the Tarwad, the plaint properties are the Puthravagasam properties of the Oliyath Vazhayil Thavazhi, the other members of the Tarwad have no interest in the properties and that the first defendant as Karnavan of the Tarwad is not entitled to be in, or to claim possession of, them. The first defendant contends that the properties belong to the Tarwad, and they never were the Puthravagasam properties of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi, that the suit is barred by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 18 of 1914, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief. The other defendants who are not members of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi raise the same contentions as those of the first defendant.

Plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 41 to 60 are the descendants of one Nangomma. She has three sons and two daughters, (1) Pokker, (2) Kunhamed, (3) Kunhayan, (4) Kunhacha and (5) Kunhama. Defendant No. 43 is the son of Kunhama. He is the Karnavan of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi. Nangomma had an elder sister, Achotti, whose descendants are defendants Nos. 1 to 37. Defendants Nos. 38 to 40 are the descendants of Nangoma's maternal aunt Valia Aliumma. The first defendant who is the Karnavan of the Tarwad is the great-grandson of Achotti. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' suit holding that although the present suit was not barred by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 18 of 1914 yet the plaintiffs failed to make out that the properties were the Puthravagasam properties of their Thavazhi and that though they were acquired by some of the descendants of Nangomma, yet they were not impressed with the character of Thavazhi properties, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal.

The first point for consideration is, whether the present suit is barred by reason of the decision in the said Original Suit No. 18 of 1914, which was brought by the first defendant herein as Karnavan of the Tarwad, for a declaration that a document executed by Koyamutti, the previous Karnavan, on 9th July 1909 in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 therein was not binding on the plaintiff or his Tarwad and for surrender of the properties to him by defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 filed a written statement in which, among other contentions, they stated that they were members of a Thavazhi and that the properties in their possession were the Puthravagasam properties of the Thavazhi and that the Karnavan of their Thavazhi should be made a party, that the properties having been given to them for maintenance by the Karnavan of their own Thavazhi they were entitled to be in possession of them and that, owing to their separation from the Tarwad long ago, there was no community of interest between the first defendant's Tarwad and their Thavazhi: The 43rd defendant herein was added as the 14th defendant to that suit in his capacity as Karnavan of the Vazhayil Thavazhi. He filed a written statement and, among other things, he contended that the properties in dispute were Puthravagasam properties of the Vazhayil Thavazhi, that Nangomma and her children had separated long ago from the Tarwad and the propeties having been acquired by the members of the Thavazhi became Puthravagasam properties to wich the Thavazhi alone was exclusively entitled, that he as Karnavan was entitled to be in possession of them and also of the income, and that the plaintiffs had no sort of right to any of the properties of the Thavazhi. The Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry held that the properties were not Puthravagasam properties of the Thavazhi but belonged to the Tarwad and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 should surrender possession to the plaintiffs. On appeal the late Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal of the defendants. It has been found by the Subordinate Judge who tried this suit that the conduct of that litigation was bona fide, and it is now conceded in appeal that it was so.

It is contended by Mr. Menon for the appellants that that decision in Original Suit 18 of 1914 is not res judicata as between plaintiffs and first defendant inasmuch as the plaintiff in that suit did not admit the existence of the Thavazhi. He further argues that though the matter now in dispute was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, yet that suit was not between the same parties inasmuch as the 14th defendant therein was only brought on record on the objection of the defendants, and the suit as framed was not against the Thavazhi as represented by its Karnavan. No doubt, in that suit the plaintiff sued for possession of certain properties from persons who, according to his contention, were not entitled to be in possession of them. But the defendants vehemently urged that the properties belonged exclusively to their Thavazhi and that the 14th defendant was its Karnavan and, therefore, was the proper person to represent the Thavazhi. It was on the objection of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 that the plaint was amended on 4th September 1914 and Olieth Pallikutti, the Karnavan of the Thavazhi, was added as the 14th defendant and he filed a written statement alleging among other things that the suit properties were Puthravagasam property of his Thavazhi that there was no community of interest between his Thavazhi and the Tarwad of which the plaintiff was Karnavan and that the rights, if any, of the Tarwad were barred by limitation and that the plaint properties had been given for maintenance to defendants Nos. 1 to 4 who were members of his Thavazhi and that he was, therefore, entitled to the income of the properties. It is difficult to appreciate the contention that the Thavazhi was not represented in that suit simply because the plaintiff ignored its existence when he filed his plaint though he joined issue with the defendants on the questions—whether there was a Thavazhi and whether the properties in dispute were the properties of the Thavazhi or of the Tarwad. It was held in Vasudevan v. Sakanran (1) that "a decree in a suit in which the Karnavan of a Nambudri Illom or a Marumakkattayam Tarwad is, in his representative capacity, joined as a defendant and which he honestly defends is binding on the other members of the family not actually made parties." The leading judgment in that case is that of Mr. Justice Shephard who observes at page 141: "Now it is conceded that, when a Karnavan sues on behalf of the family, he fully represents all its other members and an adjudication therein, if there is no fraud or collusion, is binding on the whole family [Subramanyan v. Gopala (2)]. It is obvious that in such cases it is not possible to maintain any other view. For the entire executive authority being exclusively vested in the Karnavan, it is not open to the party sued by him to raise any objection to the action on the ground of the non-joinder of the other members. Byathamma v. Avulla(3)"* * *"By parity of reasoning, then, it follows that a Karnavan can be sued on behalf of the family. It is difficult to see how this conclusion can be avoided, unless the argument of the defendant based on the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code were correct." It was contended in that suit that, under section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, all the members of the family should have been made parties. Under the old section 30, which was only an enabling section, it was not obligatory on the plaintiff to make all the members of a Tarwad parties to the suit. The learned Judge further observes: "There are instances, where even though the difficulty with reference to the application of the general rule has nothing to do with the fact that the persons interested are numerous, yet the law does allow, apart from Statute, certain persons to prosecute or defend suits in their representative capacity, e.g., Hindu widows with reference to reversioners; other persons having an estate analogous to that of a Hindu widow with reference to those entitled to take after such qualified owners, and so on. In the cases last mentioned the limited owners possess the representative capacity to sue or defend by virtue of their position. This, as already shown, is eminently true in the case of a Karnavan. Consequently, he does not require the aid of section 30 to be a representative, but has the inherent right to act as such, provided, of course, there is in the particular case no conflict between his own interest and that of the family" * * * "Therefore, unless there is shown in the words of Jessel, M. R., "fraud or collusion or anything of that sort or that the Court was cheated into believing that the case was fairly fought or fairly represented when in point of fact it was not," Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London v. Gellatly (4), a decision in a suit, defended by a Karnavan in his representative capacity, must be held to be binding upon all those represented by him." In Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. Taruck Chunder Bose (5) it was held by a Full Bench that "when once it is made clear that the self same right and title is substantially in issue in two suits, the precise form in which either suit was brought, or the fact that the plaintiff in the one case was the defendant in the other, became immaterial." In Meethala Veetil Kaitheri Kelu Nambiar v. Kaitheri Chathu Nambiar (6), it was held by a Bench of this Court, that if a matter be in issue under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is enough if the decision about it is necessary for the decree and it is not further necessary that there should be an express issue about it. In Original Suit No. 18 of 1914, Issue No. 4 "whether the plaint properties belong to the Olieth Tarwad as alleged by plaintiff or to the Olieth Vazhayil Thavazhi as alleged by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and 14, and whether there is such a Puthravagasam Thavazhi as alleged" was distinctly raised and Issue No. 7 "whether plaintiff is entitled to recover possession of the plaint properties" was also considered. It is difficult to see how it can be contended that in the previous suit the Thavazhi was not properly represented, and the question in issue in this suit was not distinctly raised. Mr. Menon's vehement contention that the suit which was brought was not against the Thavazhi and, therefore, the decision in that suit could not operate as res judicata has no foundatiion when it is remembered, that the defendants raised the question of the existence of the Thavazhi and had the Karnavan of the Thavazhi brought on record as the 14th defendant, and he honestly defended that suit by contending that the plaint properties were Puthravagasam properties of his Thavazhi and that, he was its Karnavan and, therefore, entitled to be put in possession of them, should the Court for any reason hold that the document under which defendants Nos. 1 to 4 held them should be set aside. Whatever may have been the frame of the suit when it was filed, defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and the 14th defendant were arrayed as appellants and the plaintiffs and the other defendants as respondents in the High Court, and it is impossible to contend that the plaintiffs' Thavazhi was not a party to the appeal in the face of the records of the Appellate Court. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's suit is barred by reason of the decision of the Temporary Sub-Court, Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 18 of 1914. The argument founded on the frame of the plaint cannot be urged against the Memorandum of Appeal to the High Court. The decision of the High Court in Appeal Suit No. 96 of 1916 on the points now in dispute is res judicata between plaintiffs and defendants.

The main contention on behalf of the appellants is, that the suit properties are Puthravagasam properties of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi, having been acquired by the sons of Nangomma with the help of funds furnished by their father Mayan Ali Nagha or by their mother Nangomma. It is further contended that even if the properties had been acquired by the sons of Nangomma without the help of the father's funds or the mother's funds, yet as the properties had been treated as the properties of the Thavazhi for a number of years they became the properties of the Thavazhi.

"It is unquestionably the Law of Malabar that all acquisitions of any member of a family undisposed of at his death form part of the family property and that they do not go to the nephews of the acquirer but fall, as all other property does, to the management of the eldest surviving male" Kallati Kunju Menon v. Palat Erracha Menon (7). It is also well-settled that the acquisitions with the help of the funds of the acquirer's own Thavazhi owning Puthravagasam properties, became the property of the Thavazhi and the Karnavan of the whole Tarwad cannot claim them in opposition to the Thavazhi. In order to succeed the plaintiffs have to make out

(1) the existence of a Thavazhi;

(2) (a) that the plaint properties were acquired with the help of Puthravagasam funds by the members of the Thavazhi;

(?) (b) or that though they were acquired without the help of Puthravagasam funds yet they were impressed with the character of Puthravagasam properties;

(2) (c) or that the Thavazhi acquired by prescription a title adverse to the Tarwad.

The plaintiffs' case is that the plaint properties were acquired by three brothers Pokker, Kunhamed, Kunhayan, the sons of Nangomma by Mayan Ali Nagha who was said to be the Captain of a Sailing Vessel and they must have acquired the properties with the help of the funds furnished by their father. A number of documents have been filed to support the plaintiffs' contention. But none of them proves that any funds of Mayan Ali Nagha were used by the brothers for acquiring the large fortune they left at their death. Exhibit K3 is a Puramkadam deed of 1862 executed by Palikkandi Nalliyil Ammad, to Olieth Pokker. In it there is a recital that the executant's Karnavan Palikkandi Kunhi Ahmad had demised the shop to Mayan Ali Nagha on Kanom rights. This document is challenged to be a forgery. Doubts as to its genuineness were expressed in the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Appeal No. 96 of 1916 and nothing has since transpired to remove those doubts. Exhibit K4 is a sale-deed, dated 8th April 1866, executed by Palikundi Nelliyil Ahmed and his younger brother to Olieth Kunhammed and in it there is a reference to the document in favour of Pokker. Granting that some property was acquired by Kunhammad in 1866 for Rs. 350 with the help of his father's funds, that fact alone will not help the plaintiffs unless they can show that the properties acquired at Cannanore were acquired with the help of the income or the corpus of the property conveyed under Exhibit K4. There is no such evidence on the record. It is next urged, that the funds in the hands of the mother Nangomma were utilized for acquiring the properties and reliance is placed on Exhibits B4, B3 and K1. Exhibit B4, dated 14th October 1830, is a sale-deed of Jan- mom right for Rs. 525 to Naugomma and Exhibit B3, dated 31st May 1856, is a sale-deed of another property to Nangomma for Rs. 775, Exhibit K1 is a sale-deed in favour of Nangomma, dated 4th January 1862 for Rs. 5,000 said to be taken in discharge of a debt-bond for the same amount in faovur of Kunhayan. By Exhibit K1 were conveyed the family house into which Nangomma and her children removed after the purchase. There is absolutely no evidence to show that any help was rendered to Pokker by Nangomma by supply of funds, whereas it is quite clear that Pokker began to acquire considerable properties so far back as 1849, vide Exhibit K21. It may be, that Pokker furnished funds for the purchase under Exhibit K1. It is easy to suppose that Pokker who began to make a large fortune wanted to put some property in the name of his mother. There is no evidence as to how Kunhayan came to lend such a large amount as Rs. 5,000 so far back as 1862. The properties conveyed under Exhibit K1 may be considered as a gift to the mother by a dutiful son who was in affluent circumstances.

It is next urged that at least for the last thirty years, i.e., since 1891, the members of the Thavazhi have been asserting adverse title to the properties and, therefore, the Karnavan and the other members of the Tarwad are barred by limitation from claiming any interest in the properties. In 1891 Olieth Achotti, a grand-daughter of Achotti, the elder sister of Nangomma, and the maternal aunt of the first defendant, brought a suit for maintenance against Kunhamad, Karnavan of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi. He as the eldest member of the whole Tarwad happened to be at that time the Karnavan of the Tarwad as well. That Suit No. 475 of 1891 was evidently intended to test the rights of the members of the Tarwad to share in the income of the properties in the hands of the members of the Thavazh . Exhibit K7 is the written statement of Kunhamad. Therein he contended that the properties were the separate earn ngs of h mself, of his elder brother Pokker and his younger brother Kunhayan who were dead at the time, having been acquired with the profits of the joint trade carried on by them at Cannanore with capital furnished by their father Mayan Ali Nagha, that the plaintiff and her Thavazhi were not entitled to be maintained out of the income of those properties. He further said that he was at least entitled to 1/3rd of the properties and that the rest 2/3rds had lapsed to the family of his Thavazhi. It is significant that he did not in that statement put forth the contention that they were Puthravagasam properties and that he was only entitled to be in possession of them as the Karnavan of the Thavazhi. He refused to act as guardian of the minor members of the Tarwad not belonging to his Thavazhi and on his objection the minor members were represented by the third defendant under the orders of the lower Court. The issues in that suit were: (1) "whether the parties are members of a joint Marumakattayam Tarwad having community of property?" (2) "Whether the defendants, i.e., the members of the Thavazhi, belong to a family or branch separated in interest from that of the remaining defendants?" There is evidence to show that the written statement, Exhibit K7, was drafted by very well, known legal practtioners quite familiar with Malabar Law and custom and it is not likely that if the properties were really Puthravagasam properties Kunhamad would not have mentioned that fact to the Vakils nor is it likely that they would not have questioned him about them if any materials had been placed before them to lead them to suspect that they might be Puthravagasam properties. His contention that he was entitled to 1/3rd of the properties as having jointly acquired with his two brothers is opposed to the contention that they were Puthravagasam properties. In 1891 there seem to have been a number of cases and in all of them the same contentions were put forward but till the year 1910 there is no document in evidence to show that any claim was distinctly put forward that they were Puthravagasam properties. It is next urged that the first defendant has made admissions that the Tarwad had no right to the properties and Exhibits K19 and K47 are relied on. The first defendant did not become a Karnavan till 1909 and any statement by him when he was only a junior Anandravan cannot be taken as an admission against the interests of the Tarwad. He had no authority to represent the Tarwad or to make admissions binding on the Tarwad. It is alleged that he had a motive for making certain admissions as in Exhibit K19. Whether such statements be true or false they cannot bind the Tarwad.

It is next urged that the Tarwad did not assert its title to the properties after 1891 when its title was denied by Kunhamad. It must be remembered that Kunhamad died in 1892 and Koyamutti, his nephew, succeeded to the Karnavanship of the Tarwad. He happened to be not only the eldest male member of the Thavazhi but also of the Tarwad. Koyamutti died in 1909. After his death the first defendant, who belongs to a different Thavazhi from that of the plaintiffs, became Karnavan and the moment he became Karnavan, he began to contest the right of the 43rd defendant and others to withhold the properties from him. There can be no adverse possession against the Thavazhi inasmuch as the members of Nangomma's Thavazhi were Karnavans from 1871 to 1909. Mr. Menon relies on Williams v. Pott (8), to show that a person could acquire by adverse possession a lesser title than he is entitled to. His contention is that Kunhamad and Koyamutti, by asserting that the properties in their possession were Puthravagasam properties, though they were Karnavans at that time, acquired by such assert on an adverse title to the Tarwad. No doubt, in law it is quite possible for a person entitled to a larger interest by asserting a title less than the one he is entitled to for the statutory period to acquire such title. But there is no evidence to show that Kunhamad and Koyamutti ever asserted that the plaint properties were Puthravagasam properties belonging only to their Thavazhi. Whenever occasion arose, they asserted that it was the self-acquisition of Pokker and his brothers and not that they were Puthravagasam properties. If they were self-acquisitions, the law is that on their death the Tarwad becomes entitled to them.

It is further urged that several properties were given for maintenance to various members of the plaintiffs' Thavazhi and the claim of the Tarwad is barred by limitation. It is unnecessary to consider this contention seriously, when it is remembered that the plaintiffs' Thavazhi furnished Karnavans for the Tarwad continuously from 1871 to 1909. Mr. Menon's contention is that he has only to show that the family had a nucleus of property in order to succeed in the suit. There is no authority for the position that the mere fact that the mother or the father or the Thavazhi was possessed of some funds, is sufficient to make out that acquisitions by the male members of the Thavazhi were impressed with the character of Thavazhi property. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the properties in dispute are Puthravagasam properties.

The next contention urged by Mr. Menon is that the Full Bench decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (9) is bad law and is opposed to the present consciousness of the people, and that we should re-open the question by referring this case for the opinion of a Full Bench. That decision was given in 1908, and for the last 14 years it has been held to be good law notwithstanding the doubt expressed as to its soundness by Judges quite familiar with the Malabar Law and Customs, namely, Sir Sankaran Nair, J., Miller, J., and Sundara Aiyar, J., The Madras High Court has held in Krishnan Nair v. Damodaran Nair (10) that the principle of the decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (9) did not apply to the self-acquisitions of a female member of a Tarwad which descend to her Thavazhi. It may be that the consciousness of the people is opposed to the principle laid down, namely, that the undisposed of separate property of a male member of a Malabar Tarwad becomes the property of the Tarwad. It may be that the Malayalee Community, which is one of the most progressive communities of Southern India, feels shackled by its peculair laws and customs which are archaic and antiquated and quite unsuited to its present advancement and enlightenment. However much one may sympathise with the present feelings of the community, it is not the province of a Judge to alter the law, however opposed it may be to the consciousness of the people. It is his duty to administer it as he finds it. I respectfully adopt the language of the learned Chief Justice in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (9): "I think this is a case in which we should act on the maxim stare decisis, and that if the law is to be altered it should be altered by the Legislature which can make due provision for the safeguarding of vested interests and existing titles." The decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (9) followed a decision of Mr. Justice Holloway in Kallati Kunju Menon v. Palat Erracha Menon (7), and seeing that the law has been uniform for the last 60 years it would not be proper to alter it by a judicial decision, when it could be done by an Act of the Legislature.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 4 and 6 to 34.

The connected Appeals Nos. 337 and 338 follow the decision in the main appeal and are dismissed with costs of first and third respondents in Appeal No. 337 and with costs of first respondent in Appeal No. 338.

THE AKYAB MUNICIPALITY—RESPONDENTS.

Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), ss. 51 (8), 63—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 56 (i)—Municipal Tax—Injunction.

Where a Notification of the imposition of a tax under the Burma Municipal Act has been published, a Civil Court is debarred from enquiring whether the tax has been legally imposed.

Municipal Committee v. Gurthi Lengayya S. J. L. B. 405, relied on.

A suit for an injunction to restrain a Municipality from imposing a tax under the Burma Municipal Act is not maintainable, but under section 63 of that Act an assessee has the right to object to the assessment before a Sub-Committee of the Municipality, and can claim a reference to the High Court on the question of his liability to, or the principle of, assessment.

Second appeals against the decree of the District Court, Akyab, in Civil Appeal No. 152 of 1920.

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ginwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the Akyab Municipalty from imposing a scavenging tax at the rate of 6 per cent. on the annual rental value of his house.

The Trial Court refused the injunction and the appeal was dismissed in the District Court. It is admitted that if the ruling of the Special Court in Municipal Committee v. Gurthi Lengayya (1) is sound law the suit was not maintainable. The Special Court held that, where Notification of the imposition of a tax under the Burma Municipal Act has been published a Civil Court is debarred from enquiring whether the tax has been legally imposed.

Section 51 (8) of the Act, which corresponds to section 45 (9) of the old Act, provides that a Notification of the imposition of a tax under this Act shall be conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. I see no reason to doubt the correctness of the view taken by the Special Court.

I would further point out that appellant had a remedy provided by the Act. Section 63 give him a right to object to the assessment before a Sub-Committee, and provides for an appeal from their decision to the Deputy Commissioner, as the case may be. He can also claim a reference to the Chief Court on the question of his liability to, or the principle of assessment.

Apart, therefore, from the terms of section 51 (6) of the Municipal Act, the Court would have to dismiss the suit for an injunction under section 56 (i) of the Specific Relief Act.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This suit was instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, by the President of the Dharmarakshana Sabha of Madras which is an Institution for the protection of religious institutions and by another person, who is the second plaintiff, for the removal of the defendants from the office of trustees of the temple of Sri Chennakeswara Swami in the village of Vodur in the Nellore District and for appointing new trustees and for drawing up a scheme for the efficient management of the temple. The plaint alleged 18 different breaches of trust against the defendants, but the controversy between the parties turned chiefly upon the ownership of certain items of immoveable property, Items Nos. 1 to 8. At the time of trial it was conceded that Items Nos. 1 to 8 and 3 to 5 were temple properties to which the defendants had no claim. In respect of items Nos. 6, 7 and 2 the question at issue was whether these items were the absolute property of the temple, being endowments granted by the Government in the name of the God or whether they were service inams in the name of the manager of the temple burdened with the trust of getting certain religious duties performed. I will proceed to deal with these items in the order in which they are taken in the lower Court's judgment.

Item No. 6, Thalimanicm Inam. Exhibits

C and C (1) which are proceedings of the Inam Deputy Collector and an inam title-deed respectively of the years 1860 and 1861 show that this inam was given to an individual named Papiah for making ornaments for the deity, that when Papiah died, the inam came into possession of his wife Lakshmakka who got a title-deed confirming the inam to her and her successors free of tax, that afterwards it was alienated to a Brahmin, K. Subbrayudu by name, and that the Deputy Collector recommended that the alienee might continue to enjoy the inam so long as the service was efficiently performed. In 1912 a title-deed was issued for this inam in favour of the first defendant, Exhibit VIII, and the first defendant made two statements in 1912 marked Exhibits Q and Q (1) declaring that he was rendering the service required by making jewels for the Devastanam and that the heirs of the former inamdar were not traceable. In his evidence at the time of trial the first defendant deposed that the service attached to this inam consisted of getting jewels made by the goldsmith and paying his wages, the jewels being for the adornment of the God, but the cost of materials for the jewels was being met out of the temple income. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion for some reason which he did not explain, that a trustee cannot hold a service inam land. This was not the opinion of the Government who granted the title-deed in the first defendant's favour. The learned Judge observes: "I must say that this land reverted to the temple and that it should be held as temple property subject to the management of trustees especially when Government have not chosen to take any steps for resuming this land. This is my finding on this point." The power of resumption of inams, however clearly lies in the hands of the Government. The Government has not yet resumed this land, but it will, no doubt do so if it finds at any time that the object of the grant has failed. While the discretion of exercising its power to resume the inam lies with the Government, the Court cannot make any direction, as the Subordinate Judge has done, that the inam should revert to the temple and that the trustee should manage it and treat it as property belonging to the temple.

Item No. 7:—It appears from the Inam Deputy Collector's proceedings, Exhibit E, that a tope of Iluppa trees once stood on this item and that the temple had the right to enjoy the oil derived from those trees. The Inam Deputy Collector recommended that the inam should be confirmed in the name of Peddi Reddi, the father of defendants, and Subba Reddi, on condition of paying one-fourth of the full assessment, as a personal inam. The first defendant stated that the land had been converted to wet and that there were no Iluppa trees now standing and the Judge has directed that one acre of this land in the possession of the second defence witness should be treated as the property of the temple as that witness admitted that he was enjoying that extent for doing the service of sweeping and making wicks for the lamps of the temple and other duties. There is no basis for a finding that any portion of the land in this item belonged to the temple, for the temple was only entitled to the usufruct of the Iluppa trees which no longer exist. The only order that can be made is that the holder of the land should continue to enjoy it, subject to the trust of supplying the temple with oil according to mamool.

Item No. 2.—This is the most important item as it covers a wide extent of land. The first defendant has made a statement as to the loss of the original title-deeds which he alleges were stolen by the second plaintiff when he was employed under him as a clerk and there is no particular reason for disbelieving that statement which stands uncontradicted by any evidence on the plaintiff's side. Exhibits XXXI and XXXI-A purport to be true copies of the original grants signed by the defendant's grandfather, Jakkam Reddi Subha Reddi. These documents were filed in the lower Court on the 13th December 1918. There is no record of any objection having been taken before the documents were filed. As being copies of documents more than thirty years old which came from proper custody, namely the Collector's Office, the presumption arising under section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act as to their genuineness might have been made by the Court. See Nanu Nair v. Kantan Ashta Moorthi Nambudripad (1). The Subordinate Judge who wrote the judgment in this case remarks that these documents were introduced subject to object ons, if any, but, unfortunately, he was not the Judge who heard the evidence and there is nothing in the B D ary to show that the documents were admitted subject to objections. It is argued that these documents are not, properly speaking, secondary evidence but I find they are. The signature of the defendant's father under the words "A true copy of the original" is some guarantee that they were compared with the original and found be be correct. The appearance also of these documents is in thier favour. Exhibit XXXI purports to be a grant of 20 gorrus of forest land to Jakkam Reddi Krishna Reddi who was the great-grandfather of the defendants for the purpose of enjoying the land and causing the Nivedya and Dheeparathana services to be rendered to Sri Chennakeswara Swami. Exhibit XXXI (a) purports to be a grant of 212-3/16 gorrus of forest land in favour of Jakkam Reddi Krishna Reddi and subject to the same conditions as to services to be rendered to the temple. The land covered by Exhibit XXXI (a) at that time was probably of very little value, but, owing to the increase in the value of cultivable land and the discovery of mica mines in this locality, it has now become very valuable. Exhibits XXXI (b), XXXI (c) and XXXI (d), which are documents of delivery, relating to this inam, confirm the conclusions arising from Exhibits XXXI and XXXI (a) and make their genuineness more probable. Exhibit XII, a report made by the Karnams of the village in 1824, states that that is a kandriga or service inam enjoyed by Jakkam Reddi Krishna Reddi for the purpose of making N vedya and Deeparathanam offerings and that he was getting such services done to the Swami. The Subordinate Judge refers to Exhibit I which is a kaifiat made by the Karnam in the village before the Collector of Nellore District in 1851. He says that the question put by the Collector pre-supposes that the inam was intended to be the poperty of the suit temple and that the answer given by the Karnam shows that the defendant's family were simply managing this item as Dharmakarthas: but it does not appear that the defendants were parties to this enquiry and the op nion of the Collector, whether expressed or implied, is not evidence against their title. Exhibit III is another statement made by some Karnam on some date and occasion not known. This document and Exhibit VII are not of much value so far as they confl ct with the evidence of the deeds of grant. Exhibit VII being a statement made by the uncle of the first defendant during the latter's minority, is not bindng on him as an admission. Exhibits B and B-2 are statements made by the village Official and residents of Vodur. The circumstances under whch these statements were made do not appear and being statements of persons not called as witnesses they are not evidence against the defendants. Exhibit V, the Inam Register, is an important document and in column 13 therein the name of the original grantee is given as Chennakeswara Swami Varu. In column 16 the present owner is stated to be Jakkam Reddi Pedda Reddi and Co., Managers of the temple, and in column 10 the inam is said to be hereditary so long as the service is performed. The title-deed for this land, which is described therein as Devadayam or Pagoda Kandriga inam, Exhibit VI, was granted to "the Manager for the time being of the Pagoda of Sri Chennakeswara Swami Varu" and the conditions are stated to be that a quit rent of Rs. 57-12-0 should be paid and that the inam should be confirmed to the said manager and his successors so long as the conditions of the grant were duly fulfilled. The inam statement, Exhibit XXX (a), records that this land was granted by Mr. Travers to Jakkam Reddi Krishna Reddi who felled the trees, cultivated the land and was performing the Nivedya and Deeparathanam services in the suit temple. In Exhibit K, which is a list of cultivation of a porton of this inam, it is described as Devadu Kandrigai. This is a document signed by the first defendant, and if the expression Devadu Kandrigai could be treated as an admission that the inam was an absolute endowment to the temple this might be utilised as an admission of his own want of title, but Devadu Kandrigai conveys no more than Devadayam inam. Exhibts XXXI and XXXI (a) suggest that this inam was granted to Krishna Reddi for his enjoyment of the produce subject only to the duties to be performed on behalf of the temple. In Exhibit XXXI (a) it recited that the reason for the further grant of 212 gorrus was that the grantee was unable to maintain himself with the lesser extent of 20 gorrus. The document states that the grantee should pay every year the instalments of the kist to Government and enjoy the produce, and that things should be carried on in this manner as long as it might be deemed proper by the Government. The words in italics indicate that it was intended that Krishna Reddi should derive his subsistence from the produce. Therefore, the grant appears to have been one of an inam to be held by an individual and his heirs burdened with the trust of doing certain services for the temple. In such cases any surplus income left after the performance of the services accrues to the benefit of the donee. See Muttevi Srinivasacharyulu v. Dinavahi Pratyanga Rao (2) and Mohamed Husain Saheb v. Mohamed Abdul Rahim Beg Saheb (3). It is not necessary in such cases that the inam-holder should account for his disposal of the surplus produce of the land. The other exhibits in the case are of minor importance. Exhibits S, L, R, M, U, A and A (1). If there was any admission in paragraph 17 of Exhibit A (1) by the defendant's Vakil it is not proved to have been authorised by him.

We must reverse the findings of the Subordinate Judge on Issue III and hold that Items Nos. 2, 6 and 7 are not recoverable from the defendants as being the exclusive property of the temple.

Under the IVth issue it is not shown that the defendants committed any breach of trust in respect of this land as the grant does not provide for the utilisation of the surplus produce. From Exhibit K and the plaintiff's own statement it appears that a portion of the lease amount was utilised to pay off a promissory-note for the personal debt but the defendants have not been asked to explain why they took the rent to pay off a private debt and there is no substantial charge against them under this head. The Subordinate Judge found the charges (b), (h), (p), and (q) of misconduct not proved. Charge (i) relates to the change of Archakas. It is unimportant and it is not shown that the defendants deliberately changed any of the old practices of the temple. The other charges relate to the claim for lands with which I have already dealt. The defendants appear to have felt some doubt as to their rights in respect of these inams and this uncertainty can hardly be stated to have been unjustifiable having regard to the difficulty felt both by this Court and the lower Court in determining what exactly was the nature of the original grants. In his memorandum filed on 14th November 1917 the first defendant stated that Items Nos. 2 to 6 were service inams and that Item No. 7 was an inam belonging to defendant's family. In the argument it was admitted that Items Nos. 1, 8, 3, 4 and 5 belonged to the suit temple. In a statement made in 1916, Exhibit U, the first defendant admitted that Items Nos. 3, 4 and 5 belonged to the temple, that there was no other land belonging to the God and that he was its Dharmakartha, and that Item No. 2 was an inam for festival purposes. In Exhibit JJ the defendant's father first said that he was authorised to use the income of the Devastanam lands for the expense of the temple only and then expressed his ignorance whether he could use any of the income for his own benefit as the patta was in English. The defendants are not persons of much education and they seem to have been in some genuine uncertainty as to what their duties and rights were. Their uncertainty as to their legal position under the deeds of grant and other documents is not a reason for punishing them to the extent of removing them from office. The trust is not likely to be better administered by being placed in the hands of persons unconnected with the family of the founder. The defendants are interested in seeing that worship is maintained in this temple which their ancestor founded. It is not proved that they misappropriated any of the temple income. In fact, the Subordinate Judge finds in paragraph 30 of his judgement that the income derived from the temple properties must have been wholly spent for temple purposes. The credit of Rs. 32 to the temple in the accounts as income of the Manyam appears to have been calculated upon some calculation of averages and does not indicate any intention of fraud. The first defendant's account-keeping was not his strong point. The defendants may not hitherto have realised their duty of strictly accounting for every pie of the temple income. This is not a case resembling that of Srinivasa Chariar v. Evalappa Mudaliar (4) where a trustee was found to have asserted private ownership in himself to trust properties, to have strenuously resisted their recovery and to have supported this unfounded assertion by deliberate concoction of accounts. The features of this case are more like those of the case reported as Subbaroya Chetti v. Subramania Iyer (5), where we held that there was no reason to disturb the defendants who had been in possession of the office of Dharamakarthas for many years and belonged to the original family of trustees. We declined to remove them at the instance of strangers unconnected with the family unless we found clear evidence of misconduct and unless it appeared to be to the clear benefit of the trust that the Dharmakartha should be removed.

In this state of things we dissent from the lower Court's finding on Issue VII that the defendants should be removed from their office. This litigation will serve as a lesson to them to keep proper accounts of the temple income and to guard against any mixing of the temple property with their own property. Subject to the regular performance of the duties imposed in the deeds of grant, they may continue, to enjoy the properties subject to the trust so long as they are managers or Dharamakarthas of the suit temple.

The appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed. The respondents will bear their own costs both here and in the lower Court. The appellants may recover their costs from the income of the lands.

Mr. Barnabas, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is time-barred by two days.

The appellant filed affidavits showing that he was busy applying for a review of the lower Appellate Court's decree when the time occupied by the review proceedings is deducted out of the time that elapsed between the appellate decree and the day on which the appeal was filed, it was found to be time-barred by two days.

On the last statement it looks as if the appeal was time-barred on account of the review proceedings, but that was not so.

The appellate decree was passed on 5th September 1921. The application for review was made on 29th October 1921. It was fixed for hearing on 16th November 1921 and was dismissed on that date. An appeal to this Court from the appellate decree was not time-barred yet on that date. The appellant still had 26 days, we have no explanation by affidavit or otherwise why he did not file this appeal within those 26 days. On this ground alone, the appeal should have been rejected as being time-barred. But the grounds of the application for review seem to be unreasonable, and for that reason this Court should not exercise its discretion under section 5 of the Limitation Act. See Maung Po Lu v. Maung Kyin (1) The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The defect must be discovered at the time, otherwise as a general rule it will save limitation. [p. 41, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal raises two questions of law. The first is whether an application by the assignee of a decree to have his name substituted is a step-in-aid of execution so as to save limitation under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. The second is whether, if this is so, a defect in giving notice to the judgment-debtor will vitiate the application. It is unnecessary to deal with the facts, which are given fully in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It is sufficient to say that the application which concerns us was made on 26th April 1919 and if it was a step-in-aid of execution, limitation is saved. Both the Courts below have held that there is no bar to limitation, and I agree. There is a direct authority for the proposition in Pitam Singh v. Tota Singh (1). There is no direct authority to the contrary. The case Kuppuswami Chettiar v. Rajagopola Iyer (2) deals with the substitution of names. No doubt, there are remarks in that decision which would support the present appeal. It was held that, in order to save limitation under Art. 182, there must either be an application for execution or failing that an application made to support the application for execution. But this doctrine was negatived in a carefully reasoned decision of this Court, Sheo Ram v. Ram Bharosey (3). The Madras High Court provides no direct authority on the question. Indeed, in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Dharni Mudaly (4) the Allahabad decision already referred to [Pitam Singh v. Tota Singh (1)], was expressly followed. It is unnecessary to refer to further authorities. I follow the decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court which is supported, to some extent, by a decision of my own Court, and which is not contradicted by any reported case.

On the second point, the question is raised for the first time in second appeal. It was suggested that paragraph 7 of the objections raised the point. That paragraph contains words "But there was no knowledge of proceedings either to the judgment-debtor, objector or to her minor son or to any legal guardian of the minor till the end of 1921." That objection, however, refers rather to the application of 16th July 1921 than to the application of 26th April 1919 with which we are concerned. In the first appeal nothing was said on the subject, and the Appellate Court was under the impression that notice was duly served. In the second appeal, nothing is said in the grounds of appeal. The question is raised for the first time in argument. I should be unwilling to decide a case on a point so raised so late. Looking to the record it is impossible to hold that the judgment-debtor received notice. The judgment-debtors were two, the mother Musammat Mariam Begam and her son Muzaffar Husain, minor. The notice to Musammat Mariam Begam was returned unserved, and no attempt was made to serve the Pleader who had been appointed guardian ad litem of the minor. Service on his mother would not have been good service. But I am prepared to hold, nevertheless, that the application was according to law. It was accepted by the Court to which it was presented and that fact initself, goes a long way in deciding the question whether the application is in accordance with law so as to satisfy all the requirements of Art. 182. If the Court accepts the application, the applicant is entitled to suppose that his application complied with law, and as a rule in all subsequent matters it will be taken for granted that it did so. If there was any defect in the application it ought to be discovered at the time, otherwise it will, as a general rule, save limitation.

For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

SPECIAL SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 336 OF 1921.

June 29, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Duckworth.

MAUNG THIT SA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

MAUNG NAT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Tort—Right, infringement of—Special damage.

Where a person is in the enjoyment of a right and another deliberately infringes that right, the person injured can succeed in an action for damages without proving special damage, i.e., whether any damage has been proved to have accrued to him or not. [p. 41, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—There can be no dispute about the facts in this case. The parties were lessees of adjoining fisheries for 1920-21, the fishery of the plaintiff-appellant being the lower one. During 22 days of the season defendant-respondent kept erected in his fishery certain akeses, which may, for the purpose of this appeal, be taken to have been illegal obstruction to the passage of fish. It is quite clear from the evidence that this action on defendant-respondent's part to some extent lessened the plaintiff-appellant's catch of fish by obstructing them from such ready access to his fishery as they would otherwise have had. On this account the plaintiff-appellant sued the defendant-respondent for a sum of Rs. 1,320 by way of damages assessing his loss at 300 viss, i.e., 1 boat load of fish a day at Rs. 20 per 100 viss for 22 days. The Court of first instance gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 500 damages, basing the said amount on the fact that owing to his illegal acts the defendant obtained in all 2,500 viss of fish which he otherwise would not have got, and that 100 viss of fish were worth Rs. 20 a viss.

The Divisional Court held that, though the obstruction was illegal, there were no materials upon which to assess the damages, and accordingly dismissed the suit. It apparently held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove special damage. Herein the Divisional Court was in error. The cases of Yan Gin v. Maung Hmon (1) and Nga Myat Hmwe v. Nga Yi (2) make it quite clear that in such a case as this where there is a right and another deliberately infringes that right, the person injured can succeed without proof of special damages, i.e., whether any damage has been proved to have accrued to him or not. In a case such as this, it is impossible for the plaintiff to prove in any exact manner the damage he had suffered and all he could do was to call evidence to show the effect of the obstruction as best he could. The evidence called by plaintiff shows clearly enough that he did suffer actual damage, that his takings were reduced from 300 to 600 viss a working day. Mg San Lwin, a fisherman, puts the loss at 300 viss a day, but he is plaintiff's son and may be biassed, though it is noticeable that plaintiff and his son put the loss at a lower figure than their witnesses. The Fishery Inspector—an expert—assesses the loss at about Rs. 800 because he says that the defendant won that value of fish by means of his akeses at a time, when, but for them he would have got no fish at all, owing to the high state of the water. These are clearly materials for assessing the damage, and I consider that the Divisional Court was in error in dismissing the suit for the reasons stated. Though I agree that the Court of first instance was wrong in assessing plaintiff's damages entirely on the defendant's profits, there is enough evidence to show that plaintiff certainly suffered damage at least to the extent of Rs. 500. He does not now ask for more.

The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts on Rs. 500.

The period of limitation in the case of a decree obtained while the Limitation Act of 1859 was in force is 60 years according to section 15 of that Act, and is not affected by the provisions of sections 29 and 30 of the subsequent Act of 1871. Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, dated the 19th July 1922, which affirmed the decree of the Munsif of Musafirkhana, dated the 5th January 1922, by which the claim of the plaintiff-respondent for redemption of a mortgage was allowed.

The facts of the case are very simple. On the 7th September 1868 Baiju Tewari and Jogi Tewari applied to the Court of Settlement that they were holding 15 bighas and 14 biswas of land in the village Katant Parsotampur as mortgagees. The relief which they sought was that the settlement in respect of the land be made with them in the character of mortgagees. A decree was passed with the consent of the defendants Audan Singh, Suchit Singh and Rustam Singh on the 8th September 1868. The present suit was directed to redeem the mortgage evidenced by the terms of the consent decree referred to above. The only defence with which I am now concerned is one of limitation. It is contended that the original mortgage in respect of which proceedings were taken in the Settlement Court and concluded by the decree of the 18th September 1868 was of the year 1839 and consequently the claim for redemption is barred by the provisions of section 37 of Act XIII of BALDEO v. SHER BAHADUR SINGH.

1879. The Courts below have repelled this defence on the ground that the proceedings in the Settlement Court evidence a new contract of mortgage and, therefore, no question of limitation under the terms of the section mentioned before arises.

In the petition of the mortgagees dated the 7th September 1868 there is no reference of any date of the mortgage then subsisting in respect of the land to which the petition related, but a perusal of the statement of one of the mortgagees, Baiju Tewari, recorded by the Settlement Court will disclose the fact that the year of the mortgage was 1246 Fasli. It may be stated parenthetically that Baiju's statement is not on the record of this case but I have looked into it from a certified copy handed to me by the Counsel for the respondent, the justification for this procedure being that the whole of the Settlement Record was before the lower Courts and the learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the statement of the parties contained in the Settlement proceedings. Before the claim of the mortgagees could be decided one of the mortgagors, Audan Singh, died and the evidence relating to the pedigree shows that he had two sons, Bindeshri Singh and Kalka Singh. Kalka Singh does not seem to have appeared on the scene in the Settlement proceedings but Bindeshri Singh came in and made the statement contained in Exhibit 7. The Court of first instance admitted Exhibit 7 in evidence on the date when it was tendered but subsequently returned it as not proved. It is still on the file of the case. I am of opinion that it should not have been returned and I admit it in evidence. It is a certified copy of the statement of Bindeshr Singh in the case to which I have already referred and must be presumed to be genuine.

In the application of the 7th September 1868 the area of the mortgaged land was stated to be 15 bighas and 14 biswas. In his statement Baiju said that the original mortgage was for the entire share but that the mortgagees had for some time past been only in possession of the area stated in the application. The application further said that the amount of the mortgage-money was Rs. 214. The decree, however, fixes it at Rs. 213-14-0. Baiju, mortgagee, offered to relinquish his rights if the mortgagors would pay him then and there the mortgage-money. The decree, on the other hand, gave the mortgagors right to redeem on any Jethi Puranmashi. In the application of the 7th September 1868 the mortgagee stated a liability to pay paramsana to the mortgagors of Rs. 28-5-0. per year. The decree fixed it at Rs. 28-1-0. These variations are undoubtedly slight but they certainly lead to the inference that the parties to that litigation substituted a fresh contract of mortgage in place of the old one.

Whatever might have been the terms of the old mortgage and whether the terms on which the parties agreed in the Settlement Court were the same as of the old mortgage or not seem to me to be immaterial. If the parties agreed to substitute a new contract in place of the old, the old contract ceased to exist and the rights and liabilities of the parties must be determined with reference to the new contract. The essence of the innovation of a contract lies not in the dissimilarity of the terms between the old and the new contract but in the intention of the parties to supersede the old by the new. See the provisions of section 62 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). Both the Courts below have decided that the parties to the litigation before the Settlement Court renewed the old contract of mortgage and I accept that finding as correct. Besides, the decree passed by the Settlement Court was declaratory of the rights and liabilities of the mortgagors and the mortgagees in respect of the land which was the subject-matter of the litigation. The terms of the decree are that the plaintiff's names shall be entered in the Settlement papers as mortgagees of the 15 bighas and 14 biswas, that whenever on any Jethi Puranmashi the defendants pay up Rs. 213-14-0, the mortgage-money, they will be entitled to redeem, and that so long as there is no redemption the plaintiffs will pay to the defendants the sum of Rs. 28-1-0 paramsana annually. The present suit is, therefore, founded on the terms of the decree and all the allegations in the plaint reveal that that is the nature of the suit.

There have been a series of cases in this Court in which suits for redemption of a mortgage based on the terms of a declaratory decree obtained in the Regular Settlement Courts have been brought and allowed. See Bhagwan Bakhsh v. Chandi Dat (1), Debi Singh v. Rattan Singh (2) and Raja Partab Bahadur Singh v. Raja Surat Singh (3). At the time when the Settlement Court passed the decree under consideration, the Law of Limitation applicable to a suit for redemption was provided by the provisions of section 15 of Act XIV of 1859. This Act took effect in Oudh on the 4th July 1882. Section 15 provided that limitation for a suit for the recovery of immoveable property against a mortgagee was 60 years. Therefore, on the date when the Settlement Court declared the relationship of the mortgagors and mortgagees between the parties of that litigation on the terms stated in the decree the mortgage was a subsisting one and not extinguished by any rule of limitation. The subsequent enactment of sections 29 and 30 of Act XXXII of 1871 cannot be given the effect of superseding the decree which was passed by a competent Court. The decree passed by the lower Courts is correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Tort—Defamation—Imputing unchastity to woman—Special damage.

In Burma, to impute unchastity to a woman is actionable without proof of special damage. [p. 45, col. 2.]

Special second appeal from a decree of the Divisional Court, Tenasserim, in Civil Appeal No. 58 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.—There can be no doubt about the facts in this case. The appellants, or rather the first appellant, accompanied by the other two appellants, went to a zayat near to the first respondent's house and told her to call the other respondents. She did so. The appellants belong to some Village Female Society and seem to have deliberately selected this zayat for the meeting. The second respondent was asked whether she had told others that they had called her quarter a dirty quarter, upon her saying "yes," it is shown that certainly the first appellant and possibly the other two appellants, launched a stream of the most filthy and obscene abuse at the respondents, using a vulgar word "you" with a plural affix. I have no doubt whatever that the abuse was levelled at the respondents colletively, and not to any one of them, or to their quarter generally. The words used were, as near as can be now gathered, "you prostitutes, you come to our quarter, and have sexual intercourse with our quarter men, who have sharp and pointed male members. Your female organs are rotten with sphegma and filth. You do just what those men want with you." Now this was clearly shouted out, not on the spur of the moment, but after deliberation. It amounts to far more than mere vulgar abuse, and is, in my opinion, defamation. There is nothing to show that the respondents-plaintiffs are not chaste women and two of them are unmarried girls. It will naturally be presumed that they are women of good moral character.

The questions raised on appeal from the decision of the Divisional Court which, on appeal awarded the respondents a sum of Rs. 45 by way of damages, against all three appellants are, that the three plaintiffs-respondents had no right under the law to sue together in one suit; that though the question of misjoinder of parties and causes of action was waived in the lower Appellate Court, it was raised in the Court of first instance and can still be set up; that the first Court, having found that the slander in question was only uttered by the first appellant, and there being no grounds of appeal before the Divisional Court against that finding, that Court was in error in passing a decree against the second and third appellants without going into the question, or coming to a finding as to whether they uttered the slander or not; that the lower Appellate Court having found that the second respondent was not free from blame, inasmuch as she had previously called the defendant-appellant's quarter an unclean one, should have held that, whatever words were used were mere abuse and were not defamatory, and do not per se give rise to any cause of action; that respondents suffered no special damages and were not entitled to any damages on the ground of pain and mental distress caused by the use of insulting and abusive language, and that the damages awarded were excessive.

In regard to the question of misjoinder of plaintiff and causes of action, as, in my opinion, the merits have not been affected, even if there was such misjoinder, section 99, Civil Procedure Code, applies. Moreover, the matter was dropped in the lower Appellate Court, and rightly so.

I agree that it is open to doubt as to what part appellants second and third took in the slander. Moreover, the Divisional Court never went into the matter properly. I think that only the first appellant can be held liable, though the other two appellants probably were abettors of what was done. As regards the next point, there is some error here--what the second respondent was asked was, whether she had repeated the allegation of appellants that respondents' quarter was an unclean or unwashed quarter, to which she replied "Yes." As I have stated, the abuse then used was clearly defamatory and implied that the respondents were unchaste, and were prostitutes of the lowest and most dirty description. This is more than vulgar abuse and it is a feeble excuse to allege that such abuse is common in Burma and India. In the case of Sukkan Teli v. Bipad Teli (1), Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ., held that to impute unchastity to a man's wife defamed both her and her husband and that the words used were not mere verbal abuse, and that the husband was entitled to damages without proof of special damage. They held that the case of Bhoont Money Dossee v. Natobar Biswas (2) did not apply to the Mofussil and they distinguished the case of Girish Chunder Mitter v. Jatadhari Sadukhan (3). This opinion was much the same as that of Irwin, J. C., in the case of Ma Pan Ye v. Maung Pan Aung (4). This view was shared independently by Saunders, J.C., in Nga Nyo v. Mi Te (5). There are many other cases also which show that, in Burma, to impute unchastity to a woman is actionable without proof of special damage. This really deals with all the remaining points raised in appeal, except as to the quantum of damages. In my opinion, as no special damage has been proved a sum of Rs. 15 to each appellant is excessive. Moreover, I have held that only the first appellant is liable. I set aside the decree of the Divisional Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance, i.e., that the first appellant do pay a sum of Rs. 5 to each of the respondents, who, the appeal having been decided ex parte, will get no costs in this Court, but will get all costs in the two lower Courts.

The suit against appellants Nos. 2 and 3 is dismissed, but, in the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs, Advocate's fees, three gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 29

AYUB KAREEM v. JAFFAR AYUB.

—Suit by trustee against manager of trust property for accounts—Sanction of Advocate-General, whether necessary.

The suit contemplated by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code must be a representative one, brought by the person interested therein against trustees in respect of the trust mentioned, in cases where there has been a breach of trust or, if there is none, where the directions of the Court or relief of the kind mentioned in the section itself are wanted. [p. 47, col. 1.]

A suit by a trustee against a person appointed by him to manage the trust property for compelling him to render accounts of his stewardship as manager and for possession of books and papers, the property of the trust, does not come under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and may be brought without the sanction of the Advocate-General. [p. 47, col. 1.]

Application for revision of an order of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 11th September 1922, in Civil Suit No. 4 of 1922.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs in this case sued stating that one Mohammad Hasham, Memon Kachi, who died in Akola in 1903, had on the 1st December 1902 executed a Will whereby he bequeathed three-fourths of his property to relations and one-fourth to charitable purposes. He appointed executors or trustees to manage the said property. The present trustees are the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1. The first defendant and the present applicant was appointed managing trustee but has since been removed by the trustees from his appointment on the grounds that he mismanaged the trust. Plaintiffs ask for an account, for the balance, if any, found due on taking accounts from defendant No. 1 as managing trustee and for possession of all account-books, minute-books and other documents relating to the trust property. The prayer clause of the plaint runs:—

"(a) As accordigg to the resolution of the trustees defendant No. 1 is no more the managing trustee and Banker he may be directed to render accounts of the proper income and expenses regarding the income and to pay to plaintiff No. 1 according to the resolution of the trustees the balance found with him on proper accounts being made.

"(b) Defendant No. 1 may be directed to make over to plaintiff No. 1 all the account-books, proceeding books and other papers regarding the poperty of the Will.

"(c) Defendant No. 1 may be directed to pay Court costs of the suit.

"(d) Proper interest may be awarded on the amount which defendant No. 1 may be directed to pay from the date of institution of the suit until re-payment.

"(e) Any other relief deemed proper and legal by the Court may be granted."

The defendant No. 1 pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was not maintainable for want of sanction under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, and the pleadings of the parties led to the framing of the following preliminary issues:—

1. Whether the trust created by the Will, dated 29th November 1902, is partly a public and charitable trust?

2. Whether the nature of the relief claimed in the present suit does not come under any of the clauses of sub-section 1 of section 92 of the Code?

3. Whether section 92 of the Code applies to the present case?

4. Whether the suit is bad for want of sanction under section 92 of the Code and should be dismissed on this ground?

5. Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try the present suit?

The lower Court's findings may be summarised as follows:—

The trust is partly a public trust; that section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the case for the nature of the reliefs claimed do not come under any of the clauses of section 92, sub-section (1) and the suit is not bad for want of sanction of the Advocate-General. The Court further finds that the Court had jurisdiction to try the present case. Two points are pressed before us. The first is that the suit falls within the provisions of section 92, and the second that the Court of the Additional District Judge not being the principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction within the meaning of section 92 and the Local Government not having empowered it to try the suit, it has no jurisdiction to try it.

We deal with the first contention first for a negative finding thereon makes any finding on the second contention unnecessary. The suit contemplated by section 92, Civil Procedure Code, must be a representative one, brought by the person interested therein against trustees, in respect of the trust mentioned, in cases where there has been a breach of trust or if there is none where the directions of the Court or relief of the kind mentioned in the section itself are wanted.

In paragraph three of the plaint the plaintiffs mention the reasons which led them to displace defendant No. 1 as a managing trustee. They do not sue to remove a trustee or to appoint a new one. They do not ask for an order vesting any property in a trustee or directing accounts to be rendered by defendant No. 1 as a trustee and enquiries into his acts as such nor ask for the reliefs mentioned in clauses (e), (f), (g) or (h) of section 92. They ask that the first defendant as a person appointed by them to manage on their behalf be made to give an account of his stewardship as manager and for possession of books and papers, the property of the trust. It was held in Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (1) that when a person or persons sue not to establish the general right of the public of which they are a member or members but to remedy a particular infringement of their own individual right the suit is not within and need not be brought under the section. In the present case the plaintiffs do not represent the public, their rights have been infringed as trustees: Miya Vali Ulla v. Sayed Bava Saheb Santi Miya (2). In a very similar case, Bapuji Jagannath v. Govindlal Kasandas Shah (3), it was held that the suit did not come within the section, and it has been held that a suit by a trustee of a public charitable or religious trust against a co-trustee for accounts does not fall within section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and may be brought without the sanction of the Advocate-General: Appana Poricha v. Narasinga Poricha (4). We have no hesitation in finding that the present suit does not come within the purview of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is, therefore, unnecessary to record a finding on the second contention raised. The result is that this application for revision fails and is dismissed with costs. The lower Court will proceed with the case. Pleader's fee Rs. 30.

Appeal from the District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Suit No. 23 of 1920.

Mr. Highnbotham, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kya Gaing, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Duckworth, J.—This is a suit for the administration of the estate of U Maung Gale, deceased. By his first wife, Ma Kin he had four sons, Ko Po Cheik, Ko Lu Nge, Ko Kyaw Dun and Ko Po Lun. He then took a second wife Ma E Mai, by whom he had three children. He died on September 11th, 1919. The defendants-respondents are the widow and the three children by the second marriage. Of the four sons by the first marriage, Po Chock and Lu Nge are dead, and plaintiffs-appellants Nos. 1 and 2, Po Lun and Kyaw Dun, are the surviving two sons. The remaining plaintiff-appellants are the grandsons of the deceased by the two sons who are dead. The 7th plaintiff-appellant is the widow of Ko Lu Nge.

The defence set up by Ma E Mai was that in the year 1270, Burmese Era, there was a partition of the estate made by U Maung Gale in consequence of his second marriage, whereby the four sons by the first marriage obtained possession of a large portion of the estate, both moveable and immoveable. The said sons, it was urged, renounced all right to any further claim upon U Maung Gale's estate. The plaintiffs-appellants replied denying that there was such a partition or that they renounced any further right to inheritance, and contended that, if there was such a partition, it would not exclude them from obtaining a further share.

The learned Judge of the District Court held that it was proved that a partition of the estate, as alleged by Ma E Mai, took place in the year 1270, Burmese Era, and that, that being so, according to the Buddhist Law, the plaintiffs-appellants were precluded from obtaining any further share in U Maung Gale's estate. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs.

Ma E Mai produced what purports to be a deed of partition, Exhibit "A," dated in Pyatho in 1270, Burmese Era, and also a previous document, Exhibit "B," dated in Wazo 1270, Burmese Era, which purports to be an agreement, whereby U Maung Gale partitioned his moveable properties amongst the four sons, they, in their turn, undertaking to make no further claim on his estate, except for their proportionate shares of the paddy land.

Now, if, as I think, Exhibit "A" is a deed of partition, inasmuch as it affects immoveable property of a value far exceeding Rs. 100 it undoubtedly was compulsorily registrable. It is true that a partition can be effected orally, but in this case it was the plea of the defence that the partition was embodied in the document and there is no doubt that this document when once drawn up would require registration. This deed is, in fact, the partition deed and I have no doubt that the learned Counsel for the appellants is correct when he argues that under section 91 of the Evidence Act, secondary evidence cannot be given to prove the partition and that under section 48 of the Registration Act the document, Exhibit "A," cannot be used as evidence of the partition.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the respondents that Exhibit "A" can be used to prove the fact of partition. He quotes Bishan Das v. Ram Singh (1), the decision of a single Judge at Lahore, and the case of Chhottalal Aditram v. Bai Mahakore (2) and also the Privy Council case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (3) in support of his contention. However, a reference to these cases shows that the question at issue in each case was whether there was some specific relationship between the parties and that this relationship was what could be proved aliunde.

It is settled law that a relationship, such as partnership, landlord and tenant, and so forth, may be proved apart from the documents which embody the terms of that relationship. But in the present case, as far as I am able to understand it, the point at issue is not a question of relationship but the fact and terms of a specific partition. I think, therefore, that there is no doubt that in this case the partition deed is incapable of proof and wholly inoperative.

(1) 61 Ind. Cas. 399; 3 U. P. L. R. (L) 43.

(2) 40 Ind. Cas. 83; 41 B. 466; 19 Bom. L. R. 322.

As regards Exhibit "B" agreement which it is not disputed is admissible in evidence, there is no sufficient evidence to prove it. The evidence of the village headman, U Po That, may be sufficient to show that he is an unreliable witness, but in view of his statements it cannot be held to prove the document. Further, the Assessment Rolls which have been filed by the defendant-respondents are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act. This is clear from the case of Mi Sa U v. Nga Pyan (4) which shows that Revenue Records as made in Burma are relevant evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. In this connection I would also refer to the case of Ma Se Baw v. Mi Min Ya (5). However, it is quite clear from these rulings that Revenue Records are not enough, taken by themselves, to prove a fact, such as a partition.

Further, it is argued by the learned Counsel for defendants-respondents that a comparison of handwriting will enable the Court to hold that Exhibit "B" agreement is proved. Now the admitted signatures of Po Lun and Kyaw Dun on the record seem to me very similar to the signatures of Po Lun and Kyaw Dun on the document, but, here again, this is not sufficient evidence to prove it. It is manifest that if Exhibit "A" is, as I have held, entirely out of the Court's view, it is impossible to make comparison of handwriting in regard to it. As the records stand, not only Exhibit "A" but Exhibit "B" must be ruled out. The learned Judge of the District Court considered that Exhibit "A" was divisible and that it was capable of proof as regards partition of moveable property, but a reference to case of Sambayya v. Gangayya (6) and the case of Lakshmamma v. Kameswara (7) seems to me to indicate that, in such a case as this, the document is indivisible, especially as by the document the plaintiff-appellant purports to renounce all further claim to any estate.

We are thus reduced to the plaintiffs-appellants' evidentiary statements that it is true that they obtained possession of 390 acres of paddy land from U Maung Gale in 1270, Burmese Era, as well as certain moveable properties, but that this was by way of gift, and not partition. In my opinion these statements of the plaintiffs-appellants raise strong presumptions against them. It is impossible to get away from the fact that U Maung Gale's first wife, the mother of Po Lun, Kyaw Dun and the two other sons who are dead, had died and that U Maung Gale married again being the possessor of a large estate, the landed portion of which consisted of over 500 acres of paddy land. It is impossible to get away from the fact that from this estate, admittedly, 390 acres of paddy land and certain valuable moveable properties passed in 1270, Burmese Era, into the possession of the four sons.

Amongst Burmese Buddhists when the mother dies and the father marries again, it is usual to make a family partition and settle the children of the first marriage. It is most unusual for a father, when he re-marries merely to make gifts, and still more unusual to include in those gifts the bulk of his landed property.

In my opinion this change of possession in favour of the four sons is very significant so that I regard it as sufficient to shift the burden on to the plaintiffs-appellants to show that they obtained these properties by means of gift. This, of course, they have not proved, firstly, by lack of evidence and, secondly, because the gifts were not made by registered deed, as required by the Transfer of Property Act.

Further, the Assessment Rolls, which were filed by the defendants-respondents can be used, I think, to counter these allegations that they obtained possession of the land by means of gift. The mutation of names is not disputed and the transfer of names was not made as by means of gift. Section 213, Volume I, of the Kinwun Mingy's Digest makes it clear that, where the claims of the children of the first marriage have been settled, they can make no further claim. This matter was dealt with sufficiently in the case of Ma Sien Ton v. Ma Son (8). I consider, therefore, that I am entitled to hold that in this case the inheritance claims of the four sons were sufficiently satisfied and that just as if there had been a partition they can now claim no more.

Lastly, it would be, in my opinion, most inequitable to hold otherwise, and I consider that it is part of the function of a High Court, in dealing with such cases, to look below the surface and make deductions from the probabilities.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Pratt, J.—The facts of this case are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of my learned brother.

Plaintiffs are the sons and representatives of the sons of U Maung Gale, deceased, by his first marriage.

The defendants are the widow and children of the second marriage. Plaintiffs sued to recover their share in the estate of Maung Gale and for the administration of the estate.

The defence case was that U Maung Gale partitioned his estate in consequence of his second marriage, giving each of his four sons a substantial share of land, and that they renounced all further rights to his estate.

Unfortunately, the deed of partition on which the defendants relied was inadmissible as evidence of the partition through lack of registration.

I agree with my learned brother that the rulings cited in Bishan Das v. Ram Singh (1) cannot be taken as authorities for the proposition that the fact of a partition can be proved by oral evidence when the partition has been embodied in a document which is incapable of legal proof.

In the present case the deed itself is the partition. Oral evidence of the terms of the deed is excluded by the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act.

Plaintiffs, however, admitted that the sons by the first marriage did receive from their father certain properties about the time of the alleged partition.

First plaintiff admitted that 12 or 13 years after his marriage with first defendant U Maung Gale made gifts of immoveable and moveable properties to his sons. He himself received 4 or 5 ticals of gold and 60 or 70 acres of land.

The four sons between them received about 390 acres of land out of a total of 500. The transfers of land were made by mutation of names in the Revenue Registers.

In the Assessment Rolls for 1909-10 the lands are shown as transferred to the sons of U Maung Gale by way of inheritance. These entries are undoubtedlty relevant to show how the sons came to be in possession of land whch previously belonged to Maung Gale.

Plaintiffs allege that they came in possession by way of gift, but do not rely on any deeds. Their gifts, therefore, are no more valid than a partition by unregistered deeds. The entries in the Assessment Rolls show that reports had been made that the land was made over to the sons by way of inheritance, otherwise the mutation of names would not have been made.

These entries are not proof in themselves of a partition of his estate amongst his sons by U Maung Gale, but, taken together with the admission of the sons, they do show that the sons came into possession of a large portion of their father's estate in 1909-10.

The entries that the lands were transferred to the sons by way of inheritance are of importance, when the sons have no deed of gift to rely on.

The position, therefore, is, that the sons have already admittedly received from their father a very large portion of his property during his lifetime and after his second marriage. There has been no valid gift and the Revenue Records show that the land was made over to them by way of inheritance.

(8) 30 Ind. Cas. 588: 8 L. B. R. 501 at p. 511; 8 Bur. L. T. 203 (F. B.).

Even accepting plaintiffs' statements that U Maung Gale gave them the lands as gift, his distributing such a large share of his estate amongst his sons by the first marriage obviously requires explanation.

The fact that he did so after his second marriage and that he gave a considerable area of land to each son indicates that he was distributing his property amongst them in order to satisfy their claims to a share of his estate and in order to prevent disputes as to the division of his estate on his death.

This is the most probable motive for the so-called gift and I am of opinion that, under the circumstances, the assumption is justified that the distribution admitted by plaintiffs was made in ordes to satisfy their claims as heirs to the estate.

Having already obtained the major portion of their father's estate from him during his lifetime they now after his death sue to obtain the greater part of the residue as if they had received nothing at all.

I am of opinion that they are not entitled to sue for a share unless they consent to throw into the melting pot all the landed properties which they received from their father and with respect to which there has been no legally valid gift in their favour. This is not what they wish to do.

The equ ties of the case are entirely on the side of the defendants. It is the duty of the Courts to administer justice taking abroad view and not to allow litigants to take advantage of legal technicalities and commit what is practically robbery by process of law.

I concur in the view of my learned brother that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 23rd July 1921.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Whether the last tenant of the holding in dispute was Pothiram or his posthumous son, who lived about a month, the holding devolved on Rupa as Pothiram's widow or as his son's mother, and when she married again three years before this suit was filed it passed to the plaintiff, Munga, as Pothiram's mother or his son's grand-mother. Rupa and Munga have, however, always lived jointly in the same house on nothing but the proceeds of the cultivations of the land and are doing so to this day, but no change was made in the jamabandi after Rupa's marriage and her name was allowed to stand as that of the tenant. In the First Court it was held that joint possession did not constitute joint tenancy, which is true enough but irrelevant, and, therefore, that Rupa's possession was adverse to Munga's, which does not follow in the least. The learned Additional District Judge in appeal arrived at the same finding after a very confused examination of several rulings, in the course of which he expressed the opinion that the ruling in Sonsa Chamar v. Puran Singh Rajput (1) is contradicted by that in Sarjerao v. Tukaram (2) and he was bound by the latter.

MAUNG SHWE HNYIN v FUL CHAND.

The only way in which the learned Pleader for the respondent has attempted to support the judgments of the Courts below is by urging that the finding that the possession of Rupa was adverse to Munga, or at least separate from hers, is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot interfere. It is, however, not a finding of fact, but a legal inference drawn from the facts found, the chief of which is the fact that Munga's name was not substituted for Rupa's in the jamabandi. Their Lordships of the Privy Council took the same view in regard to a finding of acquiescence by the lessor in the erection of structures by his lessee in Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3). That the inference drawn is correct can hardly be argued. After Rupa's marriage Munga, who then became the tenant, allowed her and helped her to cultivate the field and to pay the rent, as she had been doing ever since the death of Pothiram. This was probably because neither of them realised that the marriage had made any difference or that Munga was thereafter the tenant and Rupa was not. But their reasons or motives cannot alter the actual nature of their possession, which was joint. Munga, the tenant, did not leave the land uncultivated nor did she leave the rent of it unpaid, as she was doing both these things jointly with her daughter-in-law. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. In place of it a decree will issue ordering that the defendant shall place the plaintiff in possession of the holdings in dispute as an occupancy tenant. The defendant-respondent will pay all the costs in all three Courts.

Mortgage—Mortgage of moveable property—Possession not given—Mortgagor disposing of property—Mortgagee, rights of.

Where, in the case of a mortgage of moveable property, possession is not given, and the mortgagor disposes of the mortgaged property to a third person, the mortgagee cannot follow the property into the hands of that third person unless he can show that that person had, at the time he took the property, notice of the mortgage.

Second appeal against the decree of the Divisional Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Appeal No. 93 of 1920.

Mr. Maung Tin, for the Appellant.

Mr. Day, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims that the 1st and 2nd defendants mortgaged their five head of cattle and their crops at the time standing on a piece of land. Possession of the mortgaged property was not given to the plaintiff. It is not necessary to give the other particulars of the mortgage for the purpose of deciding the point involved in this case.

The plaintiff made Maung Shwe Hnyin a party defendant on the ground that he had taken away the crops after they had been reaped. The 1st defendant admits the mortgage, the 2nd did not appear, and the case proceeded ex parte against him.

The defendant, Shwe Hnyin, alleged in his defence that the 1st and 2nd defendants were his servants working for him on the land in question and that the crops were his property. He made no claim to the cattle. The Trial Court held that the 3rd defendant was the owner of the crops and that the 1st and 2nd defendants, his servants, had raised the same for him, and dismissed the suit as regards the standing crops and decreed it as regards the five head of cattle. The lower Appellate Court held that the 1st and 2nd defendants were the tenants of the defendant, Shwe Hnyin, and gave a decree against the crops as well. The lower Court went into extraneous matters because the real point was missed.

The case may be put in a nutshell as follows:—The plaintiff claims a mortgage on moveable property of which he has not got possession by virtue of the mortgage. If the mortgagor chooses to dispose of the mortgaged property to a third party, the mortgagee cannot follow that property into the hands of that third person unless he can show that that party had, at the time he took the property, notice of the mortgage. The question in this case then is: Did the defendant Shwe Hnyin have notice of the mortgage at the time he took the standing crops? The lower Appellate Court has held that he had constructive notice, while admitting the evidence regarding the same to be weak.

The plaintiff's case is that after the mortgage was effected, he showed the mortgage-deed to the defendant Shwe Hnyin. This was apparently before Shwe Hnyin took possession of the property. According to his witness, Maung Now Shwe Hnyin was present on the occasion of the transaction being agreed to and Shwe Hnyin was asked to go to the Registration Office to witness the transaction. The conflict between the plaintiff and his witness is too great, and neither testimony can be accepted.

It appears that the plaintiff got an interim injunction issued, and, according to the plaintiff's case, the order was not served or executed because Shwe Hnyin said he would not allow attachment (sic) to be made. We have two witnesses on this point, namely, Hussain and Abdul Gufoor, Hussain says he was called to witness the attachment of the paddy. He went and found the defendant on the scene. At that time Shwe Hnyin was told that the paddy was mortgaged property. Abdul Gufoor's evidence is in similar terms. The process-server has not been called. His evidence would have been more useful. Abdul Gufoor was casually present. The evidence of these two witnesses, Hussain and Abdul Gufoor, does not appear to me to be convincing. The lower Appellate Court itself considered the whole of the evidence on this point as being weak. I am, therefore, unable to hold that Shwe Hnyin had any notice of the mortgage.

The appeal is allowed, so far as the standing crops are concerned, with costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 17—Minor, guardianship of—Mother, unchaste, position of.

The mere fact, that a woman gives birth to an illegitimate child is not a sufficient reason for not appointing her a guardian of her minor legitimate son's person and property.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 22nd March 1922, in Miscellaneous Case No. 70 of 1921.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is admitted that Kongshi had the best right to be the guardian of her minor son, but it is contended that she is disqualified by reason of her immoral character. It was pleaded that two years after her husband's death she began to live with one Rama Mahar as his mistress and had an illegitimate daughter by him. The evidence as to Kongshi living with Rama is discrepant and not at all convincing. A panchayet is said to have been held at which Kongshi was outcasted, but N. A. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 are not agreed as to who were the panchas. They do not know in what month the panchayet was held or the illegitimate daughter born. These witnesses were examined on the 16th January 1922 and the remaining witnesses on the 27th February 1922. Of the latter N. A. W. No. 5 is more specific but I am not inclined to put much reliance on him. He states that Rama was not a servant of Shiva but is contradicted by N.A. Ws. Nos. 1, 2 and 4. N.A.W. No. 4 who is the working patel of the village in which N. A. W. No. 5 resides and is a kolwar states that Rama was all his life in the service of Shiva. N. A. W. No. 5 further states that Kongshi is at present living with Nathu

Singh, a fact not mentioned by any other witness.

As regards the birth of a daughter, N. A. W. No. 4 produced a Births and Deaths Register which contained an entry under date 25th May 1920 that Kongshi gave birth to a girl who died after birth. Non-applicant, Gangu, in her pleading stated that after the death of Shiva her husband, Kongshi, was kept by Rama. Her witnesses Nos. 1 and 4, however, state that for two years after Shiva's death Kongshi lived with Gangu and was of good character. She then left the house and began to live with Rama. According to N. A. W. No. 5 Kongshi gave birth to a child about 7 or 9 months after she had begun to live with Rama. The birth would thus be in September to November 1920 according to the oral evidence. I am not, therefore, inclined to put much reliance on the entry in the register. N. A. W. No. 4 who produced it has no personal knowledge about it and his evidence in other respects does not command belief.

Assuming, however, that Kongshi did give birth to an illegitimate child in May 1920,—for that alone, if anything, can be said to have been proved on the record —I agree with the lower Court in holding that that fact alone is not sufficient reason for not appointing Kongshi as guardian of her son's person and property. It is not alleged that she was improperly dealing with the property while she was in possession of it. It appears that Gangu and Bhondia are in league and though it is pleaded that Gangu is in possession of the fields and Bhondia is not, it appears from the evidence that Bhondia really manages the cultivation and has possession of the crops.

I see no reason to differ from the decision of the lower Court This appeal is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 30.

A sale by an administrator without the leave of the Court, as required by section 60 of the Probate and Administration Act, is not void ab initio but merely voidable and if no steps are taken within the period prescribed to avoid the sale, it is binding. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Speaking generally, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to administration suits. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Review of the judgment of the Chief Court in First Appeal from the District Court, Tharrawaddy in Civil Regular No. 10 of 1919.

Mr. Gils, for the Appellant.

Mr. Das, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—(July 11, 1921.)—We admitted that this application for review of our judgment on the ground that the fact that Tun Pe was, the administrator of the estate, had not been considered and dealt with.

The suit brought by Mg Thwe was against Tun Pe, as administrator. He sought a decree declaring that he was the sole heir and, therefore, entitled to the whole estate. He also prayed for possession of the whole estate.

At the time Tun Pe sold the plot now in dispute he had been held by this Court on appeal to be the sole heir. An appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council had been admitted, and was, to Tun Pe's knowledge, pending.

The sale-deed purports to have been executed by him in his personal capacity. As administrator the whole estate vested in him. As heir, if he could have sold at all he could only sell whatever right, title and interest he had in the estate which included the plot of land in suit. He must be taken to have sold the greatest estate he could and the fact that he did not describe himself as administrator should make no difference. It cannot deprive Ma Shwe Pon of the fruits of her purchase, There is ample authority for this, which was the view taken in Preonath Karar v. Surja Coomar Goswami (1) and English authorities for the proposition are cited therein. We must, therefore, deal with this sale as if it was one made by an administrator.

The sale was made without the leave of the Court as required by section 60 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. That does not, however, render the sale void ab initio but merely voidable. Mg Thwe has taken no steps to avoid the sale and his right to do so is now barred by time. Thus, the sale must be regarded for the purpose of this case as binding.

There remains the question whether this sale is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. If Tun Pe as administrator is to be regarded as the vendor the pending suit was against him as administrator. But in this matter the terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act must be carefully considered. It is essential to consider the nature of the suit and the rights of Mg Thwe as claimed and under the decree as finally made. The suit was in the nature of an administration suit and to such suits, speaking generally, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply. If in such a suit a particular portion of the estate is sought to be affected in a particular way, the doctrine would apply. The right to this particular plot of land must be "directly and specifically in question." In such a suit as this one, the land in suit may no doubt be said to be directly in question but it cannot be said to be specifically in question. The fact, that possession was prayed for is not enough, and the decree could not deal specifically with the land. It declared Mg Thwe to be a co-heir and as such co-owner of the estate with Tun Pe. The result was that, as laid down in section 44 of the Transfer of Property Act, Mg Thwe was held to be entitled to joint possession and joint enjoyment of the estate and also to a right to obtain partition thereof. The estate was, however, being administered by an administrator and Mg Thwe's rights were in respect of the estate as it remained after the administration. The administrator was entitled to sell any portion of the estate to pay the debts and the estate was liable for the expenses of the administration. Ma Shwe Pon could not be deprived of the benefit of her purchase as the purchase price came to the hands of the administrator. If he was guilty of misappropriation, Mg Thwe's remedy would be against him and his estate and to that estate Mg Thwe has now succeeded. He could only set aside the sale to Ma Shwe Pon on the ground of fraud, which is not alleged, or for want of the Court's sanction, which remedy has lapsed and might never have been granted.

For these reasons we accept the application for review and set aside the judgment and decree passed on appeal and restore the decree of the District Court with costs throughout so far as A. L. A. R. Muttaya Chetty is concerned.

So far as that decree deals with the second mortgage in favour of Mr. Robertson, we must set it aside. Mr. Robertson pleaded his mortgage and the amount then due in his written statement. It had been set out in the plaint which prayed for a decree in Form No. 7 of Appendix D of the Code. To this Mg Thwe merely pleaded ignorance of the mortgage, he did not admit it. Issues are said to have been framed by consent but though both Mr. Robertson and Mg Thwe were represented neither asked for any issue as to the second mortgage. The mortgage-deed was not even put in. It was not proved or admitted. Before a decree in Form 7 could be passed the second mortgage must be proved. The question was raised in the grounds of appeal to this Court and was argued but it was not necessary to decide the point in the view we then took.

We, therefore, set aside the District Court's decree so far as it affects the second mortgage and remand the case with directions that issues be framed as to the mortgage, and the amount due thereunder, if any, and to return the evidence to this Court with its findings thereon and its reasons therefor. The matter of costs so far as defendant No. 6 is concerned will abide the result. We allow no costs in this Court in this respect as the error was due to the fault of both parties.

After remand dated 5th June 1922.

JUDGMENT.—In our judgment dated the 11th July 1921 we set aside the decree of the District Court so far as it affected the second mortgagee, Mr. Robertson, on the ground that this mortgage and the amount due on it had not been legally established. We remanded the case that the questions as to this second mortgage might be properly tried. The evidence has now been taken and the finding of the District Court has been received. There is no appearance for the mortgaror. She had not contested this motgage at the original hearing, but did so on the remand.

(1) 19 C. 26; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 464.

Evidence has been led and the agent of the mortgagor who executed the mortgage on her behalf admits execution and, therefore, the testimony of one of the attesting witnesses can be dispensed with.

The mortgage is clearly proved. The mortgage amount is Rs. 2,200 and the interest is Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. There will be a decree—the usual combined mortgage decree for the principal amount with interest at the contract rate from the 23rd November 1917 to date of suit and thereafter to date of the Dtistrict Court's decree and for six months thereafter and from that date at 6 per cent. on the decretal amount until payment, with costs against the other defendants in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (3)—"Subject-matter," meaning of—Suit on different cause of action, whether barred.

The expression "subject-matter" in O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-rule (3), of the Code of the Civil Procedure, are not to be identified with the "property" in suit. They obviously include the right and also the infringement of it, which is equivalent to saying that the words "subject-matter" mean the cause of action for a claim. [p. 57, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 2nd February 1923, upholding that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Sultanpur, dated the 24th October 1922.

Mr. Salik Ram, for the Appellant.
Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a rent appeal arising out of a suit brought by the respondent for the recovery of rent in respect of plots Nos. 85, 86, 87 and 88 corresponding with old No. 36 for the years 1326 to Kharif 1329 Fasli. The suit was instituted under the provisions of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). The land is recorded in the village papers as bila tasfia. The plaintiff is the owner of the patti in which the plots in suit are situate. Prima facie, therefore, he is entitled to the decree which has been granted to him by the Courts below. His claim has, however, been resisted by the defendant on several grounds which will appear as this judgment proceeds.

In 1921 the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant in the Court of the Munsif of Musafirkhana for possession of the plots in suit as well as some other plots with which I am not concerned in the present litigation. One of the issues framed in that case was, whether the plaintiff was in possession of the plots then in suit within limitation. In respect of the plots now under consideration, the Munsif found that the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession within limitation. In the end he gave the plaintiff a decree for the other plots but dismissed his suit as regards the plots in respect of which the rent is now claimed. The plaintiff then appealed from the decision of the Munsif to the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad, but before the appeal was heard he filed an application to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit so far as it related to plots Nos. 85 to 88. His application was granted but the Court refused to give him permission to bring a fresh suit. The order was expressly passed under the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

On the strength of the facts stated above, the defendant-appellant raised several pleas in this suit. (1) That the suit was barred by res judicata. (2) That the permission to bring a fresh suit having been refused, the present suit was barred by the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-rule (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. (3) That he has been in adverse possession of the plots in respect of which the rent is claimed and lastly (4) that the plots are groves and consequently there is no liability for payment of any rent. All these pleas have been considered by the lower Appellate Court and negatived.

I am of opinion that the decree of the Court below is correct. Pleas Nos. 1 and 2 are obviously frivolous. The present suit is for rent in respect of these plots for the years 1326 to 1329 Fasli. The previous suit was for ejectment on the allegation that the defendant had cut certain trees and that he had no right to do so. The Court of Munsif was clearly not competent to entertain the present suit. In agreement with the lower Court, I reject pleas Nos. 1 and 2.

Plea No. 4 is concluded by the concurrent finding of the Courts below that there are too few trees left on these plots to give the character of a grove; I agree with that finding. Plea No. 4, therefore, fails.

As regards plea No. 3, it may be mentioned that the Court of first instance did not consider it at all. The lower Appellate Court has, however, decided it on merits and has held that there is no evidence in support of that plea. The Munsif's decision was wholly vitiated by the withdrawal of the suit in the Court of Appeal and has no legal effect left whatsoever.

At the hearing of the appeal in this Court, however, a subsidiary discussion arose with reference to the terms of section 127 of the Oudh Rent Act. The right to claim assessment of rent and a decree for the recovery of that rent under the provisions of section 127 is limited by the sine qua non that the person seeking relief under that section is "entitled to eject him (the defendant) as a trespasser." In view of the permission to bring a fresh suit for ejectment in respect of the plots now under consideration having been refused, the question arises whether the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant as a trespasser. That his remedy to institute a suit in ejectment in respect of the same subject-matter or in respect of the part of the claim which was then abandoned is barred by the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-rule (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure is not disputed. It is argued that the remedy may be barred but the title subsists. It is further argued that a fresh suit for ejectment would be maintainable on a cause of action different from the one on which the previous suit was based. The first argument raises a question which is not free from difficulty as it is possible to decide this appeal without deciding the point raised by the first argument. I think I should not decide it. The second line of argument is, however, obviously sound. The words "subject-matter" used in O. XXIII, r. 1, sub-rule (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure are not to be identified with the "property" in suit. They would obviously include the right and also the infringement of it, which is equivalent to saying that the words "subject-matter," mean the cause of action for a claim. In this connection reference may be made to the decision in the case of Rakhmabai v. Mahadeo Narayan Bundre (1).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Surrender—Joint tenants—Surrender of entire lease by one tenant—Benefit to other tenants.

One joint tenant is not entitled to surrender the lease on behalf of all the joint tenants unless the surrender is for the benefit of them all. Even where the benefit is doubtful, the surrender would not bind the other joint tenants.

First appeal against a decree, dated the 31d September 1921, of the District Court, Myaungmya, passed in its Civil Regular No. 9 of 1921.

Mr. A. B. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rahman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the owner of a mill which he leased on a registered-deed, dated 13th October 1920, to the respondent, Ma Sein, and another woman, Ma Thin. The term of the lease was two years and the rent was Rs. 4,000 a year payable quarterly. According to Ma Sein, a few days after the execution of the lease, the appellant came to her and stated that the mill needed certain repairs and asked for time to make them as he had undertaken to hand over the mill in working order; that she agreed to allow him about two months for the purpose and on the expiry of this period she demanded delivery of the mill to her but the appellant refused, saying he had leased it to his son. He did lease it to his son on the 14th January 1921. Ma Sein claims specific performance of the contract of lease and she has obtained a decree for possession of the mill.

The appellant's case is that he handed over possession of the mill to Ma Sein some five or six days after the lease was executed. He denies her story about taking two months' time to do certain necessary repairs, and alleges that Ma Thin came and surrendered the lease to him and that thereafter he released it to his son.

The first question for decision is, whether the surrender of the lease by Ma Thin is binding on Ma Sein? These two ladies were joint tenants under the lease, and though one joint tenant may be competent to surrender for the other joint tenants as well as for himself, he would only be entitled to do so if it was for the benefit of them all. There is nothing to show that it would be for the benefit of Ma Sein that the lease should be surrendered, and it is clear that she is most anxious to obtain possession and work the mill. Even if the benefit is doubtful the surrender would not bind Ma Sein. That being so, she is entitled under the lease to possession, and that is sufficient for the decision of this appeal.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Daughters inheriting as joint tenants—Partition with surrender of mutual rights of survivorship—Alienation by one daughter—Reversioners, right of, to sue for possession—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6, applicability of.

Two daughters, governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, who had inherited their father's property, partitioned it by a document, which provided that they would in future severally enjoy for ever absolutely such items of property as had fallen to their respective shares from generation to generation with right of sale, etc., and that neither of them would have any right over the properties set apart for the other. One of the daughters, subsequently, alienated some of the items which had fallen to her share. After her death, the sons of the other daughter sued for recovery of possession of the same from the alienees:

Held, (1) that the document of partition amounted to a relinquishment by each party to it, in case she should survive the other, of her right to the other's share;

(2) that, as heirs of the alienor, the plaintiffs had no locus standi to challenge her alienation;

(3) that, as reversioners of the alienor's father, the plaintiffs could not maintain a claim for possession during the lifetime of the other co-tenant for life;

(4) that the agreement between the co-tenants for life as to the enjoyment of the estate, to which the plaintiffs were not parties, could not have the effect of accelerating their right to possession.

Case-law discussed.

Per Oldfield, J.—A relinquishment by a co-tenant for life in favour of other co-tenants can be, when that is entailed by the language used, not only of the life-estate, so far as it can be enjoyed simultaneously by the sharers, but of that estate, as they take it, limited only by the lifetime of the survivor; and the uncertainty as to which of the transferors will survive to benefit does not make the transfer one of a spes successionis so as to offend against section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. They may effect a partition, each daughter giving her right of enjoyment over the properties allotted to the other daughter during the lifetime of the latter; and even an arrangement by which each daughter gives up her interest not merely during the lifetime of the other daughter but during the whole of her own lifetime is legally valid and enforceable. JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—The four items of suit property and others fell to two sisters, Vedambal and sixth defendant, in succession to their father; but Vedambal was in separate possession of the suit items under Exhibit A by which they to the extent open to them divided the estate. Vedambal died after alienating item No. 3 and a portion of item No. 4, to which this second appeal relates, to third, fourth and fifth defendants. The plaintiffs, the sons of sixth defendant, have sued for a declaration of the invalidity of those alienations and for possession of those items. The question is whether they are entitled to sue; the lower Appellate Court having held that they are, remanded the suit for trial on the merits.

In the plaint the title relied on is that plaintiffs are the heirs of Veerabhadra, the father of Vedambal, and sixth defendant; that is, reversioners of his estate. It is, therefore, impossible to proceed on the alternative ground, on which it was proposed to support the lower Appellate Court's decision that they could sue as heirs of Vedambal. Moreover, even if that ground were not excluded by the pleading, further reference to it would serve no purpose. For, whatever the extent of Vedambal's interest, it does not appear on principle or authority how her heirs can have had any vested or other right in the property during her lifetime, which could debar her from alienating it to their prejudice or which they can rely on against third, fourth and fifth defendants, her alienees.

The plaintiffs' claim as reversioners of Veerabhadra's estate would ordinarily be negatived by the fact that the interest of sixth defendant, his surviving female heir, is still outstanding; and they accordingly contend that the agreement between her and Vedambal, Exhibit A, effected a separation between the two shares, into which the estate under it was divided, so absolute as to constitute each share a distinct estate, in respect of which the reversioners' succession would open separately on the death of the sharer concerned. Exhibit A, no doubt, is expressed in unqualified language the parties to it agreeing "to enjoy severally for ever absolutely the properties which have fallen to their respective selves" and reciting that "neither should hereafter have a right over the proprerties set apart from the other;" and, if it was open to them to relinquish their whole actual and future interests, each in the other's share, it must be held that they did so. It is urged that, whilst they could do so with the effect of depriving the survivor of the succession to the share of the one first deceased, the latter's share would pass, not to her own heirs, until the life-estate might be determined on the survivor's death, but at once to the reversioners.

In favour of this contention there is only one authority Ridnamma v. Venkataramappa (1), but the passage relied on it is, as a later case points out, only a non-committal reference to a possible conclusion on facts other than those actually before the Court. In Subbammal v. Krishna Alyar (2), on which the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based, the dispute was between the surviving female life-tenant and her deceased co-tenants' heir. But it turned to some extent on the wording of the document under construction and there was nothing in the judgment directly in favour of the last male owner's reversioner, there being nothing to show that the deceased's heir was regarded as possessing that character. And in fact the lower Appellate Court would seem to have erred, because it paid no attention to this aspect of the case. In Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naickan (3) and Kanni Ammal v. Ammakannu Ammal (4) the parties were the surviving life-tenant and an alienee from the deceased life-tenant, the decision in each case being in favour of the latter. The inference from these two authorities is that, as the interest of the deceased was alienable, so it would, in the absence of an alienation, have passed to her heirs in the ordinary course of in heritance, although in them again the reversioner was not before the Court and his right was not pleaded; and there is nothing inconsistent with the inference in Sudalai Ammal v. Gomati Ammal (5) although there the claim of the deceased's heir rested on a provision in the document of partition or in Papammal v. Venkatasami Naicken (Suit Appeal No. 356 of 1918 unreported), in which the learned Judges followed the clear current of authority, although they doubted its correctness. These decisions also do not deal with the claims of reversioners. But they are important, because they are consistent with the view expressed in Subbammal v. Krishna Alyar (2) that the agreement for division must be regarded as in view of its wide language we must regard Exhibit A as a transfer by way of relinquishment by each party to it, in case she should survive of her right to the other's share and that such a transfer does not offend against section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act and must receive effect. The relinquishment is legal and can be, when that is entailed by the language used, not only of the life-estate, so far as it can be enjoyed simultaneously by the sharers, but of that estate, as they take it, limited only by the lifetime of the survivor; and the uncertainty as to which of the transferors will survive to benefit does not make the transfer one of the spes successionis.

That is material, when (as here) the claim is by reversioners. For there can be no reason why the effect of such a transfer should be less as against them, And two cases, Kailash Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty (6) and Muthiyalu Chengappa v. Burada Gunta (7), support this. In the former the reversioner's claim was expressly dismissed as premature during the lifetime of the surviving female life-tenant, the application of Dayabhaga Law not affecting this part of the decision. In the latter the grounds of decision were that a reversioner's right could not be accelerated by an agreement, to which he was not a party and that no acceleration could result from a relinquishment, not to a reversioner, but to a co-life-tenant, the fact that there the relinquishment was not, as it is in the case before us, mutual, but of the right to a share in exchange for a money payment, not impairing the validity of these considerations.

The conclusion then must be that plaintiffs cannot, as reversioners claim possession until the death of the surviving life-tenant, sixth defendant; and that, as already pointed out, they cannot claim it by right of heirship to Vedambal, because against that right (if they have it) her alienation must prevail. So far the appeal must succeed and the suit, so far as it is for possession must be dismissed. The plaintiffs, however, asked also for a declaration of the invalidity of Vedambal's alienations. They may, subject to the Law of Limitation and other objections, be entitled to such a declaration as reversioners; and it is not clear that they ask for this relief only as ancilliary to their prayer for possession. The lower Appellate Court's decision must, therefore, be modified in this sense, the remand to the District Munsif being allowed only for the consideration of the prayer for a declaration and of issues (ii), (iii) and (iv) as framed by him.

In view of the course of pleading, the District Munsif should, before proceeding with the trial, give defendants an opportunity to file additional written statements and should frame any further issues, which may be necessary with reference to them. Costs in this and lower Appellate Court up to date will be costs in the case and will be provided for in the decree to be passed.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I entirely agree. This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 against the order of the District Judge setting aside the dismissal of the suit by the District Munsif and remanding it for fresh disposal. Vedambal and Mahalakshmi Ammal, daughters of Veerabhadra Udayan, who inherited their father's property partitioned it by Exhibit A and certain items of property fell to the share of Vedambal and certain other items to the share of her sister Mahalakshmi. The deed contains the following clause:—

"We have each of us taken delivery of properties as have been set apart for our respective shares. We shall in future ourselves severally enjoy for ever absolutely the properties as have fallen to our respective selves, from progeny to progeny and fit for sale, gift, exchange, etc. We shall severally pay the Government tax for the lands as have been respectively set apart for us. Neither of us have a right over the properties set apart for the other."

The plaint contains an allegation that Vedambal Ammal executed a sale-deed in respect of certain properties set forth in paragraph 6 thereof and that the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 claim a title under the sale-deed. The plaintiffs are the sons of Mahalakshmi who was impleaded as the sixth defendant in the suit.

The District Munsif, holding that the plaintiffs have no cause of action during the lifetime of Mahalakshmi, dismissed the suit, and the District Judge, as observed above, reversed the decision of the District Munsif. The arguments before us range over a wide ground. But the point that presents itself for decision is extremely simple.

According to the Mitakshara School, two or more daughters succeeding as heirs to their father take as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. It is well-settled that they may effect a partition each daughter giving up her right of enjoyment over the properties allotted to the other daughter during the lifetime of the latter. The question then arises can an arrangement be entered into by which each daughter may give up her interest not merely during the lifetime of the other daughter but during the whole of the lifetime? It is difficult to see why such an agreement cannot be entered into. A and B inheriting their father's estate partition the property, B agreeing that in regard to the property that falls to A she gives up not only her interest for the lifetime of A but also for her own lifetime in the event of B surviving A. Why should such an agreement not be valid? If the arrangement amounted to a mere partition, the result is that B would give up her right in the property that fell to the share of A only for the lieftime of A and B's right to take by survivorship the share that fell to A would be unimpaired. But if, to an arrangement amounting to a partition was superadded the surrender by B of her right to take by survivorship, the effect would be to dispose of the entire interest of B in favour of A. For convenience I have, in the illustration, referred to B's disposal of her interest.

It makes no difference whether we consider the case from the stand point of A or B. The act of the nature referred to above on the part of either of the co-sharers amounts to an alienation of her interest in the property falling to the share of the other. Such an alienation is both on principle and authority perfectly valid and binding.

As was pointed out in Sudalai Ammal v. Gomati Ammal (5), if it is not denied that one of the joint tenants may part with her own life-interest in favour of a stranger, it becomes difficult to imagine why she may not part with it in favour of the other joint tenant. In the above case the question in regard to two co-widows was under consideration. But on this point there is no difference between the case of widows and daughters and the principle is equally applicable to the case on hand.

What Mahalakshmi gave up under the deed was her interest in the property that fell to the share of Vedambal. That interest, as observed above, no doubt, consists of two portions, (1) the interest which she would possess for the lifetime of Vedambal, (2) the interest which she would possess beyond the lifetime of Vedambal in the event of her surviving Vedambal. Does it, therefore, follow that in regard to the second portion she was dealing with spes successionis and, therefore, that her alienation of that portion contravenes section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act? The argument seems to grotesque, and I have no hesitation in rejecting it as was done in Subbammal v. Krishna Aiyar (2). The fact is, that what she surrendered was her entire interest and it is not permissible to divide it into two interests for the purpose of making section 6 applicable.

Ramakkal v. Ramasami Natchan (3) is a very useful authority in this connection. A Hindu died leaving two widows who divided his property by a partition deed under which each took possession of her share with powers of alienation over the porperty comprised in it. Certain alienations were made by one widow who subsequently died. On the surviving widow claiming the whole of her husband's property including the portion she alienated, it was held that a widow could alienate for her life any estate which came to her as such and that she could, therefore, enter into such a deed as would preclude her from recovering during her life property which she had alienated to the full extent of such alienation, provided it did not extend beyond her life-interest.

The right to the property after Vedambal's death would, under the Hindu Law, vest in Mahalakshmi for her life. The latter disposed of that interest in favou of Vedambal. If Mahalakshmi is bound by the alienation, I fail to see how it can be questioned by any other. But then it is argued that the effect of Mahalakshmi's act was to accelerate the interest of the reversioners. The identical argument was advanced in Muthlyalu Chengappa v. Burada Gunta (7) and was overruled, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., observing: "that a male reversioner's right should be accelerated by agreements to which he is not a party is, to me, a very startling proposition," and I entirely concur in this view.

It is necessary to notice another argument put forward on behalf of the respondents. It is said that even assuming that the interest transferred to Vedambal was to enure for the lifetime of Mahalkshmi, still that interest would pass to Vedambal's heirs and that the plaintiffs, as her heirs, are entitled to maintain the action. The reference to heirs succeeding seems to me quite beside the point. Such interest as Vedambal acquired was alienated in favour of the appellants before us, and the question of inheritance, therefore, does not arise. In this view it is needless to enquire whether the plaintiffs are the streedhanam heirs of Vedambal. Order accordingly.

Where a pre-emption decree under section 14 of the Oudh Laws Act directs payment of the purchase-money within a specified time and the plaintiff commits a default in making such payment, the decree becomes void, and under the provisions of section 15 of the Act, the right of pre-emption is lost.

Nor can the pre-emptor prefer an appeal thereafter as there is no decree in existence.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 4th April 1922.

Messrs. Zahur Ahmad and Niamat Ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' suit for pre-emption of a certain property was decreed by the Trial Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur. The operative portion of the judgment is in these terms:—

"In view of the above findings, the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-emption on payment of Rs. 18,000 plus Rs. 130 paid by the defendants. The result is, that I decree the plaintiffs' suit for pre emption on payment of Rs. 18,130 to the defendants within three months."

The judgment was dated 4th April 1922. No payment was made as directed by the Court, but on 7th July 1922 the plaintiffs filed an appeal to this Court objecting to the amount which they were directed to pay by the First Court. Their plea in the First Court was, that the amount of sale consideration entered in the sale-deed was fictitious, and that the real sale price was less than Rs. 18,000. The plaintiffs' appeal is No. 39 of 1922. The defendants appealed subsequently (Appeal No. 47 of 1922) contesting the plaintiffs' right to pre-empt. To-day, when the appeals came up for hearing, the learned Counsel for the defendants raised a preliminary objection, that the plaintiffs had no right to appeal on 7th July 1922. His argument was, that as the plaintiffs failed to deposit in Court or to pay to the defendants the amount of sale consideration fixed by the First Court on or before the 4th of July 1922 they lost their right of pre-emption.

We think that this argument must prevail. Under section 14 of the Oudh Laws Act when the Court finds for the plaintiff, that he has a right of pre-emption, the decree has to specify a day on or before which the purchase-money or the amount to be paid to the purchaser shall be paid. Section 15 then goes on to indicate, that if such purchase-money or amount is not paid into Court before it rises on that day, the decree shall become void, and the plaintiff shall, so far as relates to such sale, lose the right of pre-emption over the property to which the decree relates. Even if the lower Court had power to extend the time for payment under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiffs' right to pre-empt would not be saved, because, according to the provisions of section 15, it was lost on the 5th of July 1922. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs argued that the "Court" in section 14 meant either the Court of trial or the Appellate Court and the "purchase-money" the amount which was finally settled either by the First Court or the Appellate Court. This argument is no answer to the loss of the right of pre-emption by the plaintiffs under the final clause of section 15. We are of opinion that, when the plaintiffs presented their appeal they had no right to pre-empt the property in suit, and so no appeal lay at the time from the decree of the lower Court. The plaintiffs' learned Counsel referred to a case of this Court: Bhola v. Sheo Darshan Singh (1), where in a revision application, the learned Judicial Commissioner of this Court gave it as his opinion, that an appeal lay from a decree of the Trial Court that the suit shall stand dismissed on non-payment of the purchase-money. A similar opinion was held in Bharath Singh v. Dharam Singh (2). With all respect, we may point out that the alternative form of the decree is imported from O. XX, r. 14 (1) (b). Under the Oudh Laws Act, sections 14 and 15, the Civil Court has no authority to pass any such decree in the alternative. The decree under section 14 becomes void and the plaintiff loses his right of pre-emption under the provisions of section 15. When there is no decree in existence and the plaintiff has no existing right of pre-emption, it is clear to us that he cannot appeal.

In our opinion, the appeal was incompetent and must fail. We, therefore, dismiss it with costs

The words "or in pursuance of the judgment" in the proviso to section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act must be read distributively and applied to the words "for a review of judgment" which precede.

Section 17 does not apply to an order setting aside the dismissal for default of a suit by a Small Cause Court Judge. The order dismissing the suit for default is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, nor is the application for an order to set the dismissal aside an application for an order to set aside a decree, still less is it an application for review of judgment.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 20th of January 1923.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A suit in the Court of Small Causes at Agra was dismissed for default of appearance by the plaintiff. Along with the order of dismissal was an order that the plaintiff should pay the defendant's costs, amounting to Rs. 18-8-o. Within limitation the plaintiff applied under O. IX, r. 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure for an order to set the dismissal aside. He satisfied the Judge of the Small Cause Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance, and obtained an order setting aside the dismissal. It does not appear that this order was coupled with any direction that the plaintiff should first pay the costs which had been awarded against him, though such an order would undoubtedly have been within the discretion of the Court. The result has been that the defendant has come to this Court in revision, contending that the order setting aside the dismissal was without jurisdiction, because the plaintiff has not first deposited the aforesaid sum of Rs. 18-8-o or given security in respect of the same. This contention is sufficiently answered by the wording of the proviso to section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887. The order dismissing the suit for default was not a decree, vide section 2, clause (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor was the application for an order to set the dismissal aside an application for an order to set aside a decree, vide O. IX, r. 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure; still less was it an application for review of judgment. The proviso in question, therefore, does not apply to this case. The words "or in pursuance of the judgment" in the said proviso must be read distributively and applied to the words, "for a review of judgment" which precede. I am informed that this view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in an unreported case. The point seems to me sufficiently clear on the wording of the Statute Law. I dismiss this application with costs.

Criminal revision being review of the order of the First Additional Magistrate, Moulmeingyun, in Criminal Regular No. 394 of 1922, dated 2nd December 1922.

Mr. E. W. Lambert, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In Criminal Miscellaneous No. 31 of 1922, the Township Magistrate of Moulmeingyun in the Myaungmya District issued orders under section 144, sub-section (i), of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the two petitioners to abstain from delivering political speeches within his Township. A Police Officer was sent to serve these orders, but they were returned with the report that the petitioners refused to accept service and to sign the orders. Thereupon the Township Magistrate filed a complaint in the Court of the First Additional Magistrate, Moulmeingyun, charging the petitioners under section 173 of the Indian Penal Code.

In explaining the particulars of the offence, the Magistrate said that the petitioners had refused the service of the orders on them and had stated that they would neither receive nor sign the duplicate orders, knowing that they were orders from a competent Magistrate, and that they thereby intentionally prevented the service of the said orders. Evidence was then recorded and, in the result, the petitioners were convicted and sentenced each to suffer one month's simple imprisonment. The petitioners then applied to the District Magistrate of Myaungmya, praying for revision of the convictions and sentences, but were unsuccessful. The learned District Magistrate held that the petitioners did, in fact, intentionally refuse the service on themselves of the Township Magistrate's orders under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that, therefore, they rendered themselves liable to the punishment awarded under section 173 of the Indian Penal Code. He did not go on to consider whether the refusal to accept service amounted to a prevention of service as required by the section.

The petitioners have now applied to this Court for revision on two main grounds, viz:—

(i) that the Township Magistrate was not specially empowered to issue an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and that, therefore, under clause (i) of section 530, Criminal Procedure Code, his proceedings are void; and (ii) that no offence under section 173, Indian Penal Code, was committed.

As to the first point, the Township Magistrate in cross-examination stated that he had been empowered to act under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Deputy Commissioner of Pyapon District. It does not appear from the record that the Local Government or the District Magistrate of Myaungmya District had conferred this power in the Township Magistrate, but the Trial Court has found, as a matter of fact, that the Township Magistrate was legally competent, and I do not consider it necessary to deal further with this point except to observe that it is desirable in these cases, that the record should show, in clear and unmistakeable terms, the authority under which a Magistrate, taking action under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, professes to act.

As regards the second point, the learned Assistant Government Advocate agrees that the convictions cannot stand. Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, requires that the service is to be effected in manner provided by section 134. Section 134, Criminal Procedure Code, lays it down that "the order shall, if practicable, be served in manner provided for service of a summons," and that "if such order cannot be so served, it shall be notified by proclamation, published in such manner as the Local Government may by rule direct, and a copy thereof shall be struck up at such place or places as may be fittest for conveying the information to the person against whom the order is made." Section 69, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that the summons shall, if practicable, be served personally, on the person summoned, by delivering or tendering to him one of the duplicates of the summons, and that every person on whom a summons is so served shall, if so required by the serving officer, sign a receipt therefor on the back of the other duplicate. Section 71 provides that, if service in the manner mentioned cannot, by the exercise of due diligence, be effected, the serving officer shall affix one of the duplicates of the summons to some conspicuous part of the house or homestead in which the person summoned ordinarily resides; and thereupon the summons shall be deemed to have been duly served.

In the case of Queen v. Punamalai Nadan (1) it was held that a refusal to receive a summons is not an offence under section 173 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the words "any manner prevents the service" cannot apply when the summons is tendered and refused, as it is good service.

This case has been followed in several Indian cases, and it has also been held that a refusal to acknowledge service is also no offence under the section.

In Zapantis v. Emperor (2), my brother Pratt, as Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, held that, since service can be effected by tender, under both the Civil and Criminal Codes of Procedure, a refusal to accept a summons, when tendered, does not amount to intentionally preventing service of summons. The Madras case quoted above was cited with approval.

Considering that the tender itself amounts to service, the refusal to accept the tender cannot be said to be a prevention of service. What seems to be required under section 173, Indian Penal Code, is some act of opposition offered to the officer serving the process.

The convictions and sentences are accordingly set aside; the petitioners are acquitted, and their bail-bonds will be cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 349, 562—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 53—S. 349, construction of—Order under section 562, whether punishment—C. P. Criminal Circular No. 1-28 para. 6, meaning of—Second Class Magistrate, whether competent to try adolescent accused.

It is a general rule of criminal jurisprudence that only an authority who has heard the evidence is competent to decide whether the accused is innocent or guilty, and any exception to this rule must be strictly construed. [p. 67, cols. 1 & 2.]

Emperor v. Ram Prasad, 36 Ind. Cas. 867; 12 N. L. R. 146; 18 Cr. L. J. 35, followed.

Sectin 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code creates one of such exceptions. [p. 67, col. 2.]

An order under section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code directing release upon probation of good conduct cannot be said to be a "punishment" in the sense in which that word is used in section 349 of the Code, for it is not one of the various kinds of punishment described in section 53 of the Penal Code. [p. 67, col. 2.]

The Central Provinces Criminal Circular No. 1-28 para. 6, lays down that adolescents should be tried by a Magistrate not below the rank of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate; it does not say that a Second Class Magistrate may try an adolescent but must refer the case for punishment to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such a reference is invalid. [p. 68, col. 1.]

In a case where adults and adolescents are tried jointly, even if the case of the adolescent accused can be validly referred under section 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is doubtful whether the case of the adult accused can be so referred, there being no other reason for referring the case of the latter except that they have been jointly tried with the adolescents. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the judgment of the Sessions Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 12th March 1923, in Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1923.

Mr. R. R. Jaywant, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The Second Class Magistrate, Pusad, tried eight accused jointly for rioting and hurt. He found that the accused were guilty of the offences but instead of passing sentences himself sent the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the reasons appearing in the following passage copied from his judgment:—

"In these accused, the accused Ganpati is 2 years old and Sambha 17 years of age. Both being juvenile offenders I am not competent to pass sentence on them under Criminal Circular No. 1-28 paragraph 6. I, therefore, submit the proceedings to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pusad, for favour of adequate punishment under section 349, Criminal Procedure Code."

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate after hearing arguments, but without taking any evidence, wrote a judgment convicting all the accused including the two adolescents on whom he only inflicted fines.

At the commencement of his judgment the Sub-Divisional Magistrate writes that the case was referred to him by the Second Class Magistrate as two of the accused were adolescents and in the Magistrate's opinion they deserved punishments different in kind from what he could inflict. This is not a proper interpretation of what the Second Class Magistrate has written.

As stated in Emperor v. Ram Prasad (1) it is a general rule that only an authority who has heard the evidence is competent to decide whether the accused is innocent or guilty. Any exception to this rule must be strictly construed. Section 349, Criminal Procedure Code, creates one of such exceptions. That section provides,—

"Whenever a Magistrate of the Second or Third Class, having jurisdiction, is of opinion, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution and the accused, that the accused is guilty, and that he ought to receive a punishment different in kind from, or more severe than that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under section 106, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings and forward the accused to the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

"The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and re-call and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law."

Now, this is not a case where the Second Class Magistrate could not have inflicted a sufficiently severe punishment on the adolescent accused, nor does the Magistrate profess to refer the case on that ground. Again, it is not a case where the Magistrate considered that punishment different in kind from what he was competent to inflict was necessary. The learned Standing Counsel states that the Second Class Magistrate probably desired the case to be dealt with under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, he contends, the Magistrate may be said to have been of the opinion that the adolescent accused should receive a punishment different in kind from what he was empowered to inflict. In my opinion an order under section 562 directing release upon probation of good conduct cannot be said to be a punishment. It is not one of the various kinds of punishments described in section 53 of the Indian Penal Code. Under section 562 the sentence of punishment is postponed and something which is not a punishment is substituted therefor. In any case, the Magistrate was not referring the case on that ground. His sole reason was that he was not competent to pass any sentence at all on the adolescent accused under the Judicial Commissioner's

(1) 36 Ind. Cas 867; 12 N. L. R. 146; 18 Cr. L. J. 35.

Circular. He has, however, misunderstood the Circular. The Circular states that adolescents should be tried by a Magistrate not below the rank of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. It does not say that a Second Class Magistrate may try an adolescent but must refer the case for punishment to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

There being no case for reference under section 349 the reference was contrary to law and as it resulted in the accused being sentenced by a Magistrate who had not heard the evidence at all, it must be deemed to have prejudiced the accused and resulted in a failure of justice.

It is, moreover, doubtful whether in a case where adults and adolescents are tried jointly even if the case of the adolescents could have been validly referred under section 349, that of the adult accused jointly tried with them could also have been so referred, there being no other reason for referring the case of the latter except that they have been jointly tried with adolescents.

The conviction and sentence by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate are set aside. The Second Class Magistrate was not legally incompetent to try the case but as required by the Circular the case ought to have been tried by a Magistrate not below the rank of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, I direct a trial de novo by a Magistrate competent under that Circular. This order governs also Criminal Revision Applications Nos. 88-B to 91-B of 1923. The bail bonds of such of the applicants as are on bail will be cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 439—Proceedings under s. 145—Preliminary finding, necessity of—Finding as to possession—Order without jurisdiction—Revision.

In the absence of a preliminary finding as to the existence of a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace, a Magistrate is not justified in taking any action under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 68, col. 2.]

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the scope of a Magistrate's inquiry is limited to a finding as to possession, and on that finding the only order which he legally can pass is one declaring which of the disputing parties is entitled to possession and forbidding all disturbances of his possession until evicted in due course of law. A finding with respect to the merits of the claims of the respective parties to a right of possession of the subject of dispute is a finding wholly without jurisdiction. [p. 96, col. 1.]

Although the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction with respect to proceedings under section 145, it will nevertheless interfere with an order which is without jurisdiction. [p. 69, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Thazi, in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 95 of 1922.

Mr. Ganguli, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order purporting to be passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the applicant, Maung Po Tin, to evacuate certain land and to refrain from interfering with the working of the land by Maung Tha Shun, Maung Po Saung or their tenants.

Applicant, Po Tin, himself asked for an order against the present respondents and the Magistrate proceeded to deal with his application with complete disregard of the express provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

He failed to record a preliminary finding that he was satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed and without this he was not justified in taking any action under section 145.

He then issued notice to respondents to put in statements of their rights to the land instead of to the parties to put in statements of their respective claims, as respects the fact of actual possession of the land in dispute.

He, then, in the course of the enquiry, went at considerable length into the question of the title of the parties although sub-section (4) expressly lays down that it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether any and which of the parties was, at the date of his preliminary order, in possession of the subject in dispute without reference to the merits of the claims of any of the parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute. On the facts, the Magistrate found that Maung Po Tin was in possession and did not find that he had forcibly or wrongfully dispossessed the respondents within two months of date of the order.

If he proposed to pass any order under section 145 therefore, the only order the Magistrate could legally pass on his findings as to possession was one declaring Maung Po Tin to be entitled to possession and forbidding all disturbances of his possession until evicted in due course of law. The Magistrate, however, proceeded to lay down the proposition that it is presumed that possession means rightful possession, and under cover of this wholly unwarranted presumption which is entirely opposed to the spirit of the section, held that, because Maung Tin, who mortgaged the land to Maung Po Tin, had already signed on agreement consenting to the distribution of the estate of which the land forms part, the land must be held to have been in possession of Maung Tha Shun.

This finding was wholly without jurisdiction, and deliberately went behind the actual fact of possession to which the inquiry is strictly limited by law. It was an adjudication on the merits in contradiction to the actual facts as to possession and was opposed not merely to the express provisions of section 145 but to an array of case-law on what constitutes possession under the section.

Although the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction with respect to proceedings under section 145 there is ample authority for interference, when, as in the present instance, the order although purporting to be under section 145, is in susbstance not justifiable under the section; or, in other words, is without jurisdiction.

In the proceedings now in question there has been a distinct abuse of the jurisdiction of the Court.

I set aside the Magistrate's order.

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 17th/19th February 1923.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah, Hakim Uadin, Nazir Uddin, and Rabi Shankar, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Bhagwati Prasad, about 24 years of age, was convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow of two offences under section 302, Indian Penal Code, of causing the deaths of two old women Musammat Kallo, a Kahariin, and Musammat Rani, a Brahman. The murders were committed on 10th February 1922, and the order of the learned Sessions Judge was passed on 17th February 1923. In appeal it is admitted that the two murders were committed by Bhagwati Prasad. All the three assessors in the lower Court were of the same opinion. The finding, therefore, of the lower Court is upheld that Bhagwati Prasad committed the acts alleged by the prosecution.

The question of difficulty is whether by reason of unsoundness of mind, he was incapable of knowing the nature of the act alleged as constituting the murder, or that his act was wrong or contrary to law. The circumstances in which the two women were murdered are not in doubt and can easily be told. At about 8-30 P.M. on the night of the 10th February 1922 cries were heard coming from the direction of the accused's portion of a house in which he lived separately from his two brothers, Babu Sheo Prasad and Babu Ajudhia Prasad. These two brothers on hearing the cries went out and saw the prisoner beating the woman Musammat Rani with a piece of wood. The woman was hit on the head and so badly injured at the time that with difficulty she crawled to Sheo Prasad's quarters. Sheo Prasad went to the Police outpost and a Head Constable arrived at the house with two constables. The prisoner made no attempt to run away or conceal himself. When the Police arrived they, with others, went inside the prisoner's room and made a discovery, which was to find the dead body of another woman Musammat Kallo lying on a bed inside the prisoner's room. There were injuries on the head of this woman and a considerable amount of blood had dropped from the bed and collected in a pool near it. Musammat Rani died from the effects of her injuries on the 12th of February. The post mortem examination of the two women disclosed several contused wounds about the head. On the body of Musammat Kallo there were seven contused wounds, five of them round about the left ear. The medical opinion was that death was due to the fracture of the skull bones and that the wounds were probably caused by a blunt weapon. Musammat Rani also showed symptoms of death from the fracture of the skull.

The appellant so far has said very little about the crimes. It is in evidence that when the Police arrived and the Havildar in the presence of the prisoner called out "Who committed this act?" the constable replied pointing to the prisoner "This is the man" and the Havildar said "arrest him he has shed blood" the prisoner uttered the words "arrest me, I have shed blood." The inquiry prior to commitment started almost immediately; and on 22nd of February 1922, the Committing Magistrate was unable to obtain any response from the prisoner to questions put to him. When the prisoner was put up on his trial in April 1922 in the Court of Session it was found that by reason of unsoundness of mind he was incapable of making his defence. During that inquiry Colonel Clements, who had the prisoner under observation from the 8th March 1922 to the 18th of April 1922, was examined as a witness. The prisoner was not placed under medical observation prior to the 8th of March 1922. The Medical Officer was satisfied from his observation that the prisoner was insane and was not simulating signs of sanity. He took no interest in the observation kept on him, and was indifferent to what went round. He was morose and had fixed delusions. He complained of the visit of a black man every night at 1 A.M. who stayed with him for an hour or two, seized and beat him. During this observation the prisoner was not able to distinguish right from wrong and was not responsible for his actions. This was the view of the Medical Officer and the prisoner was kept in a Lunatic Asylum until the beginning of this year. In February he was considered capable of making his defence, and so was put on his trial. All the three assessors were of opinion that by reason of unsoundness of mind the prisoner did not know the nature of his act, or that he was doing wrong when he committed the murder. As already stated, the learned Sessions Judge disagreed. What the learned Judge has said in his interesting judgment is that the prisoner, by reason of unsoundness of mind and delusions, believed in power to be obtained through human sacrifice, and that he killed the two women under the effect of this delusion. The learned Judge was of opinion that the prisoner should be dealt with as if the facts with respect to which the delusion existed were real. Even if the facts were real, human sacrifice would not be justified, so the appellant must have known that he was doing wrong when he committed the murders. This theory as to the appellant's belief in the power to be gained by human sacrifice is based on the contents of two vernacular books Kali-ka-puran and Indarjal. The learned Government Pleader, who has taken considerable pains over this matter, has been unable to find the book

BHAGWATI PRASAD v. EMPEROR.

Kali-ki-puran. Two chapters of that book are on the file. The book Indarjal is produced in this Court. It is, however, admitted that neither book was found in the possession of the prisoner, and both were put in by the investigating officer to support the possibility of the prisoner having such delusion. There is no evidence of any kind which would entitle this Court to draw the inference that the prisoner had ever read either book. Indarjal contains references to owls and to certain charms obtained from the feathers of that bird. The prisoner kept owls and decked himself with the feathers of the bird. This connection, however, is not sufficient to establish the prisoner's belief in human sacrifice and that he killed the two women as such sacrifice.

There can be no doubt that the prisoner's mind had been unhinged and that he had shown signs of insanity since May or June 1921. His behaviour was generally peculiar. He wore a garland of animal bones and tied amulets of red cloth round his arms. There is evidence that he had delusion of such an amulet placed in his mouth rendering him invisible. Another delusion of his was that a black man and others followed him with guns with the intention of shooting him. Two or three hours prior to the murder he had complained to both his brothers that the black man was after him to shoot him. Ten days prior to the murder he had hit the witness Sheo Darshan from behind with a stick. The learned Sessions Judge appears to accept this incident as evidence of the appellant's desire for human sacrifice, but the inference appears to me to be far fetched. Obviously, the prisoner was so deranged in his mind for months prior to the occurrence that it would not be said with certainty what particular delusion impelled him to commit a certain act. The present case, in my opinion, stands by itself because we have no indication from the prisoner's future acts as to the state of his mind at the time of the commission of the offence. In the case quoted by the learned Judge of Muhammad Husain v. Emperor (1) and in Emperor v. Harka (2) the Court obtained considerable help from the words and acts of the prisoner to draw the conclusion that the prisoner in each case knew that the act he was committing was wrong in law. In the Allahabad case the Sadhu, who had killed a child, admitted his knowledge of the act being wrong and explained that a Goddess had told him that if he killed some one she will appear before him in person. In the Oudh case the prisoner went to the Police Station and made a specific report as to the incidents which led to his committing the murder of his wife. The majority of Judges correctly laid down with reference to the facts of that case that the burden lay on the accused to satisfy the Court that his unsoundness of mind was of such a nature and degree that by reason thereof he was incapable of knowing the nature of the acts or of knowing that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. In the Oudh cases and similar cases the prisoners suffered from delusions and from temporary fits of insanity and were able actively to defend themselves when tried. In the present case the prisoner has appeared to me to have been always on the brink of insanity and his participation in the trial before the lower Court was exceedingly slight. He contented himself by a denial of the commission of the murders and had not the capacity to give any explanation. The medical witness gave an opinion which may be an explanation that the prisoner has possibly forgotten the incidents of the 10th of February 1922. In a case like the present, a Court can judge only by inference to be derived from prior and subsequent conduct of the prisoner as to the state of his mind at the time of the commission of the offence. The circumstances of the present case are such that the only possible inference, in my opinion, is that the appellant was incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong. One woman was an old servant of the family and another a harmless dependent. There was no motive for the murder. The appellant made no attempt to disappear after the murder, or to offer any explanation in extenuation of his crime. His words after the murders "Arrest me, I have shed blood!" were merely a mechanical repitition of words spoken in his presence. He took no interest in the inquiry prior to committal and the very first time the Medical Officer saw him he was found to be quite insane. For months prior to the occurrence he had shown symptoms of insanity, and it was after a stay of nearly a year in the Lunatic Asylum that he was considered to be in a fit state to undergo his trial. The inference seems irresistible to my mind that the appellant has been in a continuous state of insanity, and whatever act he did he did in an irresponsible way and did not know the nature thereof or that it was wrong if it happened to be a wrong act according to law.

I set aside the convictions under section 302, Indian Penal Code. I hold that the appellant did commit the acts which would have been murders except for his unsoundness of mind which brought his acts under the provisions of section 84 of the Indian Penal Code. I direct him to be kept in safe custody in the Lunatic Asylum at Bareilly. Until he is removed to the Lunatic Asylum he shall be kept in safe custody and under proper control in the prison where he may happen to be imprisoned at present. The learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow shall be requested to take proper action for the carrying out of this order and the submitting of information and of a history sheet to the Local Government.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 355-B OF 1921.

MRS. MAY BOUDVILLE—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 202—Magistrate holding preliminary inquiry, whether debarred from trying case.

The mere fact that a Magistrate holds a preliminary inquiry into the truth of a complaint, does not incapacitate him from trying the case.

Queen-Empress v. Maganlal, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 530; Cr. Rg. No. 63 of 1890, followed.

Criminal revision from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Tenasserim, dated the 6th August 1921.

Mr. Robertson, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—Applicant, May Boudville, was convicted of criminal breach of trust by the First Additional Magistrate, Tavoy. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge considered that the Magistrate ought not to have tried the case as he had already in a preliminary inquiry come to the conclusion that there was sufficient evidence to justify a prosecution. The Sessions Judge, therefore, without going into the merits of the case, set aside the conviction and sentence, and ordered a re trial. This order I am now asked to revise and dispose of the case on its merits.

The trial before the Magistrate was perfectly regular and the fact that he had held a preliminary inquiry did not incapacitate him from trying the case.

If this view were to be adopted then every Magistrate who held a preliminary inquiry into the truth of a complaint would be debarred from trying the case.

There is no reason to consider that the Magistrate was prejudiced or that accused did not have a fair trial. The record of the Magistrate is as full as the law requires it to be and the judgment of the Sessions Court, in my opinion, discloses no valid reason for ordering a re-trial.

There was ample evidence on the record to enable the Sessions Judge to decide the appeal on its merits, and there is no reason to suppose fresh evidence would be forthcoming at a re-trial.

It is quite simple to separate the irrelevant and inadmissible evidence on the record.

I do not think, however, that this Court should pass orders on the merits on revision.

Following the procedure adopted by the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (1), I set aside the order of the Sessions Court on appeal and direct that the appeal be re heard on its merits by the same Court.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 97—Private defence of property—Possession, re-taking of.

The fact that a person has title to a plot of land, does not give him the right to forcibly eject a trespasser in peaceful possession of the same. His remedy is to eject him by civil process.

The right of private defence of property does not cover a case of taking or re-taking possession by means of criminal force or show of criminal force.

Criminal revision from an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 31st January 1923.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the conviction of the four petitioners by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr, of an offence under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code and the sentence of fine of Rs. 60 each, which conviction and sentence have been upheld on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr.

The facts alleged were that the complainant, Jawahir Halwai, took settlement from the landlord of a piece of waste land in Jamalpur Bazaar in January 1922, obtained permission from the Municipality in May to erect a fuel gola upon it, and sold fuel there for several months until the 11th October when a mob of some twenty persons including the petitioners came to the plot and cleared it of the fencing and all its contents. The Trial Court found that the complainant was in actual peaceful possession of the disputed land, and that although the petitioners and others have right and title to the same, they were not in actual physical possession but without justification came to the land to assert possession by force. In appeal the learned Sessions Judge found that there could be no doubt that the complainant actually "managed to obtain possession of the land" in dispute in January 1922 and was in possession thereof on the date of occurrence, even if the petitioner, Jasuram, had title it was not clear that he had actually obtained possession at any time of the small plot of party land in dispute and it was certainly the complainant who was in possession at the date of occurrence. He found also that the occurrence took place and the complainant's gola had been demolished as alleged, and that the four petitioners were members of the unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to take possession by criminal force or show thereof of the land on which complainant had his gola.

It is contended that upon the facts found the case does not come within the definition of unlawful assembly inasmuch as the land being the property of the petitioner, Jasuram, the complainant was a trespasser whom Jasuram was entitled to eject from the land. I am unable to accede to this contentton. In the first place, it is not quite clear on the findings of the learned Sessions Judge that this small part of waste land was within the area purchased by Jasuram. But even if it was, the finding is that he certainly had not been in possession for many months while the complainant had been and had carried on his gola on the land. Possibly Jasuram may have a right to eject complainant from the plot by civil process. But he is not within his rights when he takes a mob of men and forcibly clears the person in possession of the land in respect of which he has only title without possession. The right of private defence of property does not avail him, section 99 of the Penal Code expressly sets out that there is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities who in this instance were close by. That right does not cover a case of taking or re-taking possession by means of criminal force or show of criminal force' as in the present instance.

In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge was entitled upon the record before him to come to the conclusion of fact at which he has arrived, he has correctly applied the law to the facts and there is no reason to interfere with his decision.

The application is rejected.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 406—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 179—Criminal breach of trust—Place of trial of offence—Loss to beneficiary, whether "consequence" of offence.

For the application of section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is essential that the offence should depend on the act done and on the consequence which has ensued. [p. 75, cols. 1 & 2.]

Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha, 41 Ind. Cas. 138; 44 C. 912; 21 C. W. N. 573; 25 C. L. J. 451; 18 Cr. L. J. 762, followed.

The loss caused to a person by an act of misappropriation of his property by another is not an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal misappropriation. The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued but only on the act which has been done. [p. 75, col. 2.]

In re Rambilas, 26 Ind. Cas. 136; 38 M. 639; 16 M. L. T. 505; (1914) M. W. N. 894; 29 M. L. J. 175; 15 Cr. L. J. 688, George Langridge v. Grace Atkins, 17 Ind. Cas. 792; 35 A. 29; 10 A. L. Therefore, a person cannot prosecute another for criminal misappropriation of his property under section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code at the place of his own residence on the ground that, as a consequence of the act of the accused, wrongful loss was caused to him at that place. [p. 75, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, dated the 14th December 1922, passed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 828 of 1922.

Mr. Patker, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mya Bu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant, a dealer in silk goods, had agencies at Kobe and Yokohama in Japan. The accused was his agent at Kobe, and the agent at Yokohama was Sulaiman. On the 28th September 1920, the complainant remitted a sum of Rs. 10,000 yen to the accused with instructions to pay the same to Sulaiman; the sum is stated to have been received by the accused, who, however, failed to pay it to Sulaiman and misappropriated it. Later, another sum was remitted and the accused misappropriated a portion of it.

The complainant, therefore, filed his complaint in Rangoon whence the monies were sent through a bank indicated by the accused. The latter pleaded in limine that, in view of section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Court has no jurisdiction unless the sanction of the Local Government is first obtained. The learned Magistrate acquiesced in this and directed the complainant to procure the necessary sanction. The complainant applies in revision and seeks to have the Magistrate's order set aside on the main ground that, since wrongful loss was caused to him at Rangoon and such loss was a consequence of the accused's act, the offence is triable by the Rangoon Court under sub-section (2) of section 181, read with section 179.

In Abdul Salam v. Ramnewal Singh (1) a precisely similar contention was considered by the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma (now my brother Pratt). The case of Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (2), Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (3) In re Rambilas(4) and Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Com- pany, Ltd. (5) were referred to, and it was held that section 179, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply in circumstances as such appear in the proceeding.

The question whether loss resulting from criminal breach of trust can be said to be such a consequence as completes the offence was further considered by the Allahabad High Court in George Langridge v. Grace Atkins (6), and it was held by Muhammad Rafique, J., following O'Brien's case (2) and Mahadeo v. Emperor (7) and distinguishing Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (3), that in a criminal breach of trust loss to the victim is a consequence which completes the offence. The element of "wrongful gain" was not, apparently, taken into account.

The same point came up before a Bench of the Madras High Court in In re Rambilas (4), in which all the Allahabad cases referred to above were cited and commented upon. The effect of section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code, read with section 405 of the Indian Penal Code, was considered and the finding arrived at was as follows:—" The offence of criminal breach of trust is completed (assuming a preliminary trust) by the misappropriation or conversion of the property (in this case the cash proceeds of the hundis) dishonestly, i.e., with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. It is only the intention which is essential. Whether wrongful gain or loss actually results is immaterial; it is a consequence, but no essential part of the offence, and a person is not accused of the offence by reason of it."

The Bench, therefore, decided to follow the ruling of Karamat Hussain, J., in Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (3). Their decision was in turn followed by a Bench of Calcutta High Court in Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha (8), wherein it was thus laid down:—

"Now for the application of section 179 it is essential that the offence should depend on an act done and on a consequence which has ensued. But loss to one person, though a normal result of an act of misappropriation by another, is not an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal misappropriation. The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender, irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued, but only on the act which has been done. Section 179, therefore, does not in terms apply."

In this view I agree. Applying it to the present case, it is clear that the conversion took place in Japan, that the accused intended wrongful gain for himself in that country and that, therefore, the offence was committed there within the meaning of section 181 (2). No significance can be attached to the circumstance that the Rangoon Bankers to whom the complainant actually paid the monies were indicated by the accused and were hence, in a sense, his agents. The amounts were actually received by the accused at Kobe and it was only after their receipt that he misappropriated them.

The Rangoon Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint, unless specially empowered to do so under the provision of section 188.

The application is dismissed.

H. K. BHEDWAR v. C. S. R. RAO.

A District Judge has no jurisdiction to sanction a prosecution for perjury in respect of an affidavit sworn before him as District Registrar. To such a case section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, has no application.

Criminal appeal from an order of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The sanction cannot stand either on facts or law. In the first place, on the face of it, Dina Nath has not committed perjury because the assertions which he made were, according to his affidavit, not from his personal knowledge but from what he had been told, and there is nothing whatever to show that these assertions were not correct. Apart from that, the District Judge could not possibly sanction a prosecution for perjury in respect of an affidavit sworn before him as District Registrar. Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application.

I allow this application and set aside the proceedings of the District Judge, dated the 25th September 1922, ordering the prosecution of Dina Nath on a charge under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

Rao Saheb C. S. R. RAO—ACCUSED—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act LXV of 1860), ss. 415, 417—Cheating—Loss, likelihood of.

The petitioner, a Book-maker of the Calcutta Royal Turf Club, allowed the opposite party to take bets on credit. In respect of debts due to the petitioner on account of bets the opposite party gave the petitioner a cheque and the petitioner, relying on the assurance of the opposite party that there would be no difficulty in getting the cheque cashed, allowed him to take further bets on credit and the opposite party became further indebted to the petitioner. Thereafter, the petitioner presented the cheque for payment and it was dishonoured. Then he applied to the Magistrate for process under section 417 Indian Penal Code:

Held, that it could not be said that the act which the petitioner was induced to do by reason of the deception, caused or was likely to cause loss or damage to him as it did not follow that had the petitioner refused to take bets on credit, the opposite party would have made the same wagers in cash, and that therefore, the case did not come within the four corners of section 415, of the Penal Code. [p. 77, col. 2.]

Babus Monmotha Nath Mukherjee and Narain Chandra Kar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—In this case a Rule was issued, calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause why the order dismissing the petitioner's complaint should not be set aside and why further enquiry into the said complaint should not be made and process issued against the opposite party under section 417, Indian Penal Code, or such other further order made as to this Court might seem fit and proper.

The facts giving rise to the application on which the Rule was issued, are as follows :—The petitioner is a licensed Book-maker of the Calcutta Royal Turf Club and has a permanent book for the season 1922-1923 within the first enclosure of the Calcutta Race Course. On the assurance of the opposite party, who is a Deputy Director of Commercial Intelligence, employed under the Government of India, that he would pay up his losses, if any, punctually on the settling day, the petitioner allowed the opposite party to take bets on credit on the 9th of December 1922. The debts due to the petitioner by and from the opposite party in respect of bets on credit amounted to a sum of Rs. 1,591. The opposite party failed to pay the said sum of Rs. 1,591 on the then following settling day and accordingly the petitioner decided not to allow to the opposite party any more credit until the said sum was paid off in full. Thereupon the opposite party sent to the petitioner on the 15th December 1922, a crossed cheque for Rs. 1,591 on the Indian Industrial Bank. The said cheque was sent in the evening after banking hours. The opposite party assured the petitioner that the said cheque would be paid on presentation and on such assurance the petitioner allowed the opposite party to take bets with him on credit on the 16th December 1922, and in respect of such bets taken on credit on the 16th December 1922, the opposite party became indebted to the petitioner to the extent of Rs. 3,450. The cheque referred to above was presented for payment on the 18th December 1922, when it was dishonoured. The opposite party was thereupon communicated with and he gave a fresh cheque for Rs. 5,041 to cover his losses on the 9th and the 16th of December and assured the petitioner that there would be no difficulty whatsoever in getting the said cheque cashed. It appears that the petitioner relied on the assurance of the opposite party and allowed him to take further bets on credit on the 23rd and 26th December 1922. The opposite party became indebted to the petitioner in a further sum of Rs. 752. Meanwhile, the said cheque for Rs. 5,041 was presented for payment on the 28th December 1922 when it was dishonoured. The petitoner thereafter made various efforts to obtain payment of the two sums of Rs. 5,041 and Rs. 752 but without success. Eventually, on the 1st March 1923, the petitioner applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutte for process against the opposite party under section 417, Indian Penal Code, for having cheated him in respect of the said cheques. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that on the facts no case of cheating had been made out and accordingly dismissed the petitioner's application under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code.

On behalf of the petitioner it has been contended before us that the opposite party by representing to him that the cheques in question would be honoured and thereby the dues up to the 16th of December would be satisfied, induced the petitioner to accept his bets on credit, i. e., bets which the opposite party would othersise have had to pay in cash, and that the petitoner by accepting such bets on credit lost a sum of Rs. 752 which would otherwise have come to his till. It is argued, therefore, that the opposite party has deceived the petitioner and has fraudulently or dishonestly induced the petitoner to take bets on credit from him, which he (the petitioner) would not have done, if he were not so deceived, and which act has caused him a loss of Rs. 752.

In my opinion, although it is quite clear that the petitioner was deceived and thereby induced to take bets on credit from the opposite party, I am unable to say that the act which the petitioner was induced to do by reason of such deception has caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to him in body, mind, reputation or property. It does not follow that if the petitioner had refused to take bets on credit from the opposite party, the latter would of a certainty have had to offer bets by paying cash. The opposite party might not have offered any bets at all. In order to bring home the offence of cheating against the opposite party, the petitioner would have to show that his case comes within the four corners of section 415, Indian Penal Code; and in this I think the petitioner has failed. The analogy suggested on behalf of the petitioner about a person obtaining goods or money by means of a cheque which he knows will not be paid, and thereby being guilty of the offence of cheating, does not, in my opinion, hold good in this case.

I would accordingly discharge this Rule.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this application for revision has arisen are these:—

The petitioner, Mr. H. K. Bhedwar is a licensed Book-maker of the Royal Calcutta Turf Club and operates in the first enclosure. The opposite party is a Deputy Director of Commercial Intelligence. The petitioner allowed the opposite party to bet with him, on the 9th December and as a result of this the opposite party lost Rs. 1,591. The opposite party did not meet his obligations on settling day and so the petitioner refused to allow him to bet on credit.

The opposite party then gave petitioner a cheque for Rs. 1,591 on December 18th. In consideration of receiving the cheque the petitoner allowed the opposite party to bet with him on credit on December 16th. The petitioner allowed this on the understanding that the cheque for Rs. 1,591 would be met on presentation. The opposite party lost on the 16th December a further sum of Rs. 3,450. On the 18th December the petitioner presented the cheqe for Rs. 1,951 payment of which was refused there being no funds to meet it. The opposite party represented to the petitioner that he had put his account in order and gave him on the 22nd December a fresh cheque for Rs. 5,041 to cover his losses on the 9th and 16th. The cheque was made over to the petitioner on the 22nd December after Banking hours. On the strength of the cheque the petitioner allowed the opposite party to bet with him on credit on the 23rd and 26th December when the opposite party lost a further sum of Rs. 752. This cheque also was dishonoured on presentation.

The petitioner's case is that the opposite party has cheated him. That the opposite party knew quite well when he issued the cheques he did that they would not be met and that by giving these cheques to the petitioner which he knew would not be honoured he deceived the petitioner, as the result of which deception loss was caused to the petitioner. The petitioner laid a complaint against the opposite party charging him under section 417, Indian Penal Code, with cheating. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that no criminal offence was disclosed. The point to be here decided is, whether, accepting the facts as alleged by the petitioner and holding that the opposite party knew quite well that the cheque would not be met, the offence of cheating has been committed. Obviously, if the facts are true the opposite party did deceive the petitioner and by so doing induced him to do an act which he would not otherwise have done, namely, allowed him to bet with him on credit. The question then to be decided is whether the allowing of the opposite party to bet on credit is an act which caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to the petitioner in mind, body or reputation. Mr. Mukherjee contends that it has cost the petitioner the loss of Rs. 752 which the opposite party lost to the petitioner on the 23rd and 26th of December. His argument is that if the opposite party had not been allowed to bet on credit he would have wagered the same amount in cash, that hence the petitioner would have received Rs. 752 in cash and he had lost that amount, and so has suffered loss. I do not think, however, we are entitled to assume for one moment that if the opposite party had not been allowed to bet on credit he would have made the same wagers in cash. It is at the most a possibility and I should say, on the facts hardly a probability. It cannot be said that the petitioner is any the worse off than he was before because the opposite party as the result of the deceit lost Rs. 752 to him and has not yet paid it. It has been suggested in argument that the petitioner might as the result of bets on one horse give longer odds on some other horse and so suffered loss. In the petition there is no suggestion of this and it seems at the best a remote contingency hardly capable of proof.

The question is not free from difficulty but after a careful consideration I am of opinion that it cannot be said that allowing the opposite party to bet on credit was an act which caused loss or damage to the petitioner.

The learned Presidency Magistrate was, therefore, right in the view he took that no criminal offence had been disclosed and I would discharge this Rule.

Where the allegations against two accused persons are mutually exclusive, i. e., where the allegation is that either one or the other committed the offence, they cannot be tried together.

Criminal applications against an order of the Magistrate, Tharrawaddy, dated the 5th December 1921 exercising powers under section 30.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the exhibit counterfeit 100-rupee currency note was found by Sub-Inspector Police Po Gwin in the possession of 1st accused, Kyaw Dwe (appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 1309) on 8th October 1921. He said that he had got it from Po Yun and produced witnesses. Po Yun was arrested on 12th October. He said that it was Po Chit who had given the note to Kyaw Dwe and produced witnesses. Po Chit had been arrested on 11th October and denied having anything to do with it. The Police sent up all three together for trial making the different accused's witnesses the witnesses for the prosecution. Kyaw Dwe has been convicted under section 489C and Po Chit under 489B the Special Power Magistrate acquitting Po Yun because he disbelieves the prosecution-witnesses who have given evidence against him and in favour of Po Chit.

The trial was bad for misjoinder of accused with reference to section 239, Criminal Procedure Code. Where the allegations against two accused are mutually exclusive, as the Magistrate has regarded them in this case against Po Yun and Po Chit, they cannot be tried together, i. e., where the allegation is that either one or other of them committed the offence. See Azim-ud-din v. Emperor (1).

The unusual and confusing procedure, in this case of prosecuting on the evidence of conflicting defence witnesses, should have put the Magistrate on his guard.

The trial was also bad for misjoinder, in that the evidence is against the supposition that Kyaw Dwe knew or had reason to believe that the note was counterfeit at the time when he accepted it. Any subsequent retaining of it by him in such circumstances as to amount to an offence under section 489C would, therefore, not be a part of the same transaction to which the acts of those guilty under section 489B in connection with it belonged.

I, therefore, set aside the convictions and sentences in the cases of Kyaw Dwe and Po Chit and direct that they be re-tried separately by the Additional Special Power Magistrate, Tharrawaddy. The defence witnesses should be examined for the defence and not for the prosecution in each case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 435 (3)—Initial order, failure to make, effect of—Revision.

Where in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate fails to make the initial order prescribed by sub-section (1) of that section, and has also not made at any subsequent stage of the proceedings an order which essentially complies with the requirements of that sub-section, the proceedings are without jurisdiction, and cannot be regarded as proceedings under section 145. [p. 80, col. 2.]

In circumstances such as the foregoing, the High Court is not precluded by section 435 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code from interfering in revision. [p. 80, col. 2.]

Application for revision of an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gujranwala, at Sialkot, dated the 20th July 1922, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class at Ahmadnagar, District Gujranwala, dated the 12th June 1922.

HAKAM v. RALIA RAM.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision of an order purporting to have been passed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate omitted to make the initiatory order required by sub-section (1) of that section, and this omission is the main ground on which the application is based.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad on behalf of the petitioners relies on Abdulla Khan v. Gunda (1), Tara Chand v. Behari Lal (2) and Dewan Chand v. Queen-Empress (3). In the first of those cases a copy of the initiatory order had not been served or published as required by sub-section (3), and in the second case no initiatory order had been made, but in addition to this the Magistrate in both those cases had omitted to take the evidence of the witnesses of the parties, whereas there is no such omission in the present case. Dewan Chand v. Queen-Empress (3) is also not a case analogous to the present one.

Dr. G. C. Narang on behalf of the respondents has cited Sukh Lal v. Tara Chand Ta (4), Debi Prasad v. Sheodat Rai (5), In the matter of Chinnappudayan (6), Muhammad Sharif v. Dhanpat Rai (7), Nur Bakhsh v. Emperor (8) and Sajad Hussain v. Nanak Chand (9), but those cases also are not exactly in point. In the first the Magistrate had drawn up the initiatory order, but had only omitted to direct the publication of a copy of the order. In the second and third cases also the defects in the proceedings were different from that in the present case. In Muhammad Sharif v. Dhanpat Rai (7), although the Magistrate had omitted to record a preliminary order under sub-section (1) of section 145 he afterwards, in the presence of the parties, recorded an order which essentially complied with sub-section (1), and it was for that reason held that the proceedings were not wholly without jurisdiction. The same was the case in Sajad Hussain v. Nanak Chand (9) and in Nur Bakhsh v. Emperor (8). Chevis, J., merely followed Muhammad Sharif v. Dhanpat Rai (7).

In the present case, however, the initial defect in the proceedings was not remedied subsequently. It is true that at one hearing the Magistrate directed the petitioners to file a written statement, but this was not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. Under section 145 (1) it is first of all essential that the Magistrate should be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists and that he should make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, whereas in this case no such order was passed at any stage of the proceedings. Under sub-section (5) any person interested is entitled to show that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, and in such case the order passed under sub-section (1) will be cancelled and all further proceedings thereon will be stayed.

It is clear, therefore, that the omission to pass an order under sub-section (1) is not a mere technical defect. Where the Magistrate has not made the initial order prescribed by that sub-section, and has also not made at any subsequent stage of the proceedings an order which essentially complies with the requirements of that sub-section, the proceedings are, in my opinion, without jurisdiction and cannot be regarded as proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I hold accordingly that section 435 (3) does not preclude this Court from entertaining the application for revision in the present case.

I accept the application, quash the Magistrate's proceedings as having been taken without jurisdiction, and set aside his order.

Hindu Law—Joint family consisting of brothers—Partition suit by mortgagee-decree-holder from one brother—Mother, whether entitled to share—Devolution of share after her death.

In a suit for partition of share belonging to one of two joint Hindu brothers, by a mortgagee who has obtained a foreclosure decree in respect of the same, the mother is entitled to claim a share equal to that of each of the two brothers. Such share after the death of the mother will pass equally to the mortgagee-decree-holder and the other brother who had not mortgaged his share.

JUDGMENT.—For the purposes of this appeal the facts may be stated as follows. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Sitaram and Tulsiram, two brothers, are members of a joint Hindu family which owned certain fields. In pursuance of a foreclosure decree the plaintiffs on the 31st May 1918 got formal possession of the half joint share of defendant No. 1, Sitaram, in the fields. They now sue for partition and separate possession of the half share and for mesne profits. Defendant No. 3, Punjai, is the mother of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. She claims a ⅓rd share in the joint family property on the ground that under the Mitakshara Law she is entitled to a share equal to that of each of the sons on partition. If her claim is allowed, the plaintiffs are entitled to partition and possession of a ⅓rd share only. The lower Courts have allowed the mother's claim and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of a ⅓rd share only. The plaintiffs' claim for mesne profits has been dismissed. This decision is challenged in this Court.

If the present suit were a suit for partition by Sitaram against Tulsiram the mother would, it is admitted, be entitled to a share. Does the fact that Sitaram's share has gone to the plaintiffs and it is the plaintiffs who claim a partition make any difference to the mother's claim? No authority has been cited to show that a person who has foreclosed the interest of a joint brother can claim to be in a more favourable position than the brother and can defeat the mother's claim. Bilaso v. Dina Nath (1) is an authority to the contrary. That case is sought to be distinguished. It is said that in that case the family estate consisted of a dwelling house and the right of the mother in dispute was the right of residence therein, which is of the nature of a charge whereof she could not be deprived under any circumstances. The decision in the case cited above was not influenced by the fact that the family property was a dwelling house. It was based on the principle that the mother has a latent and inchoate right of participation in the property left by her husband which becomes effective when separation takes place. I hold that defendant No. 3 is entitled to a share as against the plaintiffs also.

The share given to the mother will on her death go back to Sitaram and Tulsiram or their representatives, Debi Mangal Prosad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2), and there is no reason why the plaintiffs should not get the half of it which will revert to Sitaram or his representatives. As the decree stands, the plaintiffs will not be able to get that half after the mother's death. The decree will, therefore, be amended by the addition of a declaration that after the mother's death one-half of her ⅓rd share will go to the plaintiffs or their representatives.

(1) 3 A. 88; 5 Ind. Jur. 489; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 61 (F. B.).

(2) 14 Ind. Cas. 1000; 34 A. 234; 9 A. L. J. 263; 11 M. L. T. 217; 16 C. W. N. 409; (1912) M. W. N. 324; 14 Bom. L. R. 220; 15 C. L. J. 344; 22 M. L. J. 462; 39 I. A. 121 (P. C.).

The next point raised in appeal concerns the plaintiffs' claim for mesne profits. It is contended that the plaintiffs were entitled to mesne profits from the time that they were put in formal possession. The plaintiffs alleged that in June 1918 the defendants obstructed them in their cultivation of the fields in suit. The Trial Court found that the plaintiffs never attempted to cultivate any part of the field and were not prevented from cultivating it. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs were never in actual possession and were not excluded from possession. It is not pleaded or shown that Sitaram was excluded from possession or enjoyment of the common property. The claim for mesne profits was, therefore, rightly rejected. The decree of the Trial Court, confirmed by the lower Appellate Court, is altered by the addition referred to above. In other respects it is upheld. The appellants will pay half the costs of the respondents in this Court. Costs in the lower Courts will be paid as ordered by those Courts.

JUDGMENT.

Robinson, C. J.—Maung Po Han and Ma Do Ma, his wife, being the owners of the land in disputes executed a conveyance of it in favour of the appellant Chetty firm, which bears date the 1st February 1919. They executed another conveyance of the same land in favour of the respondents bearing date the 5th February 1919. The conveyance in favour of the appellants was duly registered on the 24th of February 1919; but it has been held by both Courts that this document was, as a matter of fact, executed on the 24th February but antedated in order to obtain priority over the conveyance in favour of the respondents. It has been held by both Courts that the conveyance in favour of the respondents was executed by both Po Han and Ma Do Ma as a fact and Po Han has admitted execution all along. Neither of these points can now be considered and have not been argued for the appellants. But it is urged that the registration of the respondents' deed is defective and illegal so as to make it inadmissible in evidence, and that it can have no force and effect to convey any title to this land to the respondents; in other words, that the appellant firm has been guilty of fraud, or an attempt at fraud, and, having failed in that, seek to obtain possession of this land nevertheless by obtaining a decision that the respondents have acquired no title to it.

The sole question before us is, whether the registration of the respondents' deed was made illegally and without jurisdiction.

This deed was duly presented for registration on the 26th of February to the Joint Sub-Registrar, the application stating that Po Han and Ma Do Ma refused to come to the Registration

S. M. A. R. CHETTY FIRM v. KO TEIK KA.

Office and praying that summons may be issued to them for registration. Summons was accordingly issued and both duly appeared. The registration proceedings do not show whether or not they were asked to admit or deny execution of the deed. The diary order merely shows that they objected to registration and that, consequently, registration was refused. Thereupon the respondents applied for copies and presented an appeal under section 73 to the Registrar. Their appeal shows merely that Po Han and Ma Do Ma came and objected to registration. The Registrar held: "Section 58 (2) obviously applies. The papers are fowarded to the Joint Sub-Registrar, U Tha Zan U, for disposal in accordance with that section." The order, however, proceeds: "The parties should be called up and asked if they admit execution; if they do, he should proceed as in section 58 (2); if they deny execution, registration should be refused."

On the matter coming before the Joint Sub-Registrar, he passed the following order: "Received the documents and records from the Office of the Dupty Commissioner. Plaintiffs are ordered to produce two witnesses on the 8th of March 1919." On the 8th of March the respondents produced two witnesses who were sworn and examined and the Joint Sub-Registrar's order then is: "The document is registered under section 58 (2), Registration Act."

In his evidence Po Han stated: "I alone executed the deed of sale to Teik Ka. My wife was not then present. She has never executed this deed; but she jointly executed the mortgage (Exhibit '2') with me in favour of Teik Ka." And again, "My wife and I were summoned by the Sub-Registrar to attend his office. I told the officer that I executed this deed, but I did not agree to its being registered as a sale-deed."

It seems to me to be clear that both executed the deed of sale knowing that it was a deed of sale, and that subsequently they endeavoured to avoid it, the reason put forward being that Teik Ka had said that though it was a deed of sale, he would treat it as a mortgage, and that they feared that he would not do so when the time came. It further appears to me that there can be little doubt that both admitted execution before the Joint Sub-Registrar, but that, because of this fear, they said that they did not wish to have the document registered. Unfortunately, however, there is no evidence as to these facts, which can only be inferred generally in the case.

Now Po Han admits that he admitted execution before the Joint Sub-Registrar and even if it be assumed, or be a fact, that Ma Do Ma denied execution by herself, the Joint Sub-Registrar should have admitted the document to registration so far as Po Han was concerned, even if he refused registration so far as Ma Do Ma was concerned. Throughout his procedure subsequent to the presentation has been wrong and not in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Even after receipt of the order of the Deputy Commissioner, he did not comply with the clear terms of that order but proceeded to take evidence as to execution, which he was not entitled to do under the Act. And, finally, he registered the document, or admitted the document to registration under section 58 (2), which deals with the case of a person who admits execution but refuses to endorse the same.

The question is whether this action on the part of the Joint Sub-Registrar renders the registration illegal and void, or is merely a defect in procedure which may be cured under section 87 of the Act.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have twice dealt with such a position. In the case of Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondun Lall(1), they dealt with the matter although it did not actually arise in the case before them. In that case a sale-deed was presented by the purchaser; the vendors were not before the Registering Officer, but he satisfied himself in their absence of the due execution of the deed by them, and admitted the deed to registration. Their Lordships say: "There can be no doubt that the Registering Officer acted in contravention of section 36 in registering the deed without the vendors having appeared before him; but it is not necessary for their Lordships to determine whether the registration was a nullity, or whether the error was one of which a stranger to the deed could take advantage. It may, however, be observed that there are no words in section 36 declaring that the registration of a deed shall be null and void if made without the appearance of the persons who executed it; and it is very doubtful whether the words of that section are not merely directory to the Registering Officer for the benefit of the parties to the deed, and whether his acting without the appearance of the parties and upon evidence, instead of the admission of the parties of the execution of the deed, was more than a defect in procedure within the meaning of section 88. Again, it is not clear that the words 'unless it shall have been registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act,' in section 49, are not, especially as regards strangers to the deed, confined to the procedure on 'admitting to registration' without reference a to any matters of procedure prior to registration, or to the provisions of sections 19, 21, or 36, of the Act, or other provisions of a similar nature. In considering the effect to be given to section 49, that section must be read in conjunction with section 88, and with the words of the heading of part 10 "Of the Effects of Registration and Non-Registration." Now, considering that the registration of all conveyances of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards is, by the Act, rendered compulsory, and that proper legal advice is not generally accessible to persons taking conveyances of land of small value, it is scarcely reasonable to suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature that every registration of a deed should be null and void by reason of a non-compliance with the provisions of sections 19, 21, or 36, or other similar provisions. It is rather to be inferred that the Legislature intended that such errors or defects should be classed under the general words 'defect in procedure in section 88 of the Act, so that innocent and ignorant persons should not be deprived of their property through any error or inadvertence of a public officer, on whom they would naturally place reliance. If the Registering Officer refuses to register, the mistake may be rectified upon appeal under section 83, or upon petition under section 84, as the case may be; but if he registers where he ought not to register, innocent persons may be misled and may not discover, until it is too late to rectify it, the error by which, if the registration is in consequence of it to be treated as a nullity, they may be deprived of their just rights."

Their Lordships were dealing with Act XX of 1866, and the reference to sections. 36 and 88 should be read as to sections 35 and 87 of the present Act.

In a later case—Muhammad Ewaz v. Brij Lal (2)—their Lordships in dealing with the rule laid down by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court said: "The registration is mainly required for the purpose of giving notoriety to the deed, and it is required under the penalty that the deed shall not be given in evidence unless it be registered. If it be registered, the party who has presented it for registration is then under the Act in a position which prima facie at least entitles him to give the deed in evidence. If the registration could at any time, at whatever distance of time, be opened, parties would never know what to rely upon, or when they would be safe. If the Registrar refuses to register, there is at once a remedy by an appeal; but if he has registered, there is nothing more to be done. Supposing, indeed the registration to be, obtained by fraud, then the act of registration, like all other acts which have been so arrived at, might be set aside by a proper proceeding." And they then go on to quote the passage from Sah Mukhun Lall v. Sah Koondun Lall (1)

These two cases clealy bring out the distinction that must be drawn between "a defect in procedure" that is the fault of the Registration Officer for which the persons presenting the document for registration are in no way responsible, and "a mistake' arising from their own wrongful act. This distinction is recognised in several later cases which are based on these two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In Pakran v. Kunhammed (3) the mother of three sons executed a deed of gift in favour of one of them and then died. The donee alone registered the document, the other sons not appearing before the Registering Officer. It was urged that an admission by one out of three representatives of the donor was not an admission within the meaning of the Act; but it was held that the error was a defect in procedure in the course of registration and that the registration was not rendered invalid thereby. Reference may also be made to Srimati Sujan Bivi v. Srimati Asafa Khatun (4) where it was said: "It appears to us that it may be open to question whether section 87 of the Registration Act, 1877, which cures defects in the procedure of the Registering Officer, can be extended to cure also the short comings of persons who apply to have documents registered; * * *" and reference was made to the case of Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (5). That was a decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The executant of a document gave a power-of-attorney to his agent to present it for registration, but died before the document was presented. The Registrar was aware of his death, but accepted and registered the document. And their Lordships say: "Now the case in hand is that of a person who, when he presented the deed for registration (as he says he did) on 4th November 1889, stood in no other relation to the deed than that, before the death of the person executing it, he had held his power-of-attorney. It is perfectly plain, not merely from the general law but from the terms of this section 32 itself, that, after the man's death the only attorney who would have had any locus standi would have been the attorney of the representative or assign of the deceased. It has been suggested, however, that the error of the Registrar was a defect in his procedure only, and, accordingly, under section 87 does not invalidate the act of registration. To their Lordships the error appears to be of a more radical nature. When the terms of section 32 are considered with due regard to the nature of registration of deeds, it is clear that the power and jurisdiction of the Registrar only come into play when he is invoked by some person having a direct relation to the deed. It is for those persons to consider whether they will or will not give to the deed the efficacy conferred by registration. The Registrar could not be held to exercise the jurisdiction conferred on him if, hearing of the execution of a deed, he got possession of it and registered it; and the same objection applies to his proceeding at the instigation of a third party, who might be a busybody. * * * The Registrar indeed did not merely disregard section 32, for he proceeded to accept the admission of the alleged attorney as a good admission of the execution of the deed, although section 34 requires in the case of a deceased the admission of the representative or assign.

"Their Lordships were referred to two decisions of this Committee in support of the appellants' contention. Neither case gives any countenance to the view that the absence of any party legally entitled to present a deed for registration is a defect in procedure falling under section 87. In both those cases the Registrar was throughout moved by a person having title and was exercising his jurisdiction. The difference is, in their Lordships' judgment, vital. They, therefore, hold the registration of this deed to have been illegal."

It will be noticed that this case was based not only on the fact that the wrong action taken was the action of the party seeking registration, but that it also referred to action which gave rife to the jurisdiction of the Registrar to register.

This case was followed in Ishri Prasad v. Baijnath (6) which was an exactly similar case. In Razi-un-nissa v. Sabir Husain (7), the Sub-Registrar registered a document as against a person denying execution thereof, and it was held that his action was ultra vires and without jurisdiction, and that the document could not be admitted in evidence as against the party denying execution. Reference is made to Muhammad Ewaz's case (2) and it is pointed out that the words, "The Registering Officer shall refuse to register the document as to the person so denying," were added after their Lordships' decision. The case was one of presentation of the petition in accordance with the requirements of the Statute; but it was held that the Registration Officer had neglected the prohibitory provisions of section 35, and for that reason they held that the document had not been duly registered.

With this one exception, all the authorities cited have been authorities in which the petition was presented by a person having no authority to present it, whereby the Registering Officer took a jurisdiction which he did not possess.

Lastly, the first two Privy Council cases were considered and followed in the case of Maung Tun v. Maung Paw U (8). That case is very similar to the present one. The Sub-Registrar accepted for registration a document without the appearance and admission of one of the executing parties but upon evidence called for by him. It was held that this irregularity or defect was merely one of procedure and did not render the registration null and void.

Having regard, therefore, to the authorities, I am of opinion that, where a document is presented by a person duly authorized to present it who thus initiates the jurisdiction of the Registering Officer, and who does all that he is required to do under the Act and is guilty of no shortcoming thereunder, it would be contrary to the scheme of the Act, and it could not have been the intention of the Legislature that he should be punished for any error or defect in the procedure of the Registering Officer subsequent to the presentation.

The respondents in the present case asked the Sub-Registrar to summon the executants; he did so, and one, at any rate, admitted execution, but the Registrar refused registration. The respondents had then a remedy, and they applied that remedy and obtained an order in their favour, and finally obtained registration from the Sub-Registrar.

They are ignorant persons not in a position probably to obtain legal advice; they relied on the action of the Registering Officer, as they were justly entitled to rely, and, if that officer committed an error, it must, having regard to the dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council, be held to be error in procedure to be cured by section 87 of the Act. They were guilty of no fault and, if they are to be penalized for the mistakes of the Registering Officer, and thereby the fraudulent conduct of the appellants is to be successful, it would be most deplorable.

In my opinion, therefore, this appeal fails; the decree of the Court below must be confirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XLI, r. 1, O. XLIII, rr. 1 (c), 2—Ex parte decree, setting aside of—Order demanding deposit of large decretal amount, whether equitable—Appeal against dismissal of application to set aside ex parte decree—Failure to file copy of dismissal order—Appeal, competency of.

An order granting a re-hearing of a suit decreed ex parte on condition of the applicant's depositing security to the large amount of Rs. 7,000, the sum decreed, is hard and cannot be upheld in equity.

In an appeal against an ultimate order dismissing an application to set aside an ex parte decree, for non-compliance of the conditional order granting re-hearing, it is incumbent on the appellant to file a copy of the order of dismissal along with a copy of the conditional order. His failure to do so, however, is a technical defect and would not on that ground render the appeal incompetent.

Appeal against a decree of the Deputy Commissioner, Rae Bareli, dated the 9th February 1923.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant, Indar Singh, has appealed from an order passed by the learned Collector of Rae Bareli. The first order was of 19th February 1923, allowing the appellant's application for the setting aside of a decree passed against him ex parte on two conditions: (1) that he forthwith pay to the plaintiff all costs they have incurred in all the proceedings up to date, including Plearder's fee and the attachment proceedings, but excluding the Court stamps on the plaint, and (2) that he deposit security to the extent of Rs. 7,000 to cover the decretal amount and interest and future costs in case a decree is given against him. A month's time was granted to comply with these conditions though the word "forthwith" is used in the first condition imposed. An appeal was presented on 29th March 1923; prior to that date the learned Collector had dismissed the appellant's application on 21st March 1923. In reality, the apellant ought to have filed a copy of the order of dismissal along with a copy of the order of 19th February 1923. This is, however, a technical defect and I will not entertain Mr. Wasim's objection that an appeal does not lie. Mr. Wasim is a learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent.

The question is, upon what equitable conditions the re-hearing may be granted. The order for deposit of security to the large amount of Rs. 7,000 appears to me to be hard. I think justice will be done to both parties if the attachment of the defendant's property is continued under O. XXXIX, r. 1 (b), of the Code of Civil Procedure. As regards costs, I think that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff costs Rs. 86-8 incurred in the lower Court up to the date of his application for setting aside of the ex parte decree.

I set aside the lower Court's orders dated 19th February 1923 and 21st March 1923, and direct re-hearing of the suit on condition of the defendant depositing in the lower Court, within 15 days of to-day's date, Rs. 86-8 for payment to the plaintiff. If such deposit is not made within the time specified, this appeal shall stand dismissed with costs. If the deposit is made, costs here and other costs, besides Rs. 86-8 shall follow the event. The attachment of the defendant's property shall continue in any case either as attachment in execution of decree or as attachment under O. XXXIX, r. 1 (b), if the suit is re-heard.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 58—Objection to attachment by previous transferee from judgment-debtor—Auction-sale—Jurisdiction, determination of.

A Court has no jurisdiction to try a claim under O. XXI, r. 58, of the Civil Procedure Code to property attached in execution of a decree, after the sale of that property, even though the claim was registered before the sale was held, as the sale ipso facto determines the attachment, and thereafter the Court is functus officio.

Revision from an order of the Munsif, Third Court, Patna, dated the 30th November 1922.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—In this case the decree-holder in execution of a decree for arrears of rent attached certain plots of land some of which were claimed by the opposite party as transferees from the tenant. A claim case under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, was registered by the Executing Court, but before it could be disposed of, for some reason or other, the sale was held and the whole of the tenancy was purchased by the decree-holder at the auction. Notwithstanding this, the Executing Court on the 30th November 1922 proceeded to dispose of the claim case by allowing the claim in respect of the plots claimed by the objecting transferees. It is against this order that the decree holder-moves this Court in revision.

It is obvious that, after the sale was held, the attachment was ipso facto determined, and the Court had no longer any jurisdiction to try the claim case, and so it was held in Gopal Chandra Mukerji v. Notobar Kundu (1).

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that the sale was brought about by the fraud of the decree-holder. There is nothing to support this contention and, in any event, it would not affect the question of jurisdiction. The order of the Executing Court releasing the properties claimed must be set aside.

The application is accordingly allowed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

This order will govern Civil Revision Cases Nos. 114 and 116 of 1923.

ORDER.—The defendants-appellants have appealed to this Court against a decree for redemption of a mortgage passed by the Court below in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. In their Memorandum of Appeal they attacked the plaintiff's right to redeem as well as disputed the amount for which redemption has been allowed, claiming a larger sum than that which has been awarded to them by the decree of the lower Court.

The learned Pleader for the appellants says, that the difference between the amount now claimed and the amount decreed by the lower Court is Rs. 336. The respondents' Pleader says that the appellants should pay a Court-fee on this amount. The ruling of a Bench of this Court in the case of Sangat Bakhsh Singh v. Rawat Dijdeo Bakhsh Singh (1) supports the Pleader for the respondents. The appellants want time to make good the deficiency. They are allowed time to do so till the 30th May 1923, and they are further directed to amend their Memorandum of Appeal so as to show the amount of the mortgag-emoney now claimed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the connected Second Appeals Nos. 1408 and 1643 of 1921 arise out of a suit brought under the following circumstances. The defendant made an application to the Criminal Court under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of certain plots of land and the sugar-cane crop which existed on that land. Both parties claimed the sugar-cane crop and claimed to be in possession. The Criminal Court caused the sugar-cane crop to be sold by auction and the amount realised by the sale was Rs. 1,450-8. After the case under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was decided, the present plaintiff applied to the Criminal Court for payment to him of the aforesaid amount which had been placed in deposit with one Banarsi Das. The Criminal Court referred the plaintiff to the Civil Court to have his title to the money determined. Thereupon the present suit was brought for a declaration that the aforesaid sum of Rs. 1,450-8 was due to him, the sugar-cane crop having been raised by him and not by the defendant. The plaintiff, no doubt, stated that he was the sub-tenant of the defendant in respect of the four plots of land on which the sugar-cane crop had been grown but both the Courts below have found that this statement was not true. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the four plots of land in which the sugar-cane crop had been grown formed the cultivatory holding of the defendant, that the zemindar had dispossessed the defendant and had put the plantiff into possession and that the plaintiff had sown the crop. That Court was of opinion that as the land was the cultivatory holding of the defendant, the plaintiff should be awarded only a half of the value of the crop although the whole crop according to the Court's finding had been raised by the plaintiff alone. One fails to understand on what principle this decree was made. If the crop was raised by the plaintiff it belonged to him. He may not have any title to the land in which the crop was grown but the crop itself was his property and, therefore, he was entitled to the price of the sugar-cane which he had raised on this land. From this decree of the Court of first instance both parties appealed. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court found that the defendant had failed to prove that he had raised the crop and he came to the conclusion that the crop had been grown by the plaintiff. It is true that he said in his judgment that, inasmuch as the defendant had admitted in the Revenue Court that the crop had been sown by the plaintiff, the onus lay upon him to prove that he had grown the crop. The question of onus did not at all arise in the lower Appellate Court as both sides had given evidence. In this case the allegation of one party was that the sugar-cane crop belonged to him and that of the other party was that he was the owner of the crop. No third party was involved. The crop was either raised by the plaintiff or by the defendant. If the defendant failed to prove that he had raised the crop, the inevitable conclusion was that it was the plaintiff who raised it, and the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the crop had been grown by the plaintiff. That Court further found that the landlord forcibly dispossessed the defendant and put the plaintiff into possession and that during the period of the plaintiff's possession he had planted the sugar-cane and raised the crop. That being the finding of the lower Appellate Court, it was the plaintiff who was entitled to the crop and to the amount which represented the value of the crop. There was no principle of equity under which the defendant could take away or appropriate any portion of the crop. If the landlord wrongfully dispossessed him, his remedy was to sue for restoration of possession and for compensation from the landlord for wrongful dispossession; but he could not claim any portion of the crop existing on the land which had been grown not by him but by the plaintiff. The learned Judge was, therefore, wrong, in our opinion, in holding that upon some equitable principle the defendant was entitled to one-third of the crop and in making a decree in the plaintiff's favour for two-thirds only. From this decision of the learned Judge the three appeals before us have been preferred, two of them, namely, Second Appeals Nos. 1407 and 1408 of 1921, by the defendant, and No. 1643 by the plaintiff. It is urged on behalf of the defendant that the Civil Court was not competent to entertain the suit and that the suit ought to have been instituted in the Revenue Court. This plea is clearly untenable. The matter in controversy between the parties was the value of the sugar-cane crop, and what the plaintiff claimed was a declaration to the effect that he was entitled to the value of the crop. There was no dispute in the suit as to the title to the land in which the crop was grown. Incidentally the question might arise, by what title the plaintiff had grown the crop. He no doubt said that he was the sub-tenant of the defendant, but he failed to substantiate that statement, and the Court came to the conclusion, as stated above, that the zemindar had wrongfully dispossessed the defendant and had put the plaintiff into possession. This act of the zemindar may have been improper but there was no question of the title to the land in the present suit, and consequently the suit could not be brought in the Revenue Court. Mr. Mital called our attention to a ruling reported in Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (1), but that ruling manifestly has no application to a case of this kind.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 731; 37 A. 41; 12 A. L. J. 1252.

The next contention was that the Court below had wrongly placed the onus of proof on the defendant. We have already commented on this matter. There was no question of onus of proof in the case before the lower Appellate Court, both sides having given evidence; all that it had to decide upon the evidence was whether the crops belonged to the plaintiff or to the defendant. If the crop had not been grown by the defendant, the only other person who could have sown it was the plaintiff and the finding was that it was the plaintiff's crop. Therefore, the appeals which have been preferred by the defendant are without force and must be dismissed. As regards the plaintiff's appeal it must succeed. Upon the finding that the crop was raised by the plaintiff, he is entitled to the amount which was realised by the sale of the crop, and to this amount the defendant has no title. The whole of the plaintiff's claim ought to have been decreed. The result is that we dismiss the appeals of the defendant with costs and decree the plaintiff's appeal with costs.

It is a well-settled principle of law that a guardian cannot so contract in the name of his ward as to entail the imposition of a personal liability on the ward. [p. 92, col. 1.]

Therefore, although the breach of a warranty implied by law in respect of a sale effected by the Court of Wards on behalf of a ward cannot result in the personal liability of the latter for damages, yet where an express covenant of warranty of title has been entered into, the purchaser is entitled to be indemnified. Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the year 1891 the estate of the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards of the United Provinces and so was the estate of the defendant-appellant. Acting on behalf of those disqualified proprietors, who were minors, the Court of Wards executed a deed of sale on the 22nd August 1891 in respect of certain properties belonging to the appellant in favour of the respondent's predecessor-in-interest. Amongst those properties was included a 5 pies 6 kirants 4 jau share in pati Bangawan, pargana Daryabad, Tahsil Sanehighat, District Bara Banki, and in the schedule attached to the deed of sale the nature of this share was described to be "by mortgage in consideration of Rs.3,000," and the sale price the sum of Rs. 783. The vendee in pursuance of the conveyance entered into possession of this property and continued in enjoyment of that possession till the year 1920 when he lost it in consequence of a decree in a suit of ejectment to be mentioned in detail hereafter. The original mortgagor was a Muhammadan lady, who died in the year 1920. On her death certain persons claimed to be entitled to the reversionary interest in the property mortgaged on the ground that the lady held under a custom of the family only a life interest in the property. Their claim succeeded with the result that the plaintiff-respondent was dispossessed of the mortgaged property without, of course, receiving anything by way of the return of the mortgage-money, the title which succeeded against him being paramount to that of the mortgagor.

The plaintiff-respondent then brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for the recovery of Rs. 783, as damages for breach of the covenant relating to the warranty of title contained in the sale-deed. The defence was that there was no such covenant as would entitle the plaintiff to a claim for damages arising out of the facts stated above. The plaintiff's claim was succeeded in the Courts below. Hence this appeal by the defendant. The Court of first instance seems to have conceded that there was no indemnity clause in the sale-deed which would justify a claim on the part of the plaintiff on the facts as they have happened in this case. It says:—"The sale-deed contains clear covenants for title and for the quiet enjoyment. It is true that there is no clause such as (sic) by which a transferor undertakes to indemnify the transferee against the loss occasioned by the conduct of any person not claiming through him." The argument on behalf of the plaintiff in that Court seems to have proceeded on the line that there was a warranty implied by law under the provisions of section 55, sub-section (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The Court accepted the argument and gave effect to it, observing that there was no contract to the contrary in the sale-deed. An argument was advanced on behalf of the defendant that he was not personally liable for any damages arising out of the warranty implied by law. This argument was supported by quoting a decision reported as Srinivasa Thathacharlu v. Neolamma (1). The Court distinguished that case on the ground that "the claim for damages was based on an express indemnity clause contained in the sale-deed. The case was not considered from the aspect of their being an implied guarantee of title in every sale-deed". On these grounds the argument was repelled and eventually a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki.

(1) 55 Ind. Cas. 436; 11 L. W. 246; (1920) M. W. N. 340.

The learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the Court of first instance and held: "I think it must be held that the case is governed by sections 54 and 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the vendor was bound to disclose the defect in his title to the vendee and that there was an implied warranty of title." As regards the personal liability of the defendant, the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, inasmuch as the sale was effected by the Court of Wards the defendant must be held liable for the damages arising out of the implied warranty in respect of that sale.

I must disagree with these grounds of decision. The breach of a warranty implied by law in respect of a sale effected by the Court of Wards cannot result in a personal liability of the defendant for damages. It is a well-settled principle of law that a guardian cannot so contract in the name of his ward as to entail the imposition of a personal liability on the ward—See the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of Wagheia Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (2) and Indur Chunder Singh v. Radhakishore Ghose (3). The plaintiff's claim, therefore, on the basis of the breach of an implied warranty cannot be sustained.

The line of argument taken in this Court, both by the learned Advocate for the appellant and the learned Advocate for the respondent, took an entirely different direction from the one in which it proceeded in the Courts below. It was argued, I am sure, with a subconsciousness, that the claim could not succeed on the ground of the breach of warranty implied by law unless there was an express covenant contained in the deed, entitling the plaintiff to the remedy which he has sought in this suit, and which has been granted to him by the Courts below. This was in accordance with the case set out in the plaint. If the sale-deed contains a covenant of the nature which the plaintiff's learned Advocate contends it does, then I have no doubt that, in spite of the rule of the general law, which I have stated above, the defendant-appellant will be bound to indemnify the plaintiff under the provisions of the special law applicable to him as contained in section 61 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, 1912. The second portion of section 61, sub-section (2), is to the effect that the covenants entered into by the Court of Wards shall be binding on the ward after the ward has ceased to be under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and by sub-section (4) of the same section a retrospective effect is given to the provisions of this section. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that the context suggests that the ward's liability is limited for its satisfaction to the property which may be charged with it. I do not agree with this contention. To my mind the language is wide enough to make the ward personally liable. Such of the words of sub-section (2) as have a bearing on the question under consideration may be quoted here: "Such covenants shall be binding on the ward . . . .after the ward has ceased to be under the superintendence of the Court of Wards." It follows that if the sale-deed contains a covenant of warranty of title in relation to the mortgage in question, it must be held that the decrees passed by the Courts below against the appellant are correct.

The sole question for consideration now is whether there is or not such a covenant in the sale-deed. A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the paymnet of money advanced (vide section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882). The substance of a mortgage, therefore, is the transaction of the loan involved in it and the transfer of the property is merely collateral for the purpose of securing the re-payment of the loan. When this sale-deed, therefore, conveyed mortgagee rights in the share mentioned above it conveyed primarily the right to recover the debt and it is common ground that at the date of the conveyance both the vendor and the vendee, who in this particular case were, however, represented by one person, that is, the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, knew that there was no defect in the title of the mortgagee in respect of the recovery of the mortgage-money. The plaintiff's learned Advocate argued that what was conveyed to his client's predecessor-in-interest in the mortgaged premises was an interest to enjoy the mortgage property in perpetuity pro tanto and, inasmuch as the plaintiff has been deprived of that enjoyment in consequence of the decree obtained by persons who had a paramount title to that of the mortgagor, he was entitled to the damages claimed by him. I do not agree with this argument, for if the mortgage-money was paid to him on the day following the conveyance he would have had no occasion to enjoy the possession of the property and yet he could not have had any claim for damages against the vendor. The substance, therefore, of the right which was conveyed to and acquired by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest was the right to the mortgage-money. I have already said that the vendee and vendor both knew that the vendor had such a right and, therefore, the transfer of that right was conveyed by the words, "and all the estate, right, title, interest of the said vendor into and upon the same (the premises conveyed)," and the following words sufficiently amount to a covenant in respect of the soundness and the validity of that right. "To have and to hold the same to the use of the said Shaikh Naushad Ali Khan (vendee), his heirs and assigns for ever and the same vendor doth hereby for and in behalf of the said minor Babu Pirthipal Singh (vendor) his heirs and assigns covenant with the said purchaser that notwithstanding anything by him or his predecessors-in-title done omitted or knowingly suffered he now hath power to grant the said premises and that the same shall at all time remain and be to the use of the said Shaikh Naushad Ali Khan . . . and that free and discharged from or otherwise by the vendor for and in behalf of the said Babu Pirthipal Singh, his heirs and assigns sufficiently indemnified against all estates, incumbrances, claims and demands." Any claim, therefore, in derogation of the right to recover the mortgage-money was provided against by the covenant for indemnity in relation thereto contained in the words quoted above. I have already stated that not only such a claim was made but it has succeeded also and the plaintiff-respondent has lost possession of the mortgaged property without recovering the mortgage-money.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Court-Fees (Act VII of 1870), s. 7, cls. v, xi (cc)—Tenant staying over after notice to quit—Suit for possession—Court-fees — Tenant holding over, who is.

A suit for possession against a person who continues to be in possession after his tenancy has come to an end and who was given a notice to quit according to law, is not for recovery of immoveable property from a person who is a tenant holding over but is a suit to recover it from a trespasser and as such falls not under section 7, xi (cc) of the Court-Fees Act but under clause v of that section. [p. 194, cols. 1 & 2.]

A tenant holding over is a person who, after his right to the occupation of land under lawful title is at an end, continues, having no title at all, in possession of the land without the agreement or disagreement of the person in whom the right of possession resides. [p. 94, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 6th March 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 152 of 1921.

Messrs. Amaram Bhagwant and S. C. Dutt Choudhury, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the malik makbuza of a field valued at Rs. 5,600 of which the annual revenue is Rs. 51. He claimed possession of this field from the defendant, alleging that the latter had taken a lease of it from him for the year 1920-21 (1330 F.) for Rs. 145, and had wrongfully re-taken possession of it after the end of the year by going on the land with his harrows. It was further alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff had given the defendant written notice in November 1920, that he would have to quit at the end of the agricultural year. The defence was that the plaintiff had given the defendant a fresh lease of the field for the year 1331 Fasli in September 1920 for Rs. 145 and had recovered a portion of the lease money at the time.

2. In the First Court the second lease alleged by the defendant was held not proved and the plaintiff was given a decree for possession. In respect of the payment of costs the learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit was of the kind mentioned in clause XI (cc) of section 7 of the Court-Fees Act, and ordered, therefore, that the Pleader's fee should be calculated on the sum at which the suit was valued for Court-fees, as under section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act the valuation for Court-fees and for jurisdiction would be the same in that case. In this, and also in the decree, the mistake was made of taking Rs. 255 as the proper valuation for both purposes; if the suit was of the kind mentioned in clause XI (cc) of section 7 of the Court-Fees Act, the proper valuation was Rs. 145.

3. In appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that the lease for the second year alleged by the defendant was proved to have been granted and ordered that the suit should be dismissed. A plea was mentioned as raised by the plaintiff who was there the respondent, that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal as the market-value of the property was in excess of Rs. 5,000, but the learned Judge affirmed the view taken in the First Court that the suit was of the kind mentioned in clause XI (cc) of the Court-Fees Act, and, therefore, the value both for Court-fees and for jurisdiction was only Rs. 145 (the mistake of the First Court in calling the amount Rs. 255 being noticed and corrected).

4. The question of the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court is raised again here. In that connection, we are concerned with nothing but the allegations in the plaint, and they cannot possibly be regarded as calling the person from whom the plaintiff claimed to recover immoveable property either a tenant of a tenant holding over. No attempt has been or could be made in this Court to support the view that the plaint makes any allegation of actual tenancy during the second of the two years, but the learned Pleader for the defendant has contended that, on the plaintiff's allegations, he was a tenant holding over. The first suggestion of this to be found in the case is in the petition of appeal to this Court, where the proposition seems to have been set up for the pleasure of knocking it down again. A "tenant holding over", or a tenant at sufferance, is a tenant "who after his right to the occupation, under a lawful title is at an end, continues (having no title at all) in possession of the land, without the agreement or disagreement of the person in whom the right of possession resides." (Wharton's Law Lexicon, page 841). Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant defines a tenant on sufferance as "one who entered by a lawful demise or title, and, after that has ceased, wrongfully continues in possession without the assent or dissent of the person next entitled," explaining further that "the reversioner, who suffers this is considered to be guilty of some laches or negligence, as is generally the case."

5. The plaint very clearly asserts that the defendant did not remain in possession after the end of the first year without the disagreement of the plaintiff, as it is alleged that the latter gave him written notice to quit. Even according to the defendant's own allegations, if they could be taken into consideration in deciding this point, he could not be called a tenant holding over as he very distinctly asserted, that he was not there without the agreement of the owner. The suit is clearly for the possession of land held by a trespasser, and falls under clause V of section 7 of the Court-Fees Act. The proper valuation, therefore, for Court-fees is Rs. 255 and for jurisdiction is Rs. 5,600, so that the appeal lay to this Court and not to the Court of the District Judge.

6. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly be set aside, and the case will go back to that Court with instructions to return the petition of appeal to the defendant under r. 10 of O. VII, read with section 107, of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant-respondent must pay all the costs incurred in this and the lower Appellate Court, but this order will be subject to modification in any appeal from the original decree that he may present to this Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76, cl. (g)—Mortgagee's duty to keep accounts—Contract to the contrary.

A mortgagee is, in view of s. 76 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, under a statutory obligation to keep clear, full and accruate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee. A mortgagee cannot contract himself out of this legal duty, there being no reservation in favour of a contract to the contrary as there is in some of the other clauses of the section. [p. 97, col. 1]

The only cases in which the performance of the duty imposed by section 76, clause (g), of the Transfer of Property Act can be dispensed with are provided for in section 77 of the Act. [p. 97, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Sitapur, dated the 5th Septemaer 1921.

Messrs. Haidar Husain and Bishambhar Nath Srivatana, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ram Chandra, Chail Behari Lal and Har Dhian Chandra, or he Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, dated the 5th of September 1921, allowing the claim of the plaintiff-respondent for foreclosure of a mortgage in lieu of Rs. 30,887-14-7. The appellants in this Court are the defendants-mortgagors. The sole ground of appeal argued before us is the accuracy of the amount of the mortgage-money found due to the mortgagee by the Court below. Other grounds of appeal taken in the memorandum were abandoned and the cross-objections filed by the plaintiff-respondent were not argued.

The basis of the plaintiff's claim is the deed of mortgage, dated the 21st of December 1897 (Exhibit 1). The amount of the principal sum secured thereby is Rs. 5,200. The rate of interest agreed upon is 14 annas per cent. per mensem and the property mortgaged is the 12 annas share of village Gobinda Sarai. The conditions of the mortgage which have a bearing on this appeal are as follows :—

(1) The mortgagors shall redeem on payment of the principal and the interest at the end of Jaith, 1305 Fasli, i.e., the middle of June 1898.

(2) In default, the mortgagee will be entitled to enter into the possession of the mortgaged property.

(3) In case possession is taken by the mortgagee, there will be no redemption for five years following it.

(4) "The amount of principal, interest and compound interest that shall become due at the time of taking possession according to the terms hereof shall carry interest at the rate of annas 14 per cent. per month. The income (from the) mal and sawai items in accordance with the Patwari's papers shall be applied in the first instance after payment of the revenue, other Government demands, village expenses and collection expenses, and the balance shall be appropriated by the mortgagee towards interest and then the surplus (if any) shall go towards the payment of principal."

It may be noted here that the word 'income' in the above clause is a translation of the word 'nikasi' in the original deed of mortgage which means the gross income as distinguished from the net income. The Counsel for the parties also agree to the above interpretation and this is the interpretation accepted in the plaint paragraph 2 (h 3).

(5) "If the aforesaid interest is not paid off out of the amount of profits, the remaining amount of interest shall carry compound interest to be paid six monthly at the aforesaid date. It shall be paid along with the principal at the time of redemption (of the mortgaged property) and then the property shall be redeemed. The property cannot be redeemed unless the amount due under this mortgage-deed is paid off."

(6) "If we, the executants, do not get the mortgaged property redeemed after five years the mortgagee shall also be entitled to have the mortgaged property foreclosed or bring a money suit in respect of the entire amount of principal, intreest and compound interest and realize the same from the person and other property of the executants and by getting the latter sold by auction."

The mortgagors made default in the payment of the mortgage-money on the due date with the result that the mortgagee, after an interval of over six years from the date of default, brought a suit for the recovery of possession and obtained a decree on the 5th December 1904 (Exhibit 3) on a compromise dated the 28th of November 1904, (Exhibits 2 and 3) the essential terms of which were as follows:—

"(1) It has been agreed that Rs. 10,000 is due to the plaintiff on account of the amount of principal and interest. The plaintiff has, as a measure of favour, remitted the remaining amount due and costs.

"(2) As regards this item of Rs. 10,000 it has been agreed that the defendants may deposit it within three months from this date, so that the property may be redeemed. In case the above period expires the plaintiff, according to the terms of the mortgage-deed, shall get possession of the mortgaged property for five years. The amount of interest and profits shall be adjusted in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed."

The three months and the extended period of two months (Exhibit A1) expired without any payment being made by the mortgagors. Eventually, the mortgagee entered into the possession of the mortgaged property on the 17th of September 1905 (Exhibit 5). The mortgagee's possession, for the purpose of account, has been treated to have commenced from the beginning of the Fasli year 1313.

By the effect of the compromise decree dated the 5th of December 1904 (Exhibit 3) the mortgage-money was fixed at Rs. 10,000 and was to carry interest and compound interest in accordance with the terms of the deed of mortgage.

The relief asked for and granted by the Court below is a decree for foreclosrue

The ground on which the paryer for this relief is founded may best be stated in the language of the plaint itself.

10. That the period of the plaintiff's mortgagee possessions expires on 17th September 1910 and the plaintiff is entitled to get the mortgaged property foreclosed.

11. That in confirmity with the conditions of the mortgage-deed, the compromise and the decree aforesaid, receipts have been given in the account, entered in statement No. 1 containing the full gross rental of the mortgaged property and the rent of the plaintiff's khudkasht lands to the extent of the mortgaged share and in accordance with the statement No. 2 relating to principal, interest and compound interest up to the end of April 1920, the money due to the plaintiff, after deducting the amount realized as set forth in the statement No. 2, comes to Rs. 39,984-9 besides future interest and compound interest till the date of realization.

The statements of account referred to in paragraph 11 quoted above are statements prepared for the purposes of this suit and are attached to the plaint. The nature of each of the two statements is stated in the same paragraph and need not be repeated.

Paragraph 13 of the plaint states that the said statements of account are based on "Patwari's supplementary rent roll" except for the years 1326 and 1327 Fasli for which the Patwari's papers were not available and for those years "the profits have been calculated approximately."

Now a perusal of the statements of account reveals the plaintiff's case to be that the profits of the property mortgaged have fallen far short of the amount of interest, with the result that the account proceeds on the basis of six monthly rests and continues throughout as such. It is obvious that, in order to obtain the relief for foreclosure as prayed for, the plaintiff must substantiate these accounts. He was under a statutory obligation to "keep clear, full and accurate accounts of all sums received and spent by him as mortgagee." (Vide section 76 (g), Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882). He says that he has kept no accounts, at all events he has produced none. His Counsel argues that the mortgagee has discharged the legal obligation by tendering the Patwari's papers in evidence as provided in the deed of mortgage. We are of opinion that the plaintiff could not contract out of this legal duty, there being no reservation in favour of a contract to the contrary as there is in some of the clauses of the afore mentioned section 76. Nor do we think that the Patwari's papers were intended by the parties to the mortgage to serve as a substitute for the mortgagee's accounts which are intended to serve many more purposes than the Patwari's papers can possibly do. Those purposes are stated in clauses (g) and (h) of section 76. The only cases in which the performance of the duty imposed by section 76, clause (g), can be dispensed with are provided for in section 77. It is clear that the present case does not fall within the last mentioned section.

As regards the evidentiary value of the Patwari's papers, the learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that they are not reliable. In this particular case we agree with him that they are not. The danger of relying on these papers is enhanced by several facts. The bulk of the area under cultivation yields grain rent, the amount of which naturally varies from year to year, and with a view to approach to anything like accuracy the crops must be appraised and valued every year. The plaintiff has not shown that this was done except in the year 1327 when the profits, as given by the Patwari Kali Charan (P. W. No. 1), came to Rs. 1,367-9-9 which leave a balance of Rs. 1,081-9-3 after deducting the Government revenue. This is more than the amount of interest Rs. 1,050 a year. The defendant's evidence consistently shows that the Patwari did not attend the annual appraisement of crops. The learned Subordinate Judge refers to this evidence without any adverse comment.

2. There is an area of over 30 bighas pukhta of sir and khudkasht lands cultivated by the mortgagee from year to year. The Patwari's papers show no profits whatsoever arising from those lands. The plaintiff has, in statement No. 1, fixed the rent of these lands at Rs. 6 per pukhta bigha all through. This standard of valuation of the annual rental is, in our judgment, too low. In respect of the lands under his own cultivation, the mortgagee is liable to be debited with a "fair occupation rent" vide clause (h), section 76. Kali Charan Patwari (P. W. No. 1) says that these lands are of "better quality than those let to tenants" who give their rents in grain. The plaintiff has not given any satisfactory evidence on the basis of which a standard of fair occupation rent could be obtained.

3. As regards the lands held by tenants, we have the evidence of the defendants' witnesses all of whom are tenants of the village in suit. For instance, Baldi (D. W. No. 2) says that the "zemindars get Rs. 8 or Rs. 9 worth grain per kham bigha." This will come to Rs. 24 or Rs. 27 per pukhta bigha, which we think is too high.

4. The only sewai income included in the profits shown in the Patwari's papers is a sum of Rs. 12 said to have accrued yearly from the sale of hides. Here again is a suppression of various sources of sewai profits which are disclosed by the evidence of the plaintiff's witness, Kali Charan, Patwari. He speaks of 8 annas per plough realized from tenants and of an additional levy of Rs. 4-14 per cotton field (kapas). The number of ploughs unanimously given by the defendants' witnesses is 40 to 42. Thus, the evidence produced by both the parties establishes sewai income of Rs. 12 from the sale of hides; Rs. 4-14 from the additional levy on cotton fields, and Rs. 20 from the levy on ploughs annually.

5. Further, the Patwari's annual rent roll (jamabandi) is not filed; what is filed is the yearly abstract giving the total of gross rental (tatimma jamabandi) Exhibits 6 to 18, for the years 1313 to 1325 Fasli. In the absence of details we are unable to say that these totals cover all the sources of revenue: cash rent, grain rent, sir and khudkasht profits and sewai. See in this connection the decision in Noyes v. Pollock (1). In agreement with the Trial Judge we are therefore, of opinion that the Patwari's papers on which the plaintiff has based his accounts do not furnish a reliable data on all points. The situation, therefore, is this:—that there are absolutely no reliable accounts before us. The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the plaintiff having failed to establish the case upon which he came to Court, his suit should be dismissed. On the other hand, the contention on behalf of the respondent is that the appellants having failed to prove that the mortgagee realized more than what he admits, the decree of the lower Court, being for a smaller sum than claimed by him, should be maintained. We are unable to yield to either of these contentions.

The method adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge is unsatisfactory. He has taken from Exhibit 37 the area of the land in the entire village (16 annas) yielding rent in money for the five years (1308-1312) when the mortgagors were in possession. Again, he has taken from the same paper the amount of the cash rent for those lands only, for the same period and finally has struck an average of Rs. 1-8-0 as the rent per kham bigha. Then, he has arbitrarily fixed 750 kham bighas as the entire area under cultivation in the village every year. On this data he has calculated profits at Rs. 843-13-0 a year for 1313 to 1318 in respect of the 12 annas share mortgaged. For the period subsequent to 1318 Fasli he has adopted an average of Rs. 2 per kham bigha as shown by the plaintiff in columns 3 and 4 of statement No. 1 and has calculated profits on that basis at Rs. 1,125 a year. Besides the deduction for the Government revenue, he has also allowed 7 per cent. to the mortgagee for his collection charges.

Now, the claim for collection charges was expressly abandoned by the mortgagee in paragraph 12 of the plaint. The bulk of the profits being grain rent it may be that the mortgagee incurred no expenses for collection. He could and might have personally attended to the division of the grain produce twice a year; as the evidence of Kali Charan, Patwari, suggests. There was therefore, no justification for crediting the mortgagee with any expenditure for collections. Exhibit 37 upon which the Subordinate Judge's conclusions are founded is an abstract of the Pargana Book which is kept at the Tahsil Head Quarters and maintained by the Qanungo under Board's Circular 3-VIII Rules 55C and 60. The entries are made from the Patwari's siahas which he files at the close of the year in the Tahsil. The evidential value of the entries in Exhibit 37 is, therefore, no more than of the entries in the Patwari's papers themselves, and we have shown that in the particular circumstances of this case they are not reliable as, indeed, the learned Subordinate Judge himself holds. Further, a yearly average of rental founded merely on cash rent roll cannot be accepted as a safe basis for calculation of profits if we take into consideration, as we must, the fact that the bulk of the profits is derived from the landlord's share of the grain produce which has increased by leaps and bounds during the latter years of the mortgagee's possession and must have brought immense profits consequent on the steady rise in prices of grain since 1914; facts which the learned Subordinate Judge notices but overlooks in striking an average for the purposes of the calculation. Besides, the amount of cash rental during the mortgagor's possession as entered in the Patwari's papers is by no means a correct index of the actuals. They being the Zamindars were finally responsible for the Government demand which may be assessed at the next Settlement. It was to their interest to show as low a rental as possible. Lastly, any calculation on the basis of an average area under cultivation for cash rents is, in our judgment, wholly misleading. A perusal of Exhibit 37 will disclose a remarkable increase in the area of lands yielding grain rent and a corresponding decrease in the area of lands with cash-rent since the year 1321 Fasli.

The mortgagee's case, as disclosed by the statement No. 1, is, that for the first five years (1313 to 1318) of his entering into possession the mortgagors continued in the actual occupation of the sir and khudkasht lands.

LAL BAHADUR v. MURLI DHAR.

This case, however, is not set out in the body of the plaint but is sought to be supported by the Patwari's khetaunis for those years, Exhibit 25 to 30. The best evidence on the point under consideration would have been the mortgagee's accounts. They are not before us, nor has the plaintiff or any managing agent of his sworn to that fact. In the circumstances, we decline to accept the Patwari's papers as sufficient or reliable evidence. On the other hand, we have unanimous evidence of a large number of village tenants produced by the defendants showing that the plaintiff took possession also of those lands when he entered into that possession of the share. We see no reason to reject this evidence. It is consistent with the probability that the lands being of the best quality and fairly large in area would naturally be taken possession of by the mortgagee who had a right to them. No reason is shown or even suggested why the mortgagee did or could not take possession of these lands from the beginning or how he came into possession later. We hold that the mortgagee has been in possession of the sir and khudkasht lands since 1913 Fasli and is accordingly liable to be debited with the profits thereof.

In the statement 1 attached to the plaint, we observe that the plaintiff has made deductions to the extent of one-fourth in the profits arising out of the sir and khudkasht lands as representing the fraction belonging to the share not assigned to him. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have done the same thing. This clearly is wrong. These lands are not held by the entire proprietary body of the village but appertain exclusively to the mortgagor's share of 12 annas in the possession of the mortgagee.

We are not prepared to accept the bare suggestion, unsupported by any evidence, that the mortgagee did not keep any account of his receipt and expenditure. As observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff was a "leading" legal practitioner at Sitapur and keeps karindas and munshis. He must be presumed to have been aware of the provisions of law on the subject. We think that the accounts are suppressed.

The Counsel for the appellants has argued that, having regard to the default of the mortgagee in keeping or producing the necessary accounts, there should be a presumption that the whole of the mortgage money, principal (Rs. 10,000) and interest has been wiped off by the receipts of rents and profits of the mortgaged property. We are unable to yield to this argument. "Presumptions, even in odium spoliatoris, have known reasonable limits. They must not be conjectures, nor founded on data which the evidence itself shows to be in exact.' [Shah Mukhun Lall v. Baboo Sree Kishen Singh (2).]

"If the mortgagee fail to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by this section, he may when accounts are taken in pursuance of a decree made under this Chapter, be debited with the loss, if any, occasioned by such failure." The general result at which we arrive is, that the net profits of the mortgaged property were large enough to cover the interest (Rs. 1,050) as it accrued from year to year, any deficiency in Kharif being balanced by an excess in Rabi. We think we are jusitfied in backing this conclusion with the presumption which we might make against the plaintiff to this limited extent only.

Further, clause 3 of the mortgage-deed provides that if the interest at the rate of 14 annas per cent. per mensem is "not paid off out of the amount of profits," it is only then that compound interest will be chargeable on the basis of six monthly rests. It is a part of the plaintiff's cause of action that the profits have fallen short of the amount of interest all through. He must prove this. He has not done so.

Now we proceed to state categorically the conclusions which we deem we are justified in drawing from the evidence on the record, after having carefully balanced the weak and the strong points of it and also from the presumption, to a limited extent, arising out of the mortgagee's conduct in not producing any account of his receipt and expenditure. Having regard to the condition of evidence, these conclusions are obviously not correct to a mathematical precision, but, in the circumstances, they are just and proper according to our judgment:

(1) The area of the lands yielding (1) grain rent (2) cash rent and of (3) sir and khudakasht as shown in Exhibit 37 may be accepted.

(2) The amount of the cash rent as given in Exhibit 37 may also be accepted.

(3) The money equivalents of the grain rent as shown in Exhibit 37 or other Patwari papers cannot possibly be accepted. The plaintiff fixes too low and the defendants too high a rate of rent as we have said before. We think that a fair standard would be Rs. 8 per pukhta bigha.

(4) For the same reason we fix the same amount of rent, i.e., Rs. 8 per pukhta bigha for the sir and khudkasht lands. This should be debited against the mortgagee from 1313 Fasli. Without any deduction for the one fourth share not mortgaged.

(5) Sewai income of Rs. 36 a year should be credited to the mortgagors.

(6) No deduction should be allowed to the mortgagee for collection charges.

(7) Deduction should be allowed of Rs. 283 annually for the proportionate Government revenue.

We annex to our judgment a schedule of accounts prepared on the lines aforementioned.* It will be noticed that, except in the year 1319 Fasli, the profits have exceeded the interest. But, as we have already mentioned, this account does not carry the guarantee of mathematical accuracy. It only represents a fair and proper estimate founded on the evidence which we have before us. We have consequently not deemed it just to debit the mortgagee with the profits in excess of the interest.

We, therefore, allow the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Court by declaring that Rs. 10,000 are due to the plaintiff under the mortgage dated the 21st December 1897. We allow to the defendants six months' time from to-day's date to deposit the said sum in Court for payment to the plaintiff in default the mortgage will be foreclosed. The usual preliminary decree for foreclosure as required by O. XXXIV, r 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure will be prepared. The cross-objections are dismissed. In the particular circumstances of the case, which are abundantly indicated in our judgment, wye direct that the parties shall bear their own costs in both the Courts.

Buddhist Law—Inheritance—Child of divorced wife when disentitled to inherit—Child living separate from father at his request, rights of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99, O. VI, r. 14—Omission to sign plaint—Irregularity.

It is settled law that if a child on the divorce of his mother accompanied by partition of property goes to live with her and ceases to be a member of his father's household, he is debarred from inheriting from his father. [p. 101, col. 2.]

A child, however, who, on the divorce of his mother, merely at his father's request lives separately from him, is not included amongst the six classes of children who are not entitled to inherit. [p. 102, col. 1.]

A decree passed in favour of a plaintiff cannot be disturbed in appeal on the ground that he omitted to sign the plaint as required by O. VI, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code, section 99 of the Code applies to such a case. [p. 101, col. 1.]

Civil second appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court, Lower Chindwin, passed in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1922, dated the 2nd May 1922.

Mr. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganguly, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit for a share of her father, Maung Kaung Tha's estate. The first defendant-respondent is the widow of Maung Kaung Tha. The second defendant-respondent, Ma Leik, is his daughter by his second wife and the 3rd and 4th defendants-respondents are his co-heirs.

The plaintiff-appellant is the daughter of Maung Kaung Tha's third wife, Ma Shwe Khan. One of the defences raised was that the plaintiff-appellant's mother had been divorced by Maung Kaung Tha and the plaintiff-appellant had lived with her and had severed all connection with her father and that, consequently, she was not entitled to inherit from him. The Courts below agreed in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiff-appellant had not kept up filial relations with her father and was not entitled to inherit. There are no findings on the other issues framed. The plaintiff-appellant did not appear in Court. She filed the plaint through an agent and she did not even sign the plaint. Under O. VI, r. 14, every pleading must be signed by the party and his Pleader (if any); provided that where a party pleading is by reason of absence, or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorised by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf. I cannot find any power-of-attorney given by the plaintiff to her agent on the record and no explanation was apparently obtained for her failure to sign the plaint. No objection, however, appears to have been taken and section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the case. It appears from the evidence that Ma Shwe Khan left Maung Kaung Tha before the plaintiff-appellant Ma Ngwe Kin's birth, that after her birth she applied for an order of maintenance against Maung Kaung Tha and he thereupon sued her for restitution of conjugal rights and for the custody of her child and obtained a decree. Ma Shwe Khan then divorced him. Ma Ngwe Kin lived for a short time with her father and then went and lived with his sister. Later she returned and lived with her father and was doing so when he married his last wife, the first defendant-respondent, Ma Hme. Ma Ngwe Kin continued to live with her father and her step-mother for some time and then was sent by her father to live with her mother and she continued to live with her mother until her father's death; but during that time she paid two or three visits to her father. The case has been very imperfectly tried. There are a great many discrepancies as to the length of time that Ma Ngwe Kin lived with her father and as to her age when she left him. Very little attempt has been made to clear up these discrepancies and it is not at all clear whether Ma Shwe Khan after the divorce lived in the same village as Maung Kaung Tha or not.

The learned Additional Judge of the District Court found that Ma Ngwe Kin, for a number of years before her father's death, had definitely thrown in her lot with her mother's family and severed connection with her father's household. It is not clear altogether on which side the Additional Judge laid the burden of proof with respect to this issue. He apparently laid it on the plaintiff-appellant but at the same time considered that the evidence of the Circle Thugyi Ko Maung Gyi, proved that plaintiff-appellant severed all connection with her father's household. He seems to have thought that the Circle Thugyi owing to his position had peculiar opportunities of knowing what took place in the various households under his charge. I think the Additional Judge was mistaken in this. A Circle Thugyi may be in charge of a very large area and I do not suppose that he pays particular attention to children with whom he has no concern. Practically all the rulings in Upper and Lower Burma relating to the question whether a child who has separated from his father can inherit or not have been cited. But none of them are exactly parallel. There are, as far as I know, no texts in any of the Dhammathats that lay down when a child of a divorced wife can inherit from his father and when he cannot. But it may be taken as settled law that if a child on the divorce of his mother accompanied by partition of property goes to live with her and ceases to be a member of his father's household he is debarred from inheriting from his father. In the present case, however, the plaintiff-appellant did not go to live with her mother on the latter's divorce but remained with her father. If she had continued to live with her father up to his death there can be no question at all that she would have been entitled to inherit from him. The burden of proving that she had lost that right was, therefore, upon the defendant-respondents and the question is whether they discharged it. According to the evidence of the Circle Thugyi Ma Ngwe Kin was eight or nine when she left her father and he died when she was sixteen or seventeen. According to the evidence of the plaintiff's agent she was thirteen when she left her father. I do not think the fact that Ma Shwe Khan was divorced from Maung Kaung Tha should affect the case at all; because, as I have said, the plaintiff-appellant did not go to live with her mother on the divorce but continued to live with her father. The question, therefore, is whether a separation for three years according to the witness, Maung Po Tok, or for eight years according to the evidence of the Circle Thugyi can itself deprive her of the right to inherit. In Ma Taik v. Ma Nyun (1) it was held that a daughter who, from her infancy to the age of twenty-one, had never had anything whatever to do with her father although her mother had not been divorced, was not entitled to inherit. That, of course, was a such stronger case. In the present case Maung Kaung Tha apparently cherished the plaintiff-appellant and when she left him she did so at his request presumably as a matter of convenience. There is the evidence of the first defendant herself, Ma Hme, who is certainly not inclined to favour the plaintiff-appellant, because though, when examined at the first hearing, she stated that the latter had lived with her father and with her for two years after her marriage, she, when examined as a witness, reduced this period to one year, to the effect that the plaintiff-appellant paid her father two or three visits after leaving him. So there was apparently no rupture. There is, so far as I know, no provision in the Dhammathats enabling a father to disinherit his child except by giving him away in adoption to another, though a child who behaves as an enemy towards his parents is debarred from inheriting. A child who merely at his father's request lives separately from him is not included amongst the six classes of children who are not entitled to inherit. It was held, in the ruling cited above, that the Buddhist Code does not give any meritorious value to mere living together or make the opposite state of things a reason for exclusion, and there must be some filial neglect to exclude. What filial neglect is proved in the present case? The plaintiff-appellant lived separately from her father to suit his convenience. Is there any evidence that her father sent for her on any occasion and that she did not go to him or that he ever requested her to do something for him and was met with a refusal? She was only sixteen when her father died, and as she was living separately from him she would naturally not minister to him unless he requested her to do so. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the suit, so far as this issue concerned, has been wrongly decided, and as there are no findings on the other issues the case will be remanded to the Sub-Divisional Court for findings on the other issues framed. The proceedings will be re-submitted with the findings of both Courts within two months.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 89—Refusal to accept deposit—Refusal to exercise jurisdiction—Revision.

A refusal to accept a deposit under O. XXI, r. 89, of the Civil Procedure Code tendered for the purpose of setting aside a sale is a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and a revision from such an order lies under section 115 of the Code. [p. 104, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

A. A. O. No. 156 OF 1922.

Mullick J.—Appeal No. 156 of 1922 is preferred by a mortgagee whose mortgage lien covered 4 lots of property and who obtained a preliminary decree against the respondent on the 28th July 1918 and a final decree on the 13th July 1919. Meanwhile, on the 16th April 1918, the appellant had bought the equity of redemption in lot No. 1 in execution of a money-decree which he had obtained against the respondent. Then, on the 4th August 1920, the appellant took out execution of his mortgage-decree and applied for the sale of plots Nos. 2, 3 and 4 only, but this course the judgment-debtor objected to and the execution case was dismissed. In his next application for execution the apppellant entered in the list of the properties to be sold all the four lots, but he requested that lot No. 1 should be sold last because he had purchased the equity of redemption in it. The judgment-debtor opposed this prayer and on the 11th December 1920 lot No. 1 was put up to sale and the whole decretal debt realised therefrom.

The appellant thereupon appealed to the District Judge but without success, and he files the present second appeal on the ground that, in the absence of any direction in the decree to the contrary and of any equities created against himself, he was entitled to sell the mortgaged properties in whatever order he chose. I think this contention is well founded. The purchase of the equity of redemption split up the mortgage and the appellant became entitled to recover only a proportionate share of the mortgage-money by the sale of lots Nos. 2, 3 and 4. He was not entitled to sell these 3 lots for the entire debt and all that the Execution Court could compel him to do was to sell lots Nos. 2, 3 and 4 for the reduced amount. But the Court could not compel him to sell lot No. 1 and its order was, therefore, bad.

But the lot having been purchased by a third party bona fide and without notice. We are unable in this appeal to set aside the sale.

It is alleged by the appellant that the purchaser, Latifur Rahman, is a benamidar for the judgment-debtor, but that has not been proved. The appellant might, perhaps, have been in a better position if he had, when the Court decided to sell lot No. 1, declined to proceed with the execution and preferred an appeal; but as matters stand this second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

A. A. O. No. 155 OF 1922.

Mullick, J.—This appeal has been heard with the above Appeal No. 156.

It appears that after Latifur Rahman purchased the property, the mortgagee made an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to deposit the purchase-money with interest and to get the sale set aside. The Munsif decided in the appellant's favour, but the District Judge in appeal held that by putting the four properties up to sale without stating in the sale proclamation that he had purchased the equity of redemption in lot No. 1 the appellant had created an equitable estoppel against himself. He accordingly reversed the Munsif's order and dismissed the appellant's application. Against this order the appellant files the present appeal.

It is clear no appeal lies but the appellant asks that his petition may be treated as an application for revision. In the special circumstances of this case we grant his prayer and proceed to consider the merits of his case.

Far from attempting to conceal that he was the purchaser of the equity of redemption the appellant had from the moment that he filed his first execution case strenuously contended that lot No. 1 could not be sold because he was its owner by purchase and I can see no representation on his part by reason of which the auction-purchaser was induced to change his position. I think, therefore, that there was no equitable estoppel in the case.

The next question is whether the appellant was entitled to make the deposit. In my opinion his purchase of lot No. 1 did not extinguish the equity of redemption; the right purchased was, in the first place, not co-extensive with his right as mortgagee and, in the second place, here the presumption of an intention to keep the security alive is very strong.

Therefore, he was at the time of the mortgage-sale the owner of the property, and he was competent to make the deposit under O. XXI, r. 89, of the Civil Procedure Code. In my opinion the Munsif's order setting aside the sale was right and the learned District Judge was wrong in reversing it.

It is, however, contended by the opposite party that this is not a case in which we can interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The reply is that it is now the settled practice of the Court to treat a refusal to accept a deposit tender for the purpose of setting aside a sale as a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and I think that the present application is maintainable under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The result is that the application is allowed with costs: the order of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs in the Courts of the Munsif and the District Judge. The hearing fee in this Court is fixed at Rs. 32.

Macpherson, J.—I agree.

First civil appeal against the decree of the District Court, Pyapon, dated 13th August 1921, in Civil Regular No. 13 of 1921.

Mr. Kyaw Htoon, for the Appellants.

Mr. Maung Pu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

May Oung, J.—The plaintiff, now respondent, claiming to have been the granddaughter of one U Po Maung, deceased, sued the defendants, the widow and stepdaughters of U Po Maung, for a share in the estate left by him. U Po Maung is stated to have been married thrice, first to Ma Dun Hala, by whom he is alleged to have had one son, Po Mya, next to Ma Ngwe Gyi by whom he had no issue and lastly to the 1st defendant. The plaintiff averred that she was the daughter of Po Mya who died before his father.

In the first instance, the plaintiff's application for leave to sue in forma pauperis was opposed by the defendants. During the enquiry the 1st defendant specifically admitted, on oath, that the plaintiff was the daughter of Po Mya who was the only son of U Po Maung by his former wife; but on the plaintiff's application being allowed the defendants filed a written statement in answer to the claim in the course of which they disclaimed personal knowledge of U Po Maung's family connections, prior to the 1st defendant's union with him and protested that they had never even seen the plaintiff until she came forward after U Po Maung's death to claim a share in the inheritance.

Issues of fact were, therefore, framed to ascertain the plaintiff's and Po Mya's parentage. These were decided in the plaintiff's favour and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 now appeal. Their learned Counsel urges that the evidence adduced in the case was insufficient to establish the plaintiff's claim. It is necessary, in the first place, to remember that the plaintiff was called upon to prove, among other things, events which took place long before she was born. She is now about twenty-eight years old and Ma Dun Hla is stated to have died forty-two years before the suit. Again, U Po Maung was an Upper Burman who came as a young man to settle in the Delta and died at the age of eighty-two leaving no other blood relatives. And it is not suggested that Ma Dun Hla left any. Hence this is a case in which evidence of general repute is of considerable importance provided it is cogent. In this connection the statement of Ko Shwe Sa, a witness called by the defendants themsleves, is clear and unmistakeable. He is over sixty years of age, a resident of Thandin, the deceased's village, and a hawker. He had known the deceased for forty years and had heard the plaintiff addressing U Po Maung as "grandfather" and Po Mya calling him father. Referring to the deceased and the plaintiff, he said," the general talk in the village was that they are grandfather and granddaughter," and, speaking of the deceased and Po Mya, "it was talked about in the village that they were father and son." Now Thandin is a small hamlet containing about thirty houses and it is only reasonable to suppose that relationships such as are now in question would generally be known to and talked about by most of the inhabitants. It may, therefore, be taken as fully established that the plaintiff was at least the reputed granddaughter of the deceased and there is no evidence that the latter at any time denied the relationship.

U Tha Zan, the 1st witness of the plaintiff, aged eighty years and a money-lender, had lived at Thandin for over forty years and during that period had known the deceased intimately. They worked adjoining lands. According to him, U Po Maung went over to Wegyi, a distant village, and married there. After seven or eight years he returned to Thandin, bringing with him his wife, Ma Dun Hla, and a child about four years old; that child was Po Mya. Subsequently, U Po Maung, left a widower, married Ma Ngwe Gyi, and Po Mya divided his residence between his father's house at Thandin and those of his mother's relatives at Wegyi. Po Mya married Ma Hnin Nu at Wegyi and by her had a daughter, the plaintiff. The witness first saw the plaintiff when the latter was seven or eight years old and it was then that she began visiting U Po Maung at Thandin; U Po Maung told him that she was his grand-daughter. The plaintiff gave birth to a child in U Po Maung's house and was living with him at the time of his death; she had been so living for over a year. Finally, the witness stated that the fact of Po Mya's being the son of U Po Maung was "notorious" in the village. The defence seek to discredit the evidence of this witness, on the ground that he had a law-suit over a small piece of land with U Po Maung which was compromised, the witness paying the sum of Rs. 5. After the case witness did not go to U Po Maung's house and was not on speaking terms with him and the first defendant; but U Po Maung is dead and there is no reason to hold that the witness, at his age, bears such a strong resentment towards his widow as would lead him to swear falsely to a state of facts which must, in the ordinary course, have been within his knowledge. The first defendant, though she is strenuous in her denials, says, "I have heard the statements made by the plaintiff's witnesses. I am not prepared to say whether their statements are true or false." I would accept U Tha Zan's evidence without hesitation or doubt.

Besides U Tha Zan, there are three other residents of Thandin who supported the plaintiff and established the facts that Po Mya was generally looked upon and acknowledged as the son of U Po Maung, that he used to visit his father occasionally and that he worked his father's land with his father for a few years.

There is also the admitted fact that the plaintiff and her husband lived for over a year, prior to U Po Maung's death, in a hut near the latter's granary behind his house. The first defendant says that they came and lived there to work as coolies but, considering that she had in her written statement falsely denied ever having seen the plaintiff before U Po Maung died, no reliance can be placed on her attempts to be little the position in which the plaintiffs tood towards U Po Maung during his lifetime. It is proved that U Po Maung was very stingy and the fact that he did not keep his granddaughter in comfort does not negative the evidence that the relationship claimed did exist.

For the defence, besides Ko Shwe Sa, already mentioned, two witnesses were called who gave negative evidence. U Hmo Gyi, aged seventy-six, stated that he had never seen the plaintiff before U Po Maung's death, or after that event till a month before, he came to Court as a witness in this case. Seeing that his house was only four or five doors away from U Po Maung's this is an extraordinary denial and the witness must, I think, be held to have been trying to say too much. He, however, admitted that after Ma Ngwe Gyi's death Po Mya came and worked U Po Maung's land for one year, and was not prepared to say that the plaintiff was not Po Mya's child. Maung Tin Dok styled himself a Doctor and said that he had known U Po Maung since he, witness, was about seventeen; he was fifty-five when he gave evidence. He lived four or five houses away and used to meet the deceased almost every day. He denied everything except that he had seen the plaintiff in a hut at the back of U Po Maung's house but, according to him, she lived in it for only three or four months; he did not even know that Po Mya ever worked U Po Maung's land, a fact admitted by U Po Hmo Gyi. In my view, the statements of these witnesses did not appreciably weaken the case for the plaintiff.

There is one weak point on plaintiff's side, viz., her omission to call her mother who is admitted to be alive at Wegyi. Her testimony would have been of value, especially as regards the question of the plaintiff's birth and parentage; and, as she had visited Thandin, she might have spoken to her relationship with U Po Maung. But, in any case, her evidence, if given, would have been open to the objection that she was interested in her daughter's welfare and I do not think that the failure to cite her is fatal to the claim.

Above all, there are the first defendant's admissions made when she was examined on the question of the plaintiff's pauperism. She has made frantic efforts to explain these away. First of all, she said that she did not think she had made the statements attributed to her. Then she pleaded that owing to the loss of her husband and certain relatives her mind was unhinged and hence she did not know what she had stated before. Confronted with the statements, she said they must be incorrect. Finally, it was only in re-examination that she said: 'In my former deposition I made those statements in cross-examination, because she had claimed that status.'' I would hold that she is utterly unreliable and that she must be deemed to have acknowledged the plaintiff's status and thus spoken the truth in an unguarded moment.

The conclusion is, therefore, in my view, irresistible that the plaintiff was the granddaughter of the deceased and, as such, entitled to a share in his estate.

There remains the question of the extent of that share. The Court below, following the decision in Sein Tun v. Mi On Kra Zan (1) awarded the plaintiff 9/20ths of the "payin" or "alletpa" property possessed by U Po Maung at the time of his marriage with the first defendant, and 1/8th of the jointly acquired property of that marriage. In doing so it omitted to notice that in this case there was no issue of the subsequent marriage as was the case in the ruling cited. The first defendant had brought two daughters from a previous marriage but the latter cannot inherit from their step-father in the presence of a descendant, the plaintiff, and their claim, if any, as against their own parent does not arise. The exact point is, however, covered by authority. The Dhammathats quoted in Ma Hnin Dok v. Ma U (2) are clear and unambiguous; they give the grandchild one-half of the "payin" and 1/8th of the 'lettet-pwa." In the later case of Maung Kado v. Ma Kyin (3), the position as regards 'payin" was re-examined and the method of equal division between the grandchild and its step-grandparent was confirmed. The plaintiff has not, however, appealed and the award of 9/20ths cannot, therefore, be disturbed.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs, payable by the first defendant out of her share in the estate.

Robinson, C. J.—I concur.

Revision of the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge, Akola, dated the 28th June 1922 in Civil Suit No. 2817 of 1921.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The present applicant-defendant is the husband of the plantiff's younger sister. The plaint states that in February 1920 defendant asked for Rs. 200 for the purpose of settling the plaintiff's marriage. The plaintiff, however, sent only Rs. 175 by money order. Defendant did not spend that sum in connection with the plaintiff's marriage in accordance with the agreement come to and, therefore, plaintiff sued to get the money back. Plaintiff's Pleader stated that girls were scarce in the caste and plaintiff wanted the defendant to secure a girl for him and the money was given him to be paid to the guardian of the girl selected should money be demanded.

For the defence, receipt of money was admitted. Defendant selected a girl to be married to the plaintiff and Rs. 400 were to be paid. Rupees 175 was not paid to the guardian of the girl but was with the defendant. The negotiations fell through. As the money was paid for a purpose which is immoral and opposed to public policy it could not be recovered. It was further pleaded that the defendant had lent Rs. 300 to the plaintiff some two years before and plaintiff told the defendant that this sum of Rs. 175 might be taken in part payment of that debt. This alleged agreement was denied by the plaintiff. No evidence was called in the case and the Judge found that defendant had no evidence to show that the amount was allowed to be appropriated towards the debt: and as regards the plaintiff's right to recover the amount, it was held that the amount was not paid to the bride's father; it was in deposit with the defendant who was bound to return it to the plaintiff. Plaintiff's claim was decreed. Against that decree the present application in revision has been filed by the defendant.

It is here pleaded that the contract is one of marriage brocage; that the money was paid to the defendant to induce the guardian of some minor girl to give that girl in marriage to the plaintiff. It has been held that agreements to procure marriage by reward are void on the ground that the marriage ought to proceed if not from mutual affection, at least, from the free and deliberate decision of the parties with an unbiased view to their welfare. But consent of parties is not an essential condition in the Hindu marriage contract. It has been held that agreement to pay money to the parent or guardian of a minor in consideration of his consenting to give the minor in marriage is void as being opposed to public policy: See Vaithyanatham v. Gangarazu (1) Pitamber Ratansi v. Jagjivan Hansraj (2), and Dholidas Ishvar v. Fulchand Chhagan (3). But I do not think that these cases govern the present one. It may be that the guardian or parent to whom the sum of money has been promised inconsideration of his or her giving his or her daughter in marriage may not be able to recover the sum so promised on the ground that the agreement is void as opposed to public policy. But where the plaintiff has paid the money in advance a suit can lie to recover back the amount on failure of the defendant to give the bride in marriage: See Srinivasa Aiyar v. Sesha Iyer (4) and Gulabchand Paramchand v. Fulbai Harichand (5).

The present is not a case by a person paying money to a stranger hired to procure a wife for him. Defendant was to get nothing but if, according to custom of the caste, the father of the proposed bride had to be paid something then the money was to be paid to him. Under these circumstances, I do not see how the defendant can refuse to return the money and he has failed to prove any agreement whereby the same was to go towards the payment of money lent by him. The decree of the lower Court appears to me to be correct. I dismiss this application in revision.

Evidence Act (I of 1872) s. 165, applicability of—Witness called by Court—Right to cross-examine.

Section 165 of the Evidence Act applies to Court witnesses, as the expression "any witness" appears to include such a witness. The cross-examination of a Court witness is not a matter of absolute right but requires the leave of the Court. Where, however, such a witness makes an important statement which is against the case set up by one or other of the parties, the Court should allow the witness to be cross-examined. Appeal against an order of the Sub-Judge, Gonda, dated the 21st December 1922, setting aside the decree of the Munsif, Tarabganj, dated the 30th November 1921.

Mr. Aditya Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Mahmud Beg, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal. The suit was one for pre-emption. The vendor was Fazal Akbar. The vendees were Makund Singh and others, the present appellants. The plaintiff pre-emptor was Musammat Ghafur-un-Nissa, widow of Fazal Rahim, Fazal Akbar's brother. In the Court of trial it was objected by the vendees defendants that Musammat Ghafur-un-Nissa was not a co-sharer and, therefore, had no right of pre-emption. The learned Munsif gave effect to this plea and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and the appeal was heard by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge who allowed the appeal and as the case had been decided on a preliminary point remanded it for decision on merits. The vendees have filed the present appeal against this order of remand. I am of opinion that the appeal fails because the question decided by the lower Appellate Court was one of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge said:—"The question as to whether the appellant has still got a right or share in the property left by her son, Fazal Rab depends upon the consideration of the further questions,—

"(1) As to whether Exhibits A3 and A7 were validly executed or not and what was their effect upon the rights of the appellant.

"(2) As to whether her title in the property has been extinguished by adverse possession of Fazal Akbar or not.

"Before the lower Court a plea of the exclusion of appellant from inheritance left by her son, was also raised, but was rejected by the learned Munsif for cogent reasons with which I fully concur, that plea has not been pressed upon me." The share which is now claimed by Musammat Ghafur-un-Nissa, plaintiff-respondent, came to her by inheritance on the death of her son Fazal Rab. Proof of the alleged custom having failed, it is for the appellant to show that the plaintiff's title has become extinguished. He attempted to do so by means of certain mutation proceedings. It appears that it was the Patwari who reported the death of Fazal Rab and that two compromises purporting to be entered into by Musammat Ghafur-un-Nissa and her husband's brother, Fazal Akbar, were put in before the learned Tahsildar and that mutation was effected on the basis of these compromises. The name of Fazal Akbar being recorded over the share of Musammat Ghafur-un-Nissa. I may point out here that the share which Fazal Akbar had sold is his own. There is no dispute about that. The question is, whether Musammat Ghafur-un-nissa is a co-sharer of any share so as to give her a right of pre-emption.

Now, the lady was a widow and a pardanashin and she was living, and is still living, in the same house as Fazal Akbar. In these circumstances, any one who set-up such a transaction as this compromise was bound to staisfy the Court (1) that it was executed, (2) that the lady fully understood what she was doing. The lower Appellate Court has found that the fact of execution is not proved and I cannot see that the Court has fallen into any error of law in coming to this decision. The compromise is not signed by the lady. It is not asserted that she appeared before the Tahsildar. It bears a mark made on her behalf by one Shamsool Haq, one of her relations, and there is no power-of-attorney authorising him to act for her. This part of the case, therefore, is at an end.

Secondly, it is argued that, whether she executed the compromise or not, her rights have been put an end to by the adverse possession of Fazal Akbar. But if the compromise fails, Fazal Akbar's possession would not be adverse. No doubt he was managing the property, but he may have been doing so on her behalf. She may have thought so, and even that would be enough. The Court will not be absolute to deprive the original owner of her title merely because some trick has been practised on her. It is in evidence that she was receiving some thing from Fazal Akbar and she says that she regarded it as her share in the profits. For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

There is a point which I do not decide. But as it was raised and argued before me, I think it right to say something on the subject for the guidance of the Courts. Fazal Akbar was called by the First Appellate Court as a Court witness and was examined. The present appellants vendees who were the respondents in that case claimed to examine him and the Court refused. The refusal is in these words.—

"At the time when I expressed my intention to the above effect the learned Pleaders for parties did not pray that they may be granted an opportunity to cross-examine. When his statement was recorded it turned out to be against the respondent; when learned Pleader prays for permission to cross-examine him, or suggest questions to the Court for his examination. The learned Pleader for the appellant contests the above prayer. I am afraid it is not possible for me to accede to the prayer of the learned Pleader for the respondent. I cannot allow him to cross-examine the witness as all the points for which he has been examined have been brought on record."

The learned Subordinate Judge was clearly wong in refusing permission to examine. The view of the Calcutta High Court is that parties have an absolute right, without the permission of the Court at all, to cross-examine a Court witness. Empress v. Grish Chunder Talukdar (1), Gopal Lall Seal v. Manick Lall Seal (2), Mohendro Nath Das Gupta v. Emperor (3) and Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (4). No doubt, all these cases were criminal cases. Most of them referred back to the old case Taring Churn Chowdhry v. Sharoda Soonduree Dossee (5). If it had been necessary to decide the point I should have felt constrained either to follow these Calcutta decisions or to refer the matter to a Bench. My personal opinion, if I may venture to state it, is that cross-examination is not a matter of right but requires the leave of the Court. I consider that section 165 of the Evidence Act applies to Court witnesses. The expression "any witness" appears to me to include a Court witness also. I think if the Judge were examining a Court witness,

(1) 5 C. 614; 5 C. L. R. 364; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 998.
(2) 24 C. 288; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 859.
(3) 29 C. 387; 6 C. W. N. 550.
(4) 35 C. 243; 12 C. W. N. 299; 7 C. L. J. 177; 7 Cr. L. J. 146.
(5) 5 B. L. R. (A. C. J.) 145 at p. 158; 11 W. R. 453.

and Counsel on either side were to object to the putting of a particular question the Judge would rely upon section 165 of the Evidence Act. So far as the statutory law goes, either the Evidence Act deals with the question in section 165, in which case the leave of the Court is necessary, or the Evidence Act is absolutely silent on the point, in which case, apart from the Calcutta Rulings, the only authority I know is the English case Coulson v. Disborough (6). It was a civil suit. The Judge refused permission to cross-examine and it was held that there was no right of cross-examination without the leave of the Court. It seems quite probable that the Legislature intended to embody the same rule in section 165 of the Evidence Act although, of course, the Evidence Act is much holder than this decision.

But even if the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in believing that he had a discretion in the matter, it is plain that the discretion was wrongly exercised. This Court witness made an important statement which was against the case of the present appellants, and on every ground of justice that statement ought to have been subjected to the test of cross-examination. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have actually thought that he had no authority to permit cross-examination. This is certainly wrong, and I should have been obliged to send the case back to have this witness cross-examined were it not that the respondent was ready to have the evidence of this witness taken out of the record, and the case decided apart from it, and the appellants ultimately agreed to this course being taken. The evidence of Fazal Akbar is, therefore, to be regarded as struck out of the record. As I said above, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, O. XX, r. 3—Inherent power of Court—Power to re-call order passed by predecessor—Judgments, sanctity of.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code gives no power whatever to a Judge to re-call an order passed by his predecessor-in-office. He is entitled to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in the judgment or errors arising from any accidental slip or omission and he is also entitled to review a judgment if there are grounds for review, but otherwise he is not entitled to touch that judgment in any way. [p. 111, col. 2; p. 112, col. 1.]

Revision from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 27th April 1923.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and B. K. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. C. Mitra and B. K. Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The petitioners were the plaintiffs in an action to recover possession of certain properties known as Sursand Raj Estate. They entered the properties in four schedules, properties in schedules III and IV being properties claimed by Asarfi Singh as his mokarrari. With reference to the property entered in schedule III there was a previous litigation between the parties, Asrafi Singh claiming those properties as his mokarrari and the petitioners disputing the claim of Asarfi Singh. The Court of first instance decided the suit in favour of Asarfi Singh; in other words, it held that Asarfi Singh had a mokarrari interest in those properties. In appeal the decision of the Court of the first instance was set aside and this Court in second appeal upheld the decision of the lower Appellate Court. It appears that Asarfi Singh has obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decision of this Court.

Now, it is admitted that the decision of the Judicial Committee will govern the rights of the parties so far as schedule III and IV properties are concerned; and before the learned Subordinate Judge the parties seem to have entered into some sort of agreement on this point. The learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with the schedule III and IV properties says as follows:—

"It has, therefore, been proposed by both parties that these issues may be left undetermined by this Court and in case of plaintiff's success a decree may be passed in respect of these properties subject to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. I agree with the proposal made by the parties and leave this point undetermined."

The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge with reference to the schedule III and IV properties is in these terms:-

"Let it be declared that the plaintiffs as Bandhus of the late Babu Kishun Pratap Indra Narayan Singh and by virtue of the agreement dated the 9th May 1908 are entitled to possession of the properties described in schedules I to IV of the plaint, but as regards the properties described in schedules III and IV they are entitled to possession subject to the decision of the Privy Council" and in dealing with the question of mesne profits the learned Subordinate Judge expressed himself in these terms:—

"Let it be furher declared that the plaintiffs are eatitled to profits with respect to the property of schedule IV but subject to the decision of the Privy Council for three years before suit and for subsequent period until delivery of possession or three years after the decree whatever event first occurs."

In my opinion there is no doubt whatever that the learned Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree in regard to schedules III and IV properties, but provided that that decree would have no operation if the Privy Council should ultimately allow the appeal of Asarfi Singh.

The petitioners applied for execution of the decree before the learned Subordinate Judge who actually passed the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge allowed execution not only in respect of schedule I and II properties but also in respect of schedule III and IV properties. Thereupon the opposite party Asarfi Singh applied for restitution under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code and for an order that the properties should be re-delivered to him and to a Receiver who had been appointed in a previous litigation. His view apparently was that there was no decree in respect of schedules III and IV properties and that the decree could not be executed so as to entitle the plaintiffs to recover possession of schedule III and IV properties. This application was made not before the learned Subordinate Judge who dealt with the case and passed the decree, but before another Subordinate Judge who succeeded the first mentioned Subordinate Judge. The learned Subordinate Judge in dealing with the application of Asarfi Singh conceded that section 144 had no application to the facts of the case, but he thought that he had complete jurisdiction to re-call the order which had been passed by his predecessor-in-office under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The order which he ultimately passed was in these words,—

"I, therefore, allow the application under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code because in my opinion possession over these properties could not be delivered before the decision of the Privy Council. The receiver and the applicant will be restored to the possession of schedules III and IV properties."

In my opinion the order of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code gives him no power whatever to re-call an order which had been passed by his predecessor-in-office. The application for execution was an application in accordance with law made before a Subordinate Judge who had jurisdiction to deal with that application. Rightly or wrongly, the learned Subordinate Judge dealing with the application allowed execution to proceed against schedules III and IV properties. If he was wrong in allowing execution to proceed against schedules III and IV properties, Asarfi Singh, who was a party to the suit, could have appealed against that order under the provision of the Civil Procedure Code. Where there is a remedy by way of appeal, it is, in my opinion, an extraordinary thing for a learned Judge to exercise what he calls his inherent power and to set aside an order passed by his predecessor-in-office. In my opinion he arrogated to himself a power which did not belong to him but which, properly speaking, belonged to an Appellate Court. Order XX, r. 3, of the Civil Procedure Code provides that the judgment "shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by section 152 or on review."

The rule embodies the well-known principle that, after the judgment is entered and signed, the Court pronouncing the judgment is no longer competent to deal with the subject-matter of that judgment except on review or under section 152 of the Code. In other words, he is entitled to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in the judgment or errors arising from any accidental slip or omission and he is also entitled to review the judgment if there are grounds for review, but otherwise he is not entiteld to touch that judgment in any way.

In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction whatever under section 151 of the Code to re-call the order passed by his predecessor-in-office. I would accordingly allow this application and set aside the order passed by the Court below. The petitioners are entitled to the costs of this application. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Order on applicaton to withdraw from suit—Discretion of Court—Revision.

From an order on an application to withdraw a suit with leave to bring a fresh one, if the lower Court has applied its mind to the question whether sufficient cause under O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code is established, no revision to the High Court lies, whether the decision is right or wrong. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the Munsif, Shikohabad, dated the 8th of January 1923.

Mr. Shambhu Nath Chaube, for the Applicants.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the learned Munsif of Shikohabad granting permission to withdraw a suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, with permission to file a fresh suit. The application for withdrawal was made after a considerable amount of evidence had been recorded on both sides. The reasons given for the application were two. (1) The non-joinder of a person who is alleged by the defendants to be a co-sharer in the holding in dispute to be a necessary party

(2) The fact that a Patwari whom the plaintiff wished to produce as rebutting witness had been won over by the other side.

For these reasons the plaintiff alleged that the suit was liable to fail and he asked for permission to withdraw it as stated above.

The second reason was admittedly not a proper reason for allowing withdrawal of the suit. The learned Munsif, however, has not acted on this reason; he has acted on the first reason, saying that in his opinion misjoinder of parties was a formal defect coming within O. XXIII, r. 1 and that as the defendants had themselves alleged Murlidhar, the person in question, to be a necessary party they were not in a position to dispute the point. On the merits I consider that the order passed by the learned Munsif was an unfortunate order. The formal defect of non-joinder of Murlidhar might easily have been cured by impleading him which could be done at any time before the case was decided. It is probable, therefore, that the real reason for the application was the one of which the Munsif takes no notice in his order. The question which arises in this case and which has been argued before me is whether, under these circumstances, any revision lies. There is ample authority for the proposition that this Court has power to revise such orders where the lower Court has not exercised a judicial discretion in passing them. There is equally strong authority including the cases of Ratan Lal v. Muhammad Hamidullah Khan (1) and Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (2) for the proposition that where the lower Court has applied its mind to the question whether sufficient cause under O. XXIII, r. 1 is established, no revision lies whether its actual decision is right or wrong. It is clear that the present case comes within the latter principle. The Court's decision may have been wrong, in my opinion it was, but the learned Munsif undoubtedly did apply his mind to the question whether there was a formal defect by reason of which the suit was liable to fail and came to the conclusion that there was. I must, therefore, hold that no revision lies and I dismiss the present application Under the circumstances, I make no order as to costs.

Hindu Law—Widow—Gift to third person with consent of next reversioner—Reversioner an adjudicated insolvent—Donee, rights of.

A conveyance by a Hindu widow of her husband's estate in favour of a third party, with the consent of the next reversioner is based on the notion that she surrenders the estate into the hands of the reversioner, instantly followed by a conveyance to the third party. Where, however, on the date of the conveyance the consenting reversioner is an adjudicated insolvent whose estate has vested in the Receiver in insolvency, the conveyance would confer no rights on the donee, because, if there is any vesting of the estate for a single moment in the reversioner on the day on which the conveyance is executed, in that very same instant whatever rights vest in the reversioner would pass to the Receiver in insolvency, and there would be nothing which the reversioner could convey to the donee. [p. 114, col. 2; p. 115, col. 1.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Bareilly.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and A. P. Dube, for the Appellant.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal in an insolvency matter raises a pure question of law. The name of the insolvent is Champa Prasad and he was so adjudicated on the 21st of June 1918. Champa Prasad's mother was one Ganeshi Kuer the daughter of one Durga Prasad. This gentleman died possessed of considerable property, which passed with a widow's estate to his widow, Musammat Moola Kuer. This lady died in the month of December 1919 and it is admitted that, thereupon, the property passed to Ganeshi Kuer, also with the limited estate of a Hindu widow. That lady, however, proceeded to execute at once a deed of gift conveying the whole estate to her grandson, Harihar Prasad, the son of the insolvent Champa Prasad, who joined with her in the execution of the document.

On the death of Musammat Ganeshi Kuer, the creditors of the insolvent claimed to take this property as that of the insolvent Champa Prasad. On objection taken by marihar Prasad the Insolvency Court has gone into the question, but has upheld the contention of the creditors. The finding of the Court below is that this property vested in the insolvent Champa Prasad on the death of his mother, Ganeshi Kuer. It undoubtedly did so vest unless it had previously passed to Harihar Prasad under the deed of gift of the 11th of December 1919.

There is one complication which ought to be mentioned. One of the creditors held a mortgage affecting a portion of the property concerned, which had been executed by Moola Kuer, Ganeshi Kuer and Champa Prasad, jointly, on the 4th of February 1915. He has obtained a decree on his mortgage in a contested suit to which Harihar Prasad was a party. In that suit the Court tried, as between the mortgagee and all the defendants, the issue whether the deed of gift of December 11th, 1919, conveyed anything to Harihar Prasad beyond the lifetime of Ganeshi Kuer. In substance, the Court found that this was an alienation by a Hindu widow without legal necessity; that it conveyed nothing to the donee beyond a right of possession and enjoyment in the lifetime of the widow, and that, on the death of Ganeshi Kuer, the property had vested in the insolvent Champa Prasad. It is suggested that this finding operates as res judicata, at any rate, as between the secured creditors and the appellant Harihar Prasad. The only answer to this is a contention on the part of Harihar Prasad that he was not properly represented in the suit on the mortgage. In the view which we take of the law applicable to the case as a whole, it is not necessary for us to go into this question. We thought it advisable to refer to this previous litigation partly as a matter of record, and also because it is quite clear that in the mortgage suit the question of the validity of the deed of gift in favour of Harihar Prasad was fought out solely on the ground of the presumption or otherwise of legal necessity for the transfer. Now, if this be the right way in which to regard this transfer, then the decision of the Trial Court is unquestionably right. To begin with, a transfer by way of gift, cannot, broadly speaking, be supported by any allegation of legal necessity. If the fact that Champa Prasad, being the nearest reversioner living at the time, expressed his consent to the alienation by joining in the same, be relied upon merely as raising a presumption in favour of legal necessity, then that presumption is in the case now before us abundantly rebutted. Champa Prasad, having been adjudicated an insolvent, could derive no benefit from his succession to the property, which would revert to the Receiver in Bankruptcy on the very day he succeeded to it. It was obviously to his advantage to agree to a transfer of that property in favour of his own son and to the detriment of his creditors. The fact of his doing so raises no presumption whatever in favour of the necessity for the alienation.

It has, however, been contended before us that a transfer in favour of a third person—and for the purposes of the question now before us Harihar Prasad must be treated as a third party, who had no concern whatever in the possible devolution by inheritance of the estate in hands of Ganeshi Kuer—if made by a Hindu widow with the consent of the nearest reversionary heir living at the time of the alienation, so long as it be a surrender of the entire estate in the hands of such widow, operates as a valid transfer proprio rigore, and not by reason of the reversioner's consent raising a rebuttable presumption as to legal necessity. This contention is sought to be founded on certain passages in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1), which is the latest and most authoritative pronouncement on the whole question of a Hindu widow's powers in dealing with the property of her husband to which she had succeeded with a life-estate on his death. It seems to us, however, that, where their Lordships definitely sum up the principles which they propose to lay down for the guidance of the Courts in India, they limit the cases in which the question of necessity does not fall to be considered to those cases in which there has been a surrender by the widow of her whole interest in the whole of the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation. They go on to deal with alienations in favour of persons who are not the nearest reversioner for the time being, and they seem to us to place all such alienations in the second category, that is, of alienations which require to be supported on the ground of necessity. We may add that the present case is a particularly strong one. The older opinion, which was to some extent supported by decisions disclosed in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council above referred to, which treated a conveyance by a widow in favour of a third party as valid proprio rigore if made with the consent of the nearest reversioner or reversioners alive on the date of such alienations, was based upon the notion that that was a surrender of the estate into the hands of such reversioner or reversioners, instantly followed by a conveyance to a third party. Such a doctrine could not be applied in the present case because, if there was any vesting of the estate for a single moment in Champa Prasad on the day on which his mother Ganeshi Kuer surrendered it by executing the deed of gift of December 11th, 1919, in that very same instant whatever rights vested in Champa Prasad passed to the Receiver in Insolvency and there was nothing which Champa Prasad could convey to his son. We are satisfied, therefore, that the decision under appeal is correct. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Charitable endowments—Temple of Sri Thyagarajaswami at Tiruvalur—Katlais, nature of—Scheme suit—Matters for consideration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92.

The Katlais attached to the temple of Sri Thyagarajaswami at Tiruvalur in the Tanjore District are independent institutions. The trustees of one Katlai are not subject to the control of the trustees of the other Katlais, the only common bond between them being that they are supposed to exist for the glorification of the deity in the temple either directly by services rendered within the temple or indirectly by charities carried on outside the temple in the name of the deity. The incomes of the various Katlais do not belong to the idol and cannot be mixed up and utilised for all the purposes of the temple indiscriminately but must be applied and appropriated only for the specific purposes in connection with the temple for which they were endowed. [p. 118, col. 1.]

Any scheme which is framed for a temple with such Katlais as the above, while it must maintain the individuality of the Katlais and not interfere with their essential character, must at the same time provide for some co-ordination of the various Katlais and for some control over them so as to secure the harmonious working of the Katlais when they have to co-operate in the temple service. The scheme must also make provisions for the prevention of the embezzlement of the funds of the Katlais or their diversion by the respective trustees and should contain stringent prohibitions against the borrowing or lending of money from or to the trustees or from one Katlai to another Katlai. [p. 119, col. 2.]

Appeals against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 52 of 1913, (Original Suit No. 77 of 1910 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam).

IN APPEALS NO. 136 OF 1920.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code for framing a scheme with regard to the administration of the temple of Sri Thyagarajaswami at Tiruvalur in the Tanjore District. There are various trusts instituted for the purpose of either supporting the services in the temple or of carrying on charities in the name of the deity, known as Katlais. Each Katlai has its own trustee and separate properties are endowed in connection with each Katlai. There are thirteen of them now and a list of these is given in Schedule A of the plaint. The most important of these are the first four viz., (1) Ulthurai, (2) Abisheka, (3) Annadhana, and (4) Rajan. The fifth and sixth are practically identical with the fourth. The trustees of the first (Ulthurai) are defendants Nos 1 to 3. The trusteeship of the second (Abisheka) and the third (Annadhana) is vested in the head of the Vellukurichi Mutt (in the Tinnevelly District) for the time being, now the 12th defendant. Similarly, that of the fourth (Rajankatlai) (with which go the fifth and sixth) is in the head of the Dharmapuram Mutt (in the Tanjore District) for the time being (now the 14th defendant). These heads of the Mutts discharge the duties of trustee of their Katlais by means of local agents. The 14th defendant is the appellant in Appeal Suit No. 136 of 1920, the 12th defendant in Appeal Suit No. 195 of 1920; the plaintiffs in Appeal Suit No. 167 of 1920 appeal in respect of the seventh (Palayee) Katlai and the defendants Nos. 15 to 17 filed Appeal Suit No. 196 of 1920 in respect of the 11th (Ardhajamam) Katlai.

It may be observed that though, technically speaking, the temple has no income of its own, and has to depend for all its services on the proper performance of the trusts connected with the Katlais still, for all practical purposes, the Ulthurai (internal or central) Katlai represents the temple proper, its object being the internal management of the temple. It has an income of Rs. 8,000 as a Mohini allowance from the Government and some lands (6 Velies and odd). Other Katlais contribute their share of services or things in the various stages of the daily worship and the various festivals of the temple (see paragraph 52 of the Sub-Judge's judgment). The extent of their liability is determined by usage and is ascertained from the dittam or scale prepared by each Katlai, in connection with the daily worshp and festivals. It is said for the plaintiffs that the chief item of expense in connection with the Ulthurai Katlai is that of the Car Festival and it has been found difficult to carry on this festival with the income of the Ulthurai Katlai on account of the rise in wages. Whatever the true cause may be, the fact remains that the Ulthurai Katlai has become hopelessly indebted. Its debt on 16th September 1917 was more than Rs. 31,000 of which Rs. 17,000 was due to the first plaintiff and Rs. 14,000 to the third defendant, one of its trustees. It is suggested for the contesting defendants that the object of this suit is to prop up the Ulthurai Katlai at the expense of the other Katlais and that the suit is the result of collusion between plaintiffs and third defendant. It is frankly admitted by the third defendant that he and first plaintiff are friends, that he co-operated with the first plaintiff in connection with the institution of this suit and he is also spending money along with the first plaintiff for this litigation (Vide pages 690 and 692 of the deposition). At the same time, it must be admitted that there has been gross mismanagement of the affairs of the temple and some scheme for the co-ordination of the various Katlais and for some control over the various Katlais in so far as it may ensure the harmonious working of the Katlais, wherever they have to co-operate, is necessary.

An objection was taken by the defendants (Nos. 4 to 11) that the Katlais were distinct trusts and the suit as originally framed was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. Issues Nos. 1 and 2 were framed with reference to this contention, and the arguments were heard on them in 1913. The Subordinate Judge who heard them held "that as the Katlaidars are different and as each of them is in possession of a distinct Katlai charged with a distinct duty and separate accusations of misconduct are made against the several Katlais," the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action (Order dated 13th October 1913). He, however, gave leave to amend the plaint, which was accordingly done. The plaint as it now stands in the printed papers is the amended plaint. The prayer for the removal of unfit trustees and the appointment of other trustees in their places has been omitted. Having regard to the amended plaint, the Subordinate Judge who finally tried the case excluded "evidence as to any acts constituting misfeasance, or malfeasance affecting the competency, conduct or character of the defendants individually" (paragraph 16 of the judgment), but he adds in paragraph 38: "Though the 19th issue directly dealt with the misconduct of the individuals and it has been deleted, I had to reluctantly admit the evidence having regard to the fact that, if the past management was unsatisfactory irrespective of any reference to any individuals, a scheme might be necessary to place the administration on a sound basis."

The scheme framed by the Subordinate Judge appoints a Board of Trustees and directs that the various Katlaidars shall deliver over charge to the manager and treasurer after the appointment. No provision has been made for separating the accounts of the Katlais. This arrangement destroys the individual character of the various Katlais and has the effect, in some cases, of removing the trustees and in others, of adding other trustees to the existing sole trustee of each Katlai. This is inconsistent with the basis of the order of the First Subordinate Judge on 13th October 1913. We have, therefore, to ascertain, at the outset, the nature of the various Katlais and see how far the scheme of the lower Court can be justified in this respect.

It is admitted that the several Katlais came into existence at different times and have been managed separately for a long time, probably for centuries. Certain copper plate grants by which some of the lands of the Rajan Katlai were endowed (Exhibits XLI, XLI a (1740), XLI c (1751), XLI b (1754) are available and Exhibit LXIII (1759) is the document by which the Ardhajamam Katlai lands were endowed. But, beyond these, we have no evidence of the original endowments and usage is our only guide. The trustees of some Katlais have added to the original endowed lands by further purchases out of the savings from their income (some of LII series, XXXIV and LXIV, being such sale-deeds). In 1810, the Government assumed management of the temple (Exhibit OOO). The supervision of the Government was exercised through a "panchayat" (by which one person was apparently meant and not a body of persons) who was counter-signing the accounts of each Katlai (Vide Exhibits G, T, GG, AAAm, H, BBB, D, N, Q, SS, F, S, Z, CC, 2, WW, E, EE, NN, GGG, P).

The Pandarams representing the Abisheka and Rajan Katlais executed documents in 1820 in favour of Government binding themselves to certain details in the performance of the duties connected with the respective Katlais RRR, and FFFF. The Takids issued by the officers of the Government dealt with the Katlais separately (see BBBB, TTTT, PPPP, OOOO, SSS, CCCC, B, JJJJJ). In 1841, by Exhibit LXIII, the Collector of Tanjore reported to the Board of Revenue on the Pagodas of the District and in the statement enclosed with it, the Rajan Katlai was referred to as a separate item and the Abisheka and Annadhana Katlais together were referred to as another item. They were described as 'Athinam' in paragraph 8 of the report on the ground that the right of appointment of local managers belonged to certain Mutts or Colleges of Ta birars. This was followed by similar documents in 1842, when Government divested themselves of the management of Hindu temples—Exhibit LIV for Rajan Katlais and LXXI for the Abhisheka and Annadhana Katlais (see also Exhibit LXXIII). The Exhibits LXVII, LIV a, LXXIV, LVI, LVII, and TTT, EEEE, DDDD, LXVII and LXXVII, relate to the handing over charge of these Katlais. Exhibits LIX, LXII, LXII-a, relate to the appointment of a Pandaram or local agent at Tiruvalur on behalf of the Velukurichi Mutt and LV to the appointment of a similar local agent for the Dharampuram Mutt. In 1847 the Government obtained Muchilikas from the several Katlaidars to insure the due performance of the trusts (see Exhibits HHHHH, TTTTT, VVVV, FFFF, MMMMM, QQQQQ, RRRRRR, TTTTT MMMMM,). These Muchilikas were taken by the Government" "on grounds of expediency" and do not show that the Government had any right in particular over the Katlais [see Ramiengar v. Gnansambanda Pandarasannada (1)]. Following the last mentioned decision, it was held in 1868 (see Exhibit LIII) that the other Katlais were not subject to the superintendence of the Ulthurai Katlai, and that they were not dependent trusts. The plaintiffs in that case did not press their claim against the Katlais under the Mutts (see paragraph 34 of Exhibit LIII). This judgment was affirmed by the High Court in Venkatabalakrishna Chettiyar v. Kaliyanaramaiyangar (2).

In 1882, three persons were appointed as panchayats for the superintendence of the Ulthurai Katlai (Exhibit QQQQQQ). The present defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are their representatives. It is not necessary to discuss in this case whether these trustees are hereditary. It is clear from the history of the temple from 1870 to 1882, above set forth that the Katlais are independent institutions and that the other trustees are not subject to the control of the Ulthurai trustees, the common bond between them all being that they are supposed to exist for the glorification of the deity (Thyagarajasawmi) either directly by services rendered within the temple—or indirectly by charities carried on outside the temple in the name of the deity. We do not agree with the remarks of the Subordinate Judge at the end of paragraph 32 which imply that the Ulthurai trustees have some right of supervision over the other Katlais. It cannot be said that the income of the various Katlais belongs to Thyagarajaswami (the idol), or can be mixed up and utilised for all the purposes of the temple indiscriminately. These trusts are somewhat analogous to Temple Service Inams. Just as the latter are different from inams, properly belonging to a temple, being granted to office holders on condition of rendering services in a temple and do not belong to the idol, though the idol may be interested in the rendering of the services, similarly the incomes of the Katlais do not belong to the idol, though the idol is interested in the proper performance of the distinct duties attached to each Katlai. The remarks of Muthusami Iyer, J. in Vythilinga Pandara Sannadhi v. Somasundara Mudaliar (3) are instructive in this connection as the decision related to this very temple. After describing two senses of the term Katlai the learned Judge says: "The term Katalai is used in the present suit in this sense" referring to the second sense he had previously described, viz., "a distinct endowment under a separate trustee to which specific items of expenditure are assigned as legitimate charges to be paid therefrom." That suit was a suit by the Ulthurai Katlai against the Abhisheka and Rajan Katlais for contribution for repairs. At page 203, the learned Judge says: "The Muchilikas which these executed on that occasion contain a distinct acknowledgment that the Katalai lands were originally granted to Sri Thyagarajaswami and an undertaking to apply the income derived therefrom to the said temple. This is significant as showing that the repair of the temple was a trust to which the surplus income had to be devoted according to the original grant."

The decision then was to the effect that the Rajan and Abhisheka Katlais were liable to effect repairs from the surplus funds of their Katlais. It is now admitted that the duty of repairing the temple is one intimately connected with these two Katlais and that they are liable to contribute funds for that purpose. The learned Judge did not make any observation which is capable of being literally construed to mean that all the funds of the Katlais attached to this temple were then vested in the temple and at the disposal of the Ulthurai Katlaidars for any purpose whatsoever.

Some of the Katlais have now to be separately considered. We have already referred to the admission made by the trustees of the Rajan Katlai and Abhisheka Katlai that their surplus funds are liable for the repairs of the temple. The matter, however, is different as to Annadhanam and other Katlais. In the case of the Annadhanam Katlai the trustee argued (in Appeal No. 195 of 1920) that there are other temples which were the indirect object of the Katlais and the income cannot be solely spent for the benefit (direct or indirect) of the Thyagarajaswami. This point was not raised in the written statement and cannot be considered here. In Exhibit YYYY the Collector, acting as agent to the Court of Wards on behalf of the third defendant's estate, described the duties of the Annadhanam Katlai in paragraph 3 as consisting of (1) shelter to pilgrims (2) distribution, of food, (3) water pandal, (4) lights (5) Pagoda service. The details of the last have to be ascertained from the 'Dittam' or customary list of contributions. In the face of paragraph 3, no weight can be attached to the general and sweeping statement in paragraph 2 that the Annadhana Katlai Chattaram is a minor branch of the great temple of Thyagarajaswami. It must be remembered that there was always a tendency on the part of the Uithurai Katlaidars to claim power of supervision over the Katlais. The judgment of 1866 (Exhibit LIII) this document (Exhibit YYYY) and now the present suit illustrate this. We are of opinion that the surplus income of Annadhana Katlai cannot be utilized for the repairs, or other expenses in connection with the temple. The income of the Katlai can only be spent for the purposes mentioned in Exhibit YYYY—all of them being carried on in the name of Thyagarajaswami and in this way exalting the glory of the idol. The solitary instance appearing from Exhibit KKKKKK-5 of a portion of the expenses of raising the image of the godess from the river being debited to the Annadhana Katlai cannot be taken as establishing a usage. Similar conclusions apply to Ardhajama Katlai. It may be that only the temple of Thyagaraja and subordinate shrines are the temples indirectly (or directly) intended to be benefited by the Mosakulam lands of the said Katlai (vide Exhibits MMMMM and KKKKK-1). At the same time, too much weight ought not to be given to the Muchilikas (as already pointed out) and the income cannot be appropriated for the purpose of the temple indiscriminately. Only the customary services have to be met out of it. Exhibit JJJJJJ refer to the Dittam of the Katlai. The same remarks also apply to Palayee Katlai (seventh) the subject of Appeal No. 167 of 1920.

A scheme has now to be framed which will ensure the harmonious working of the Katlais, when they have to co-operate in the Pagoda service, and to prevent the embezzlement of the funds of the Katlais or their diversion by the trustees contracting debts as has happened in the case of the Ulthurai and other Katlais. The scheme as framed by the lower Court obliterates the individuality of the various Katlais, pools their resources in one large fund, and makes the Board of Trustees practically a hand of the Court by the direction in paragraphs 4 and 11 that it shall exercise its powers of administration subject to the directions of the Court. As the Katlaidars are themselves the trustees of the various trusts, it is inappropriate that the supervising body should be described as a Board of Trustees, although the trustees are by the scheme eligible for appointment to the Board.

It is very necessary that the scheme should contain stringent prohibitions against the borrowing or lending of money by the trustees from or to the trust funds, or from one Katlai to another Katlai, seeing that the 12th defendant in paragraph 12 of his written statement treats borrowing as a necessary incident to the management of the trust and claims a right to do what he pleases with any surplus that may remain over. The preparation of a budget, the proper keeping of accounts in which the income and expenditure of each of the Katlais may be separately shown, and the periodical audit of these accounts are matters most essentially to be provided for in the Regulations in order to fix the trustees with responsibility for the due performance of their trusts and to avoid waste and indebtedness. The need for supervison and co-ordination by a controlling and inspecting body is also apparent. The past history of the suit Katlais shows that a panchayat, or a panchayatdar, once existed for the purpose during Government management. In Ramiengar v. Gnanasambanda Pandarasannada (1), the appointment of panchayatdars is stated to have been simply a coercive act for more effectual supervision. Exhibit A shows that there were five panchayatdars in 1842 and Exhibit QQQQQQ1 shows that in 1882 the District Judge appointed three panchayatdars to supervise the Ulthurai Katlai. It is argued that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and defendants Nos. 12 and 14 should not have a seat on the Board of supervision, the former as they have already an interest as trustees of the Ulthurai Katlai and the latter as they are the trustees of the Abhisheka, Annadhana and Rajan Katlais and on account of the misconduct of their predecessors. We think that the Subordinate Judge was right in including them. The second and third defendants are well-to-do mirasidars, living in the locality who have always shown an interest in due performance of the religious worship in the temple and are descendants of two of the former panchayatdars. The 12th and 14th defendants have succeeded to their offices during the pendency of the suit and have had no opportunity of showing whether they are personally fitted or unfitted for the conduct of a religious trust. As remarked by the learned Judge, there is always the probability that persons residing in other parts of the District may not take sufficient interest to attend the meetings of the Board. The proposals made in the course of the arguments (1) that there should be two treasurers (2), that we should appoint a "visitor" to inspect the temple from time to time and to make recommendations regarding the Katlais do not commend themselves to us, as it is not shown that there will be more work for the treasurer than one man can manage to do and as a splitting of the post would probably imply a division of responsibility fatal to good management; and, secondly, we do not consider that a visitor acting singly would, however well intentioned, exercise an effectual authority in the prevention and cure of abuses of the trust.

We have modified the scheme as drawn up by the lower Court in such a manner as, in our opinion, will have the effect of maintaining the individuality of the Katlias and not interfering with the essential character of the Adhinam (independent) trusts; while, at the same time, providing that the time of the Court shall not be taken up by constant references to it on minor matters of administration and management. The plaintiffs will get their costs in appeal from the funds of the Devastanam. All the other parties will bear their own costs in these appeals. The lower Court's order as to costs will stand. This judgment disposes of the memorandam of objections in Appeal No. 167.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, applicability of—Suit by trustee against co-trustee for joint possession and management of trust property—Guardian of minor sons of deceased trustee in possession with consent of co-trustee—Possession, whether adverse.

Section 10 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit by one trustee against his co-trustee for joint possession and joint management of the trust property and the section is not limited to cases where a trustee is called to account by a stranger. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Though, generally speaking, guardians cannot make admissions on behalf of their wards, in considering a question of fact, namely, whether or not the possession of the guardian on behalf of her minor children is adverse to another person, a statement by the guardian as to the character of such possession is perfectly admissible as showing the animus. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Where the guardian of certain minor sons of a deceased trustee is in sole possession by request and with the consent of another co-trustee, the sole possession of such guardian cannot be adverse possession amounting to ouster of the other trustee. [p. 121, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case plaintiff claims joint possession of certain trust property in respect of which he was appointed a co-trustee with his brother, now deceased. It would appear that he and the brothers lived together for some time and the brother was the person who for many years was the only executor under the Will by which they were appointed trustees and was also the acting trustee of this trust which was created for certain charitable purposes. The brothers seem to have fallen out somewhere about 1907 and litigation ensued. The brother died in 1910 leaving two infant sons surviving him and a widow. From that time till now the widow and her sons continued to manage the trust property. The plaintiff now claims to be entitled to joint possession and joint management of the trust property.

It is admitted that the plaintiff was a trustee but it was said that his rights are barred by limitation. There seem to me to be three complete answers to that. In the first place, section 10 of the Limitation Act says that, notwithstanding anything contained in the Limitation Act, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time. In my judgment this is an action by one of two co-trustees it is true but against a trustee for the purpose of following in his hands a trust property. In my judgment, the words are wide enough to cover a case by one of two trustees who claims against the other that the property ought to be held by the two. It would have been very remarkable if it were not so; for one of two trustees would be left in possession and the other who is liable for the acts of his co-trustee would be unable in any way to control his co-trustee, because if he sued his co-trustee for joint possession, he would be met by a plea of limitation.

Even if this view of section 10 of the Act is wrong, there remains to be considered the effect of some correspondence within two years of the launching of this suit. The plaintiff had written to the widow stating that he had taken out Probate, he being the sole surviving executor under the Will which appointed him and his brother trustees, and he claimed from her and his nephews possession of the property. The answer that was given by the widow and guardian of the infant children written by a Vakil on her behalf was this: "I am further instructed to state that on the death of my client's husband you * * * declined to have any thing to do with the management of the estate and asked my client to manage the same on behalf of her sons." I entirely fail to see how possession obtained or retained under those circumstances can be adverse possession amounting to ouster for she writes through her own legal advisers saying that she is managing by request and with the consent of the co-trustee, the plaintiff, jointly with her sons acting through herself; and it passes my comprehension to understand an argument put forward on the basis that, when one of two trustees says to the other "you take possession and hold possession of the property," that other can afterwards say that he is in adverse possession.

The other point turns on the next paragraph of the letter and it is in these terms: "I am further instructed to state that even if your client has now obtained Probate as mentioned in your letter under reply, my client on behalf of her sons and your client are jointly entitled to administer the properties of the estate in accordance with the Will." There one has, in words, an admission of the plaintiff's right made by the Vakil on behalf of the defendants within two years of the suit being brought, which is in itself sufficient evidence that the possession held by her on behalf of her sons was not possession adverse to the plaintiff.

For these reasons, I agree with the judgment of the learned Judge and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I am of the same opinion. There are two points which appear to me to be fatal to the appellants in this case. The first is section 10 of the Law of Limitation to which the only answer of the learned Vakil who has argued the case with great fulness, is that that section only applies when the trustee is being called to account by a stranger, and not when the person who seeks to investigate the affairs of the trustee is a co-trustee; for that position, I find no authority, and none was suggested to exist, and it seems to me to be a proposition that, on the face of it, you do away with half the benefit that the section of the Act intended to confer.

The next is the letter, Exhibit V, written by the mother of the infants. It is argued against that by Mr. Kothandarama Mudaliar that guardians cannot make admission on behalf of their wards. That, no doubt, as a general proposition, is perfectly sound, but here we are investigating a certain fact, namely, was the possession of the guardian on behalf of her minor children adverse to the plaintiff or was it not, it being in her possession. The answer is, that what she said about it is perfectly admissible as showing quo animo she, representing her children remained in possession of the property. She could perhaps have given some evidence by her words or her acts that she believed herself and intended herself on their behalf to be occupying adversely to the plaintiff. But if she did not, you cannot impute to the minors an intention and a character in possession which was not the intention or the character in which their guardian who represents them acts for them. You cannot manufacture ex post facto, merely because they were minors, the adverse quality which the actual possession was never clothed with.

In my opinion, this appeal fails, and I agree to the order proposed by my Lord.

V. N. V. Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Lease in favour of mortgagor—Distinct transactions—Suit on lease—Subsequent suit on mortgage, whether barred—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2.

Where a mortgage and a lease of the mortgaged property in favour of the mortgagor, are executed on the same day, but the mortgage-deed contains no reference to the lease and the mortgagee is not restricted in his choice of tenants, the mortgage and the lease are two distinct transactions even though the amount of rent is equal to the amount of interest. [p. 123, col. 2.]

In such a case a suit for rent on the basis of the lease, would not operate, under O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, to bar a subsequent suit on the mortgage-deed to recover the money due thereunder. [p. 123; col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 24th June 1918.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. S., and Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for the recovery of money due on a mortgage-deed executed by the defendants on the 9th December 1906. The suit has been dismissed as barred by O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the plaintiffs having brought a suit in 1910 for rent on the basis of a lease executed on the same date as the mortgage-deed, the lower Court holding that the interest on the mortgage is identical with the rent, and that the cause of action was the same in both suits. The plaintiffs have appealed, and the only question is whether O. II, r. 2, applies.

The mortgage-deed provided that the property was mortgaged to the plaintiffs with possession for Rs. 30,000, that the defendants were to pay interest monthly at the rate of 10-annas per cent. per mensem, and that the rent realized by the plaintiffs from the property mortgaged would be credited towards the payment of the interest. The defendants were to redeem within six months, and if they failed they would continue to pay interest till the date of redemption. In case of default on the part of the defendants the plaintiffs were at liberty to realize the amount due with interest from the mortgaged property or from the other property or persons of the defendants whenever they liked.

In the lease it was stated that the defendants took the mortgaged property from the plaintiffs on a rent of Rs. 187-8 per mensem for six months. The rent was to be paid monthly and in default the mortgagees could realize the amount at any time they liked.

The lower Court has followed Natha Singh v. Chunt Lal (1), in which it was held that there was only one covenant between the parties and that the lease was granted simply to provide a mode for realizing interest payable on the mortgage. But that decision was based on the fact that the mortgage-deed contained a reference to an agreement between the parties to draw up a lease of the mortgaged property. There is no such clause in the mortgage-deed on which the present plaintiffs are suing, so that Natha Singh v. Chunt Lal (1) is distinguishable from the present case.

Most of the cases cited by Mr. Sheo Narain on behalf of the appellants also present distinctive features, but there is one case which is in point and supports his contention, namely, Muhammad Hussain v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (2), in which it was held that the lease, though executed on the same day as the mortgage, was a separate contract. Mr. Tek Chand contends that that case is distinguishable because there was a provision in the mortgage-deed that the mortgagee could lease the property to any one he liked.

But although the mortgage-deed executed by the defendants in the present case does not contain such a provision it imposes no restriction on the power of the mortgagees to choose their tenants and it recites that the mortgagors have delivered possession to the mortgagees, so that there is no essential distinction between the two cases.

The case relied on by Mr. Tek Chand is Madhwa Sidhanta Onahini Nidhi v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (3) in which it was held that the striking identities in the provisions of the mortgage and the lease, which had been executed on the same day, pointed to the view that the two instruments were parts of the same transaction. But the similarity between the provisions of the two instruments in that case was greater than it is in the present case. In default of payment of interest on the mortgage, compound interest was to be charged at a certain rate and the lease also provided that if the rent were not paid by the due date it would carry interest at the same rate. Further, it was pointed out in the judgment that the particular expression used in the lease to denote interest on the rent was the same as that used in the mortgage for interest on the interest, and that it was not appropriate in the lease except upon the view that what was spoken of as rent was in the contemplation of the parties only interest.

In the present case, although the mortgage-deed and the lease were executed on the same day and the rent was equal to the amount of interest, yet in view of the facts that the mortgage-deed contained no reference to the lease, and that the mortgagees were not restricted in their choice of tenants, we think that the mortgage and the lease were two distinct transactions. The institution of the former suit, which was based on the lease, is, therefore, no bar to the present suit.

We accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and remand the case to his Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision on the merits. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded, and other costs will be costs in the case.

Pre-emption—Arazidars of village Dudhi, Gorakhpur District, rights of.

The Arazidars of village Dudhi in the pargana of Sidhua Jobna in the Parauna Tahsil of the Gorakhpur District are not co-sharers and have no community of interest or responsibility with the proprietary body and consequently have no right of pre-emption.

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur.

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Lakshmi Narain Tewari, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai, Harnandan Prasad and Surendro Nath Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question we have to decide in these two appeals, in both of which the same parties are appellants, is whether or not they had a right of pre-emption according to custom.

The Court below has dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs holding that, on their status as disclosed by the evidence, they are not entitled to pre-empt.

The property which was sold, and in respect of which pre-emption was sought, is situated in a village called Dudhi, in the Pargana of Sidhua Jobna, in the Parauna Tahsil of the Gorakhpur District.

The lower Court held that as the plaintiffs admitted themselves to be what are called arazidars and as they are so called in the village papers, they had no right of pre-emption, and for this purpose the learned Subordinate Judge relied upon a Full Bench ruling of this Court [Uman Kuari v. Jarbandhan Pathak (1).] If that ruling applies to the case which is now before us, then there can be no question that the decision of the lower Court is correct, but Dr. Agarwala, who has addressed a very learned and able argument to us on behalf of the appellants, has asked us not to decide the case merely upon the dictum contained in the judgment to which we have just referred and has asked us to deal with the case after an examination of the real position of these plaintiffs in the village in question.

So far as the Full Bench ruling is concerned, it certainly lays down that persons who are called arazidars are not members of the co-parcenary body and are not entitled to pre-empt. The judgment on this point is a very short one and is not supported by much in the way of reasoning. The learned Judges, before whom the case was up, stated that it did not clearly appear what the nature of arazidari land was, but after reference to various Settlement Reports, they found that arazidars were not treated as members of the co-parcenary body.

The expression arazidar has been defind in the Settlement Report of the Gorakhpur District prepared by Mr. Cruickshank and published in 1891. The earlier Settlement of this District had been conducted by Mr. Lumsden, who was a well-known authority on all Revenue matters. At paragaraph 201, page 56 of Mr. Cruickshank's report he refers to Mr. Lumsden's description of the people who are known as arazidars. We think it advisable to quote this passage in full. It is as follows:—

"In Pargana Sidhua Jobna Mr. Lumsden, at the last Settlement, noted:—In describing the tenures of this pargana mention of the immense number of birt and independent arazi holdings must not be omitted. These are small tracts of land situated in almost every village which were originally, in most cases, held rent free. They had their origin in that general transaction of property into the hands of strangers which took place in this paragana in the early part of the present century and which has already been alluded to in describing the origin and past history of the principal taluqdars. Weak and impoverished zemindars, anxious to have some one between them and the ruling power, voluntarily transferred their villages to one or other of the powerful taluq- dars who, at that time, gained a footing in the pargana, reserving only for themselves a small tract of land sufficient for their immediate subsistence. In the case of other villages which were forcibly usurped by the taluqdars, the latter compromised matters so far as to allow the old proprietors to retain possession of certain defined parcels of land in their respective villages In this way were created most of these birt and independent arazidari holdings which are so numerous in this pargana and which have been a source of infinite trouble to the Settlement Officer both on account of the frequency of disputes regarding their exact limits and the difficulty of apportioning to each its fair quota of the Government demand. The proprietors of these parcels of land hold and manage independently of the village zemindar, the latter in the case of birt arazidars only receiving a malikana allowance calculated at 10% over the revenue jama,"

We have already adverted to the fact that the property with which we are now concerned is situate in this pargana of Sidhua Jobna referred to in Mr. Lumsden's definiiton.

We may also refer to another paragraph of this same Settlement Report, namely, 187, at page 52. There the Settlement Officer quotes a definition by Mr. Reid who had been the Settlement Officer of Azamgarh—a definition of the term arazidars.

Mr. Reid defined the term arazi as " plot of land which, though included within the area of mauzas and mahals, are held on a distinct tenure from and convey no title to rights or interests in other parts of the mauzas and mahals."

Turning now to the documentary evidence in the case, the first paper which calls for notice is the wajib-ul-arz which was prepared in the year 1860. A small extract of this document has been printed at page 17 of the printed book in First Appeal No. 291 of 1920. We have, however, referred to the certified copy of the whole wajib-ul-arz which is upon the record and a great deal of which has not been printed. According to what is set out in this document, a declaration was made in or about the year 1860 by certain persons whose names are mentioned at the beginning of the document and who presumably were the proprietors of the village at that time. We have compared these names with the pedigree set out in the Court below and we are satisfied that the declarants were members of the proprietary body in this village.

In the 5th paragraph of this document there is recorded what purports to be the custom of pre-emption. It is declared that every co-sharer has power to transfer by sale and mortgage his land or his share to the extent of his possession. At the time the transfer is made the condition to be observed is that if any body wants to transfer his share, then, first of all, his near co-sharer shall be entitled to have it and, in case of refusal, his other co-sharers shall be entitled ; and if all refuse or do not offer a suitable price, then the share can be transferred to a third person, and no co-sharer shall have any right of pre-emption.

Paragraph 11 of this document which has not been printed but which, as we have said, is on the record, contains a further portion of the declaration made by the village proprietors at this time, namely, 1860. They set out that in this Mauza of Dudhi there is an area of 49 bighas 10 biswas Settlement arazi bandobasti belonging to two persons Indar Dat and Sundar Dat Pande. There is a further reference to two other plots which are described in the similar way. Dealing with all these plots the declaration of the proprietors of the village is, that the persons named, Indar Dat and others, are in possession of these arazi lands upon payment of Government revenue. It is further set out that the declarants, i.e., the proprietors, will not interfere with them in any way (un se kuchh muzahimat na karenge).

The next document to which we have been referred is printed at page 11 of the paper-book in First Appeal No. 291 of 1920. This is called a Supplementary khewat of Mauza Dudhi and appears to have been prepared in 1293 Fasli corresponding to the year 1886 A. D. at which time Settlement operations in Gorakhpur were going on.

This document sets out that Mauza Dudhi is an inhabited village in the form of an imperfect pattidari tenure. The first two entries relate to two shares of eight annas each, one belonging to Shiam Baran Singh and others mentioned in khewat Khata No. 1, and the other described as belonging to Udaibhan Partab Singh and others mentioned in khewat Khata No. 2.

The first of these shares of eight annas is described as being in possession of the proprietors, and it is said that both the co-sharers collect rent from the tenants and, after payment of Government revenue, cesses and village expenses, the account is adjusted at the end of the year. The second share of eight annas is described as being in the possession of a lessee, and according to the column of remarks this lessee, after making collections from the tenants, deposits his lease money, according to the conditions of his lease, with the proprietors, who themselves pay the Government revenue and cesses into the Government Treasury and obtain revenue receipts.

Following these two entries we have two entries Nos. 3 and 4 relating to parcels of shamilat land. One is shamilat of Udaibhan Partab Singh and others measuring 8 bighas odd; the other is shamilat deh or village common land amounting to 19 bighas.

These four entries are followed by four other entries Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8. The entries Nos. 5, 6 and 7 are shown to relate to two persons who are styled 'arazidars.' That is the title above the entries in question. The first of these, entry No. 5, relates to the arazi of one Indar Dat who, we understand, is now represented by the appellants. Entries Nos. 6 and 7 relate to the arazi holdings of other persons with whom we are not concerned in the present case. The last entry, No. 8, relates to a small area which is held by one Shankar Dat as shankalap. He is described in the paper as a Sahankalapdar.

Attached to this statement of the share and areas in the village there is the usual statement which accompanies papers of this kind and which is construed as being a wajib-ul-arz, and in this a custom of pre-emption is set out in paragraph 5 as follows:—

"If any person wants to transfer his property (haqiat) he should transfer it first to his own brother and near relation and then to a distant relation. In case of refusal he should transfer it to the co-sharers in the patti and then to the co-sharers in the village. If none of these persons should take it or pay a proper price, the transferor shall have power to transfer his share to whomsoever he likes."

The appellants have taken their stand upon the passage which has just been cited and they maintain that they are entitled for the purposes of pre-emption to be treated as co-sharers in the village. It is to be noted in this connection that the wajib-ul-arz attached to this khewat prepared in the year 1293 Fasli is signed not only by persons who are undoubtedly the proprietors of the village but also by Indar Dat and one at least of the other arazidars. Great stress, we may observe, has been laid upon this fact by Dr. Agarwala in his argument.

Lastly, we have before us Exhibit 4 which is a copy of the Settlement khewat of Mauza Dudhi prepared at the recent Settlement, in the year 1223 Fasli, corresponding to 1916-17 A. D.

By this time apparently the constitution of the village had somewhat altered and we find that instead of two pattis of eight annas each there is one share amounting to sixteen annas which is recorded as being the property of Udaibhan Partab Singh, the lambardar. Opposite this entry we find the statement of Government revenue and in the last column we find a schedule showing who the present proprietors are. This column also sets out that at the time the record was prepared two annas out of the sixteen annas were in possession of the owners and that the remaining fourteen annas share was in the possession of mortgagees.

The second entry in this document stands in the name of one Sahdeo Prasad Tiwari lambardar. This entry relates to an area of 46·52 acres.

The Government revenue assessed on this area is set out as Rs. 76 and the names of the persons who are interested in this area and who are called arazidars are set out in the column of remarks. Those names include the names of the appellants.

The third entry relates to another area of arazi in the posesession of Mahabir Das, lambardar, and the fourth entry also relates to a similar holding in the possession of the same person. The total area of the arazi holding is given as 54·85 acres and the total revenue on this area is given as Rs. 72-14-0, and then for the last entry we have it stated that the entire area of the mauza is 543·96 acres and the total Government revenue including the revenue assessed on the arazidari holding comes to Rs. 614 for the first five years of the period of Settlement.

In the remarks column opposite this last entry it is stated that this is the total of the (mahal kul).

These are the relevant papers which we have to consider and it has been argued very forcibly by Dr. Agarwala that on these entries his clients ought to be treated as persons who had the status of co-sharers in the village.

We have omitted to state in dealing with Exhibit No. 2, which is the khewat of the village prepared in the year 1293 Fasli, that in describing the holding of Indar Dat arazidar the column of remarks sets out the following particulars :—

" He is the sole proprietor (malik wahid). He deposits into the Government Treasury the Government Revenue and cesses and obtains revenue receipts and defrays the village expenses from his own pocket. "

Similar entries are made in respect of two other persons whose names are entered as arazidars.

The learned Judge of the Court below has, in his judgment, referred to another judgment of this Court, apart from the Full Bench ruling which we have already cited. This is the case of Mahadeo Prasad v. Jagar Deo Gir (2). That was a case in which a certain area in a village which had once been held revenue-free had become assessed to revenue in the year 1840. There it was found that the holder of this plot of resumed muafi paid his revenue direct to Government, and the question arose, in that case, whether or not this person would be entitled to claim the status of co-sharer in the 16-annas mahal. A number of rulings of this Court were referred to and it was laid down, as it has been laid down in other cases, that the ultimate test in a litigation of this kind in which a right of pre-emption is claimed is, whether or not the person who seeks pre-emption is a co-sharer either in the profits or in the liability for revenue with the vendors. It was held, under a long series of rulings, that owners of resumed muafi plots had been treated as not being co-sharers within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. The learned Judge of the Court below was, we think, right in relying upon this ruling although it does not appear, as a matter of certainty, whether the arazi lands, with which we are now concerned in the present case, were once held revenue free and were afterwards assessed to revenue. Judging from the definition given by Mr. Lumsden, we should imagine that at some remote period they had been held free of revenue and had been subsequently assessed. The point, however, is not of much importance for it seems to us that if this case is to be decided upon the principles which are laid down in the case just cited [Mahadeo Prasad v. Jagar Deo Gir (2)], then we must agree with the lower Court and hold that the appellants here have no right of pre-emption.

Dr. Agarwala, in pressing his claim for the recognition of his clients as co-sharers in the village, has laid considerable stress on the provisions of section 142 of the Land Revenue Act, U. P. Act (III of 1901) which lays down that all the proprietors of a mahal are jointly and severally responsible to Government for the revenue, for the time being assessed thereon. He claims that having regard to the present constitution of this village, his clients are persons who ought to be deemed proprietors within the meaning of this section and his argument implies, therefore, that there is, as between his clients and the persons who are the proprietors of the village, a community of interest and also a community of responsibility for the Government revenue.

(2) 33 Ind. Cas. 23; 38 A. 260; 14 A. L. J. 313.

That argument, however, does not seem to us to be borne out by what we find recorded in the various papers to which we have referred. In the first place, we must lay stress upon the declaration which was made in the year 1860. At that time the arazi lands in which the appellants are co-sharers were in the possession of Indar Dat and Sundar Dat and the persons who are making the declaration on that occasion declared most distinctly that these arazidars were in possession on payment of their own Government Revenue and that they (the proprietors) would not exercise any interference whatever with them. That is a very solid piece of evidence for the purpose of showing that there is no community of interest between the proprietary body of this village and the arazidars. Then, again, we refer to the remarks which are set out against the names of these arazidars in the khewat of 1203 Fasli. We have already mentioned that Indar Dat is there described as being the "sole proprietor" of the area entered against his name. It is further stated that he (Indar Dat) deposits the revenue in the Treasury and obtains receipts and defrays village expenses from his own pocket. We take this entry to mean that the responsibility for the Government revenue assessed upon the area in Indar Dat's possession was a responsibility which was confined to himself and with which the proprietors of the two pattis of eight annas each had no concern whatever.

Dr. Agarwala's argument really rests in a great measure upon the form in which the khewat of the recent Settlement of 1323 Fasli has been prepared. He has pointed out that after the various interests of the village have been set out in detail with particulars of the areas and the Government revenue assessed, a total has been made of the whole, and he, therefore, asks us to hold that the inference from all this is, that his clients, who are interested in the property specified in the second entry, are, for that reason, persons who have an interest in the mahal. If there were no other evidence in the case except this bare statement, it might be possible to say something in favour of this argument, but having before us the previous history of the village set out in the various papers, we must hold that the arazidars of this village are not co-sharers and have no community of interest or responsibility with the proprietary body. All this brings us again to the definition of Mr. Reid quoted in paragraph 187 of the Settlement Report of Gorakhpur to which we have referred. Mr. Reid, who was a great authority on all revenue questions in this Province, has distinctly laid it down that arazis are plots of land which, though included within the area of mauzas and mahals, are held as a distinct tenure from and convey no title to rights or interests in other parts of the mauzas and mahals.

That appears to us to be exactly the situation here. These plots of arazi lands may be within the area of Mauza Dudhi or in the area of the mahal which goes by that name, but they are held on a distinct tenure from that of the mauza or mahal, and their ownership conveys no title to any right or interest in other parts of the mauzas or mahals. We think, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge came to a right decision in this case and both the appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

MA E BON—RESPONDENT.

Contract—Breach of promise to marry—Implied promise—Damages, whether recoverable.

In a suit for damages for a breach of promise to marry, the promise need not be an express promise, but can be implied from the circumstances of the case. [p. 129, col. 2.]

Second civil appeal from the judgment and decree of the District Court, Maubin, in Civil Appeal No. 83 of 1921.

Mr. Maung Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Robertson, for the Respondent.

MG SHWE THE v. MA E EON.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for damages for a breach of promise to marry.

The plaintiff lost the case in the Trial Court, but won it in the lower Appellate Court.

The Trial Court held that there was no promise of marriage although seduction was proved.

The lower Appellate Court held that there was a promise of marriage.

This appeal has been made on the ground that there was no evidence to prove the promise.

The lower Appellate Court held that the evidence of Kyaw Thaung showed that there was a promise of marriage. Besides that evidence, there is nothing.

So, the whole question is, whether the lower Appellate Court was right in its construction of Kyaw Thaung's evidence.

It is shortly as follows:—

Kyaw Thaung was asked to go to the plaintiff and see whether she would receive the defendant with a view to matrimony.

Kyaw Thaung went. The plaintiff said, "your man is very bad with women. Will he be honest with me?" Kyaw Thaung then returned to the defendant, and reported the message. The defendant said, "I would be honest with her." Kyaw Thaung then told him to come along with him, and the two went together to the plaintiff's house. There the plaintiff asked the defendant if he was going to be honest with her. He said that, although he had a bad reputation with reference to women, he would be honest this time.

Now, what was in the mind of the two parties must have been as to whether matrimony was possible between them, and they had met to see if that was possible, and the words I have given were used.

The question then is—What do those words mean?

I think the lower Appellate Court's view of the evidence is correct. I have never heard of a Burman man even in civilized towns in the country say to the woman he loves "will you marry me or, will you be my wife?" What generally would, I think, take place is, although I know very little about this matter, the man says, "I love you," or, I have affection for you," and the woman says, "Do you mean it?" Are you honest in what you say?" He says, "Yes. I am quite honest. I mean what I say." Then the young lady says, "Go and see the father." In some cases the woman asks if it is.... which is a slang expression, and the man says that it is....and, when the conversation is construed in the light of the circumstances under which it occurs, then it is just as good as the man saying "Will you be my wife?" and the woman saying "Yes".

The law does not say that there must be an express promise of marriage. Such a promise can be implied from the circumstances of the case.

The parties in this case are Karens, and the language they used must be construed as they would themselves do.

If there is evidence of a promise, and I hold that there is on the record, then there will be no second appeal in this case under the Lower Burma Courts Act. If there is a point of law, viz., the construction as to the meaning of a piece of evidence, there would be no appeal under the Civil Procedure Code to this Court, because the case is an unclassed one.

As I have held, there is evidence, and the evidence, if true, means that there was a promise of marriage. There is nothing more to do but to dismiss the appeal, because this Court is not entitled to go into the question whether the evidence is trustworthy or not.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

JAGO MAHTON—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

KHIRODHAR RAM—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Application for execution—Limitation, objection as to, not entertained—Subsequent application—Objection, whether can be reviewed.

Once a Court has decided either directly or indirectly that an execution case is a fit one to try and, therefore, not barred by limitation, there is an end to the matter and it is not open to either of the parties thereafter to raise the same question in a fresh execution. [p. 133, col. 1.]

An instalment order was passed against a judgment-debtor whereby he was allowed to pay a certain sum in 14 instalments. Some instalments were paid and then there was a default. The decree-holder then applied for execution and it was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the application was time-barred. The objection was, however, dismissed for default of both the parties on the date fixed for the hearing thereof and an order was made that the decree-holder should take further steps. No steps having been taken by the decree-holder, his application for execution was dismissed for default of prosecution. To a subsequent application for execution objection was taken on the ground that the previous application was time-barred:

Held, that the previous application having been treated as a valid and subsisting execution case, it was not open to the judgment-debtor to raise that objection now, and the question of limitation was no bar to the execution case proceeding. [p. 132, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtor from an order of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur passed in appeal ordering an execution case to proceed. The facts, in so far as it is necessary to state them for the purpose of this appeal, are these:—

On the 10th November 1910 an instalement order was passed against the appellant whereby he had to pay a certain sum in 14 instalments. A number of these instalments were paid and then there was default. In 1921 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree. In that execution case the judgment-debtor filed an objection contending that the execution was barred by limitation. Whether or not the execution was barred by limitation was purely and simply a question of fact depending upon whether the 7th instalment under the instalment order had been paid or not. It was contended by him that it had not been paid. It was contended by the decree-holder that it had. The hearing of this objection in the execution case was fixed for the 8th April 1921. Upon that occasion the judgment-debtor did not appear in support of his objection and as there was nothing before the Court to show that the execution case was barred by limitation the Court dismissed the objection for default and on the same day passed an order that the decree-holder should take further steps and directed the case to be put up again on the 11th of the month for orders. On the 12th of the month no steps having been taken by the decree-holder his execution was dismissed for default of prosecution. The next execution case was filed in September following, that is to say, well within three years of the last execution case. The appellant now objects that the case is barred by limitation on the ground that the previous execution case in which his objection was dismissed was itself barred by limitation. It seems to me that the case is governed by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1) where a very similar question arose although in that case there had been no direct adjudication in the previous execution case upon the question of limitation. In that case a sixth petition for execution was filed on the 5th September 1874 the previous one having been filed on the 26th July 1871. The sixth execution case came to nothing and on the 22nd September 1877 a seventh application was presented. It was contended there that the last application was barred by limitation because upon the actual facts then disclosed it would appear that the previous petition had been barred by limitation although that question had never been directly decided. Their Lordships in that case refused to give effect to the contention of the judgment-debtor and it seems to me that the ground upon which they refused to allow the question to be raised was that the sixth petition for execution, even though it may have been out of time, had been treated by the Court as a valid and subsisting execution case. No objection had been taken by any body and certain orders had been passed in that case and it did not in the circumstances lie in the mouth of the judgment-debtor to contend afterwards that that case was barred by limitation. Their Lordships pointed out that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction upon an application of the 8th October 1874, which was an application in the sixth execution petition, to attach certain properties and to determine whether the decree was barred or not at that date and an order was made that the attachment should issue. I may point out that no point had been taken in that case by any body as to whether or not the case was barred by limitation but their Lordships decided, that the question not having been raised the order made that the attachment must issue must be taken as having concluded the matter and that the orders so made were proper and valid orders and could not afterwards in another execution case be questioned on the ground of limitation. Their Lordships further pointed out that whether the Judge was right or wrong he must be taken to have determined that the application for attachment was not barred. The judgment proceeds thus:—"A Judge in a suit upon a cause of action is bound to dismiss the suit, or to decree for the defendant, if it appears that the cause of action is barred by limitation. But if instead of dismissing the suit, he decrees for the plaintiff, his decree is valid, unless reversed upon appeal, and the defendant cannot, upon an application to execute the decree, set up as an answer that the cause of action was barred by limitation." It seems to me that what happened in the present case was this. When the judgment-debtor filed an objection to the execution that was a matter which the learned Judge had to decide and that was a matter which was to be determined upon questions of fact. The judgment-debtor had appeared in that execution case and had every opportunity of placing evidence in support of his objection before the Court. When the time came, however, he failed to take advantage of that opportunity. Nothing was done and, therefore, the learned Judge dismissed his application and at the same time passed an order which was tantamount to this that the execution case should proceed. What he did really was to order that the decree-holder should take necessary steps to proceed with his execution case. That was according to the view I take of the ruling in the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v Grija Kant Lahiri (1) a determination by the Court that the execution case was not in fact barred by limitation and whether that decision was right or wrong it cannot afterwards, I think, be questioned in a subsequent proceeding and, therefore, it is no longer open to the judgment-debtor to contend that that execution case was not valid.

The same point arose for determination in the Allahabad High Court in the year 1902 and the facts of that case were very similar to those of the present case. In the case of Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath (2) the head-note is as follows:—"Although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time at the date of an application made for its execution, yet if an order for execution is made by a competent Court, having jurisdiction to try whether such execution is barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid." The facts of that case, as I have said, were very similar to the present. There an application for execution of a decree was struck off on the 15th January 1894. The next application was not made until May 1907 more than three years later. Notice of this application was served on the judgment-debtors and they filed objections but on the day fixed for the hearing failed to support them and their objections were dismissed. The application for execution was, however, ultimately struck off by reason of the non-payment of process fees by the decree-holder in that case. It was held that it was not open to the judgment-debtors, on a subsequent application for execution being made, to plead limitation in respect of the previous application as a bar to the execution of the decree. Almost precisely the same facts arose in that case as arose in the present and I confess I can see no reason for differing from the views taken by the Allahabad High Court in that case.

Two other cases were, however, referred to which were decided in the Calcutta High Court and were relied upon by the appellant. The first was that of Bholanath Dass v. Praful la Nath Kundu Chowdhry (3). In that case, after several adjournments granted at the instance of the decree-holder, neither party having appeared at the date of the hearing, the Court by its order refused an application for execution and at the same time disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtor. On a subsequent application by the decree-holder the judgment-debtor again objected to the execution alleging that inasmuch as the previous application was barred by limitation the subsequent application was also barred. It was held in such circumstances that the judgment-debtor was not precluded from raising the objection that the previous application was barred by limitation. It appears to me that that was an entirely different case from the present and one in which entirely different considerations arose because no decision of any sort was come to in that case by the Court in the previous execution case. An execution case was started no doubt and certain objections were taken by the judgment-debtor but nobody after that appeared and the Court came to no decision upon any question. All that the Court did was to dismiss the execution case and at the same time dismissed the objections. In fact, having dismissed the execution case it was not necessary for the Court any longer to consider the objections. It cannot be said in such a case that the Court had determined whether the question of limitation was or was not a bar to the execution case proceeding. In the present case it must be taken that the Court had decided that there was no such bar because the very point was taken and decided although it was decided merely upon the default of appearance of the objection still at the same time the Court did make an order which showed that it considered that the execution case was a valid and subsisting execution case, and not barred.

The other case referred to of the Calcutta High Court was that of Khosal Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Ukiladdi (4). Again, the facts of that case were very different from the present. In that case it appears that in the previous execution case nothing was done, that is to say, that no order for execution was made. Nor was any order made from which it could be judged that the Court had considered one way or the other that the execution case could proceed, and the learned Judges there considered that it was clear that no order for execution was made in the course of the proceedings taken on the basis of the previous application for execution. Nothing was done beyond the issue of notices under section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring the judgment-debtors to show cause why the decree should not be executed against them. After service of notice the execution proceedings were dismissed for default of the decree-holder. There was no adjudication by the Court, directly or indirectly, that the decree-holder was entitled to proceed with the execution and on that ground the Court held that as there had been nothing in the previous execution case from which it could be said that the Court had decided one way or the other as to whether the proceedings were barred by limitation it was still open to the judgment-debtor in subsequent proceedings to take the point. Both those cases appear to me to be materially different from the facts of the present case. Once one arrives at the conclusion that the Court has decided either directly or indirectly that the previous execution case was a fit one to try and, therefore, not barred by limitation there is an end to the matter and it is not open to either of the parties thereafter to raise the same question in a fresh execution. For these reasons it seems to me that the present appeal must fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 80 OF 1922.

December 5, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.

JHINKU SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

SITAL SINGH—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Minor—Arbitration award—Minor party—Compromise for fresh submission to arbitration—Court, duty of—Benefit to minor—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II.

As an arbitration award is binding on the parties, where one of the parties to it is a minor, the Court should not uphold a compromise by the parties to refer the dispute to arbitration a second time, unless the award is set aside on any of the grounds mentioned in Schedule Second to the Civil Procedure Code or unless the Court considers the compromise to be in the interest of the minor. [p. 134, col. 1.]

Per Walsh, J—The jurisdiction of Equity Courts over the interests of a minor has always been considered parental and of very solemn obligation, and a Judge sitting in any civil suit has to exercise that jurisdiction when the facts arise and the question of a minor's consent is involved. No contract amounting to an apparent surrender or variation of an infant's right ought to be sanctioned or listened to for one minute by any Court without satisfying its mind that the proposed arrangement is bona fide intended for the benefit of the minor. [p. 134, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Piggott, J—As the order we propose to pass at present will not finally dispose of this application, we need not say more than absolutely necessary to make our order clear to the lower Court. In a suit, in which certain minor plaintiffs were suing through their next friend, there was a reference to arbitration. An award was returned in favour of the plaintiffs. The contesting defendant filed an affidavit of objections assailing the award upon a great variety of grounds. The Court had fixed a certain date for hearing these objections. Before that date arrived, an application was made orally to the Court to the effect that the parties were agreed together that the arbitration award, in favour of the plaintiffs, should be set aside and a fresh reference made to the arbitration of two persons who were Counsel appearing for the respecting parties. We have it from a subsequent order of the Trial Court that the learned Subordinate Judge thought that he had no option upon such an application having been made, but to set aside the award and submit the dispute to what we may call the second set of arbitrators. He refers o a reported decision of this Court in the case of Lutawan v. Lachiya (1) in which it was held that the next friend or guardian ad litem of a minor litigant can refer the case to arbitration without obtaining the leave of the Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has altogether overlooked the fact that he had before him an arbitration award, which was valid and binding upon the parties unless set aside for any of the reasons stated in the Schedule dealing with references to arbitration. The question which he had to consider was whether the next friend of the minor plaintiffs, in whose favour an award had been made, could so compromise the dispute as to the validity of that award as to give the Court no option but to accept the compromise and, therefore, to preclude the Court altogether from considering whether it was one which in the interest of the minors ought to have been entered into. A peculiar feature of the present case is that one of the arbitrators named in this second submission was the Counsel appearing for the minor plaintiffs who, we find, actually obtained a fee of Rs. 100 for his services as arbitrator. If he had advised his clients to throw up the first award, which was in their favour, we think his conduct in consenting to act as one of the second set of arbitrators was improper, because he put himself in such a position that his interest and his duty were in conflict. However, as the record now stands, we think the most suitable orders for us to pass are that there should be an enquiry into the objections taken by the contesting defendants to the first award and that the result of the enquiry should be certified to us before we pass any final orders on this application. The said application will, therefore, remain on the pending file of this Court but the record will be sent down to the Court below with the request that the said Court should enquire into, after proper notice to the parties concerned, the objections filed by the contesting defendants to the first award and should report to this Court the result of such enquiry. The case will then be put up again for hearing as soon as possible after the receipt of the lower Court's report.

Walsh, J.—I entirely agree with everything that has been said. I only want to add one word on a matter of principle about which I am satisfied that some Judges of the lower Courts require serious warning. In the order under revision the learned Judge has used this language: "The award is set aside with the free consent of the parties and the Court had no option in the matter but to set it aside." That is a total misunderstanding. One need not feel surprised. Judges in the lower Courts are not trained in equitable jurisdiction but nonetheless they have sometimes to exercise it. The jurisdiction of Equity Courts over the interest of the minor has always been considered parental and of very solemn obligation and a Judge sitting in an ordinary Common Law suit or in a civil suit of any kind, has to exercise that jurisdiction when the facts arise and the question of a minor's consent is involved. No contract or consent order amounting to an apparent surrender or variation of infant's right ought to be sanctioned or listened to for one moment by any Court without requiring some material calculated to satisfy its mind and without being satisfied, as far as it can be, on materials which are necessarily imperfect that the proposed arrangement is bona fide intended for the benefit of the infant. In this case the learned Judge has not only utterly failed to consider that question but has used language showing that he was not aware of the duty imposed upon him.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—On the 8th September 1898 Mahant Jagar Nath Das, who was the head of Suja Asthal, died and on his death Siaram Das took possessison of the Asthal, and of the properties appertaining thereto. On the 10th January 1899 Mahabir Das, claiming to be the disciple of Jagar Nath Das, instituted a suit against Siaram Das in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for a declaration of his title to, and for recovery of possession of, the properties appertaining to Suja Asthal. On the 23rd September 1899 a Receiver was appointed to take charge of the properties appertaining to the Asthal. Siaram Das was thus deprived of all means either of supporting himself or of defending the suit. He, therefore, borrowed money from Baijnath Goenka on certain ekrarnamas. Baijnath Goenka is represented in these appeals by Kedar Nath Goenka, the defendant-appellant. Siaram Das borrowed money, as I have said, from Baijnath Geonka to defray the expenses of the litigation which had been commenced by Mahabir Das. Mahabir's suit was dismissed in the Court of the first instance, but on appeal the parties entered into a compromise by which each admitted the right of the other to be the Mahant of the Asthal and they agreed to divide the income of the Asthal in equal shares In 1903 Baijnath Goenka instituted a suit against Siaram Das and Mahabir Das for recovery of over a lac of rupees on the foot of the ekrarnamas which had been executed by Siaram Das in his favour. This suit was Suit No. 500 of 1903. He got a decree for Rs. 22,073 in the Calcutta High Court as against Siaram Das, his suit against Mahabir Das being dismissed. In 1907 Baijnath Goenka commenced execution proceedings against Siaram Das. Some of the properties appertaining to the Asthal were put up for sale and were purchased by the plaintiffs in these suits. Mahant Jagarnath Das, plaintiff in Suit No. 477 of 1918, purchased the properties set out at the foot of his plaint for Rs. 6,476 and Bikramajit Singh, plaintiff in Suit No. 408 of 1918, purchased the properties set out at the foot of his plaint for Rs. 4,525. These purchases were on the 18th and 21st of January 1908. Siaram Das then applied to the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr for setting aside the sale under the provisions of section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge on the 11th May 1908 set aside the sale. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to the Court for refund of the purchase-money. Baijnath Goenka objected as he had filed an appeal to the High Court against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge setting aside the sale. The plaintiffs undertook to re-deposit the purchase-money in case the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was set aside on appeal. On that undertaking being given they were permitted to withdraw the purchase-money from the Court. During the pendency of Baijnath Goenka's appeal in the High Court, a suit was instituted in 1909, under the provisions of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, for removal of Siaram Das from the Mahantship of Suja Asthal. On the 30th September 1910 the learned District Judge of Bhagalpur, by his decree removed Siaram Das from the Mahantship of the Suja Asthal. The effect of this decree was to put Mahabir Das in sole possession of the Asthal properties. Siaram Das appealed against the judgment of the learned District Judge of Bhagalpur to the Calcutta High Court and, on the 28th May 1912, the Calcutta High Court dismissed the appeal of Siaram Das. Baijnath Goenka's appeal against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Monghyr setting aside the sale came up for hearing before the Calcutta High Court on the 4th February 1913. The Calcutta High Court set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for trial by the Court of the first instance. On remand Siaram Das, having no further interest in the Asthal properties, did not appear to support the application for setting aside the sale. The application was accordingly dismissed for default and, in due course, the sales were confirmed. Baijnath Goenka thereupon applied for an order directing the plaintiffs in these actions to deposit the purchase-money in Court in terms of their undertaking. The plaintiffs objected but their objections where disallowed on the 28th July 1917 and they were directed to deposit in Court the sums witdhrawn by them with interest from the date of the withdrawal. They appealed to this Court anh their appeals were dismissed on the 27th May 1918.

These actions were then brought on the 28th August 1918 for a declaration that they were not liable to deposit the purchase-money in Court on the grounds, first, that the properties sold at the execution sale were debuttar properties and that Siaram Das had no right to transfer them, and that the plaintiffs as purchasers have acquired no title in them; secondly, that Mahabir Das, the present Mahant, will not allow the plaintiffs to take possession of those properties, and, thirdly, that as Baijnath Goenka omitted to notify the encumbrances of Dalip Narain Singh subsisting on the properties purchased by them he was guilty of fraudulent concealment and that he ought not to be allowed to compel the plaintiffs to deposit the purchase-money in Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the title in the Asthal properties did not pass to the plaintiffs at the auction-sale and he has accordingly made a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs that they are not liable to refund the purchase-money in respect of the purchases made by them in Execution Case No. 427 of 1907.

I am wholly unable to agree with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge. I doubt very much whether a suit lies for a declaration that they are not liable to deposit the purchase-money in Court. Under O. XXI, r. 91, the purchaser decree-holder in execution of a decree has the right to apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. It appears to me that, when the matter has passed the domain of contract to the domain of sale the purchaser can only have the sale set aside on the ground that there was some fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the decree-holder. But it seems to be settled law in this country that a suit lies for setting aside the sale on the ground that the vendor had no saleable interest in the property. See Prasanna Kumar Battacharjee v. Ibrahim Mirza (1) and Kustomji

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 924.

Ardeshir v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (2). It is not necessary for me to express a final opinion on this point, because I am satisfied that the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed in this case.

The basis of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge seems to be this—that Mahant Siaram Das was a trespasser and never had a good title to the Asthal. It is, in my opinion, impossible to support this view in the face of the admitted history of the Asthal from 1896 up to 1912. Siaram undoubtedly took possession of the Asthal and of the properties appertaining thereto upon the death of the Mahant Jagar Nath Das. It is true that suit was instituted by Mahabir Das against him but that suit failed in the Court of the first instance and in the High Court it was compromised on the footing that Mahant Siaram Das, had a good and a valid title to the Asthal, Siaram Das himself admitting that Mahabir Das had an equally good and valid title to the Asthal. After the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the suit instituted by Mahabir Das against Siaram Das, Siaram Das remained in undisputed possession of the properties until he was removed by the decree of the Court in 1912. Nobody seems to have questioned his right to be the Mahan of the Asthal. In fact the suit which was filed under the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure admits by implication that he was rightfully in possession of the properties as the Mahant of the Asthal. In my opinion, it is impossible to hold that Siaram Das was a trespasser and was not rightfully in possession of the Asthal.

That being so, it is necessary to consider whether Siaram Das had a valid title at any time to convey the properties. Now the Mahant of an endowment is the proprietor of the properties although he holds these properties in trust. This is how the Judicial Committee has described the position of the Mahant in the recent case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (3).

The Mahant of an establishment has very large administrative powers over the affairs of the Asthal and undoubtedly he has power to sell or mortgage the property in case of need, or for the benefit of the Asthal. That being so, it is impossible to maintain that he has no saleable interest in the property. Apart from any other consideration, when the facts in connection with Baijnath Goenka's loans are examined it must follow that there was a legal necessity for those loans. As I have said before, directly after the institution of the suit by Mahabir Das a Receiver was appointed to take charge of the properties appertaining to the Asthal. Siaram was accordingly deprived of all means either of supporting himself or of defending the suit. It was absolutely necessary for him to raise a loan in order to defend his title against the hostile attack made on it by Mahabir Das. It was, in these circumstances, that Baijnath Goenka lent him the money and, in my opinion, it is impossible to say that there was no legal necessity in respect of those loans. The case of Shankar Bharati Svami v. Venkapa Naik (4) is decisive on this point. That was also a case where an attack was made on the title of one Vidya Shankar who held the Math properties. Vidya Shankar borrowed money in order to maintain himself and to defend the suit brought against him. Sargent, C. J., came to the conclusion that a loan effected under such circumstances to meet the exigencies of the presiding swami and to restore tranquility to the Math would, according to the custom and usage of the Math, be regarded as properly contracted.

This case was cited before the learned Subordinate Judge, but he thought that the case did not apply because it was not shown first, that Mahant Siaram Das was a real Mahant of the Suja Asthal; secondly, that the loan was bona fide advanced for defending his title, and, thirdly, that Baijnath Goenka in good faith believed that he was advancing the loan for the interest of the Asthal. So far as the first ground is concerned, I have dealt with it fully. There is no sort of reason for holding that Mahant Siaram Das was not the Mahant of the Suja Asthal. So far as the second point is concerned, the loan was undoubtedly taken in order to enable Siaram Das to defend his title as against the hostile attack made on it by Mahabir Das. That was held in the suit between Baijnath Goenka and Mahant Siaram Das, and, so far as the last point is concerned, upon the finding that Baijnath Goenka did advance the money in order to enable Siaram Das to defend his title as against the attack made on it by Mahabir Das there is no reason to doubt that it was advanced in good faith. No doubt, Baijnath Goenka stipulated that he would receive over a lac rupees in return for the money which he spent on behalf of Siaram Das, but then he did not get a decree for the sum which he claimed in the action against Siaram Das. His decree was for the sum actually expended by him in defending the title of Siaram Das with reasonable interest upon the money so expended by him. There is, in my opinion, no reason to doubt that the money was bona fide advanced by Baijnath Goenka in order to enable Siaram Das to defend his title. The case of Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee v. Narendra Nath Mookerjee (5) is directly in point. If there was legal necessity in respect of the loan, it must follow that Siaram Das had a good title to convey the property and if he could convey the properties voluntarily those properties can be seized in execution of a decree which was properly obtained by Baijnath Goenka against Siaram Das for a debt which was properly incurred by Siaram Das. In my opinion, the plaintiffs in these actions have acquired a good and valid title to the properties by the purchase made by them and they were not entitled to have a declaration that they are not liable to deposit the purchase-money in Court.

So far as the other point is concerned, namely, that there was fraudulent concealment on the part of Baijnath Goenka in so far as he did not notify the encumbrances of Dalip Narain Singh the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is in favour of the appellant. It appears from the judgment that Baijnath Goenka did file a petition in the previous execution case which was Execution Case No. 668 of 1905 notifying the encumbrances affecting the properties. It is quite true that the sale proclamation did not set out these encumbrances but it is impossible to uphold the contention of the plaintiffs that there was fraudulent concealment on the part of the decree-holder. The case of Khetro Mohan Datt v. Sheikh Dilwar (6) is conclusive on this point. This Court in that case held that if a purchaser has bought a property the title as to which is defective or if he has been misled on account of fraud or omission on the part of the decree-holder it is open to him to seek his remedy as the law allows. But there is no reason why a Court should interfere on behalf of the auction-purchaser and set aside the sale simply because an auction-purchaser has bought a bad title. Mullick and Thornhill, JJ., in delivering the judgment of the Court pointed out that every man buys at an auction-sale with his eyes open and the general principle, that an auction-purchaser cannot attack his own purchase except on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property must apply. In my opinion, the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case cannot be supported. I would allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and the decree passed by the Court below and dismiss both the suits with costs in both the Courts. The auction-purchasers must forthwith deposit the purchase-money in Court with interest at 6 per cent. from Divorce suits—Costs to wife—Principle applicable.

In an application for divorce, the general principle in the matter of awarding costs is, that the wife who is charged, rightly or wrongly, by the husband in a Divorce Court is entitled to be given her costs which will be taxed costs in defending the suit, except in cases where the wife has ample means of her own to defend herself or where the Solicitor who is employed has been guilty of misconduct.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated the 31st January 1922, and made in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Matrimonial Jurisdiction of the High Court in Original Matrimonial Suit No. 9 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Phillips, J., granting a decree nisi to a husband against his wife. He found, as a fact, that the wife was leading an immoral life since her marriage, that she committed adultery with persons unknown and that, therefore, the husband was entitled to a decree.

I agree with the learned Judge that a great deal of the evidence is not a very clear and definite, but you cannot expect, in such a case, to get very definite evidence. There is evidence, which the learned Judge accepted, that the wife after the marriage lived in a notorious house of ill-fame, that she at night time hung about outside Bioscopes where she, at any rate, conversed with soldiers and that on one occasion she quarrelled in the street with another woman of bad reputation, the cause of the quarrel being, according to the public evidence, that the respondent accused the other lady of taking away soldiers from her who had promised to go to her place. The learned Judge having seen the witnesses and heard the evidence, accepted it and I think there was ample evidence on which he could come to that conclusion, and this decree must, therefore, stand.

Another point is taken and that is the question of costs. In this case the learned Judge has, before the hearing of the case, given Rs. 75 costs to the respondent. It was something, at any rate, to go on with, but I do not think that it was intended to be a final order at all. He says that some of the witnesses who were called were possibly unnecessary, and he refused to make any further order, having found the wife guilty. I do not think he attempted to apply the right principle to the matter at all. Except, at any rate, in two cases, firstly, where the wife has ample means of her own to defend herself and, secondly, where the Solicitor who is employed has been guilty of misconduct, she would have to be provided with funds by the husband: but apart from that, the general principle, to my mind, is that the wife, who is charged, rightly or wrongly, by her husband in a Divorce Court, is entitled to be given her costs in defending that suit. The proper way of doing that is to give her taxed costs, and I think in this case the order must be varied by giving her taxed costs of the suit—of course, it will be for the Taxing Officer in taxing the bill to say whether any of the witnesses were necessary or not. However, when you go to the Court of Appeal, the position is different and the respondent would naturally have to be paid his costs of the appeal; but as the appellant has succeeded in the matter of costs though she has failed as regards the main part of the appeal, the fair order woud be that there will be no costs of the appeal.

Ramesam, J.—I agree.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Chapra, dated the 6th February 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—This application has been made against an order, dated the 6th February 1923, made by the Subordinate Judge of Chapra in a case under section 73, Civil Procedure Code. Decisions made under this section with reference to the claims of rival decree-holders are not ordinarily revisable under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and the only reason that I can see for admitting the present application is that the learned Judge's judgment is so hopelessly inadequate that our interference is called for under section 107 of the Government of India Act. The learned Judge observes that argument was heard at great length, but his decision occupies exactly 7 lines and contains no particulars as to the claims made by the contending parties the evidence given, the arguments advanced and the reasons upon which he bases his order. The matter was sufficiently complicated to require considerable argument before us and I certainly think that the learned Subordinate Judge failed in his duty in omitting to write a more considered and careful judgment.

Now the facts appear to be these. On the 28th July 1917 one Bishun Mohon got a decree against one Ram Gharib for Rs. 6,135-9-0 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Gorakhpur. On the same date one Hira Lal got a decree for Rs. 4,000 against the same judgment-debtor in the same Court. A third suit was brought by the Liquidator of the Kayesth Trading and Banking Corporation in liquidation in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur against the same defendant for a sum of Rs. 76, 000 on the allegation that Ram Gharib was the Manager of the Kayesth Trading and Banking Corporation and that he had misappropriated the sum in question and spent it in the purchase of properties for the benefit of himself and his co-sharers. Accordingly, the Liquidator impleaded in his suit not only Ram Gharib but also the members of his joint family. While that suit was pending the Liquidator brought a suit against the Manager under the Indian Companies Act in the High Court of Allahabad and in consequence of some proceedings by way of compromise he withdrew the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Gorakhpur and obtained on the 31st July 1922 a consent decree in the High Court for the sum of Rs. 76,000. At the same time, in accordance with the compromise, the Manager and his co-sharers executed a security-bond in favour of the Liquidator, the relevant portion of which ran in the following terms:---

"And it is also stipulated therein that we the declarants should mortgage and hypothecate our properties described below by way of security for payment of the said decretal amount. Accordingly, acting under the said settlement, we the declarants mortgaged the properties described below by way of security for the said decretal amount to Munshi Narayan Prasad Asthana, Advocate of the Allahabad High Court and the Official Liquidator of the Bank, and we do declare that the said Official Liquidator be at liberty to realise the said sum of Rs. 76,000 (seventy six thousand) by taking out execution of the decree against me the declarant No. 1 and to file a petition for rateable distribution of share in the properties of me the declarant No. 1 which have been attached or to have them attached by taking out execution of the said decree; if (entire) decretal amount be not realised in this way then the Official Liquidator may recover the balance of the money due under the decree not realised in this by sale of the properties given below."

All these three decrees were thereafter sent for execution to the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Chapra. There Bishun Mohon applied for execution on the 11th September 1922 and on the 16th September 1922 the Court caused to be attached Ram Gharib's share in certain properties. Hira Lal applied for execution on the 14th December 1922 and on the 22nd January 1923 he attached some of Ram Gharib's properties. The Liquidator's application for execution is dated the 10th January 1923 and on the 12th January 1923 he made an application under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, for rateable distribution along with Bishun Mohon. Bishun Mohon objected and the Subordinate Judge has decided against him. The present application for revision has been made against that order.

Now, it appears that after Hira Lal attached Ram Gharib's properties in execution of his decree, the Liquidator stepped in and produced the security-bond which had been executed on the 22nd September by Ram Gharib and his co-sharers and asked that the properties covered by that security-bond which had been attached and were about to be sold should be sold subject to his mortgage lien. The Court allowed the prayer, but in fact none of the properties covered by the security-bond were sold and some other properties belonging to Ram Gharib were sold in that execution.

It is contended that as the Liquidator is a mortgagee he cannot have the benefit of section 73. It is urged that proviso (b) of clause (1) of section 73 compels the mortgagee to give up his encumbrance and to sell the property free of his mortgage charge if he should desire to share in the proceeds of the sale; if he does not do this, it is not open to him to ask for rateable distribution even though he may be the holder of of a money-decree against the judgment-debtor apart from the mortgage. In my opinion the contention is not well founded.

The proviso applies only to a mortgagee whose charge is valid against the executing decree-holder. In the present case the Liquidator's charge having come into existence after Bishun Mohon's attachment the sale could not have been in any way affected by the encumbrance, and if the Liquidator is debarred from applying for rateable distribution in respect of his decree for Rs. 76,000 there will be no property left against which he can enforce either that decree or his mortgage charge.

Whether the security-bond effects a mortgage on Ram Gharib's share in the sense that it enables the Liquidator to sue Ram Gharib and his co-sharers for the realisation of the whole of the Rs. 76,000 is open to some doubt the bond itself stipulates that the Liquidator shall proceed against Ram Gharib's properties in execution of his money-decree and that it is only for the balance that the mortgage shall be enforced against the shares of the remaining co-sharers of Ram Gharib. That point, however, is not really material to the decision of the present application.

The result is, that the application is dismissed with costs: hearing fee two mohurs.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 4th January 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and S. Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in these two connected appeals is as to the validity of a deed of waqf executed by Abdul Ali Khan and his wife on 26th March 1909. Abdul Ali Khan died on the 7th May 1917 and his wife shortly afterwards, and the present suit was brought by his brother Muhammad Ali Khan claiming possession of his legal share of the property as his heir under Muhammadan Law. Muhammad Ali Khan has died during the pendency of the proceedings and the appellants are his legal representatives. The parties to the suit are Sunnis. Muhammad Ali Khan in his plaint denied that any waqf was ever dedicated and urged further that if there was a waqf it was fictitious and illusory. That a waqfnama was executed has never been seriously disputed. The Trial Court, however, treated it as a waqf which would not really take effect until after the deaths of Abdul Ali Khan and his wife. It accordingly treated it as valid only to the extent of one-third of the property covered by it and decreed the suit as to the remainder. The learned Additional Judge, however, has upheld the waqf as valid and dismissed the the suit. His findings are:—

(1) That the dedication was substantial and real,

(2) that the dedication of the corpus was absolute and immediate;

(3) that the reservation of a life interest in the income, even if it were the entire income, which it is not, limited to the life of the two settlors, does not render the waqf illusory and testamentary.

The third finding is one of law. The first two findings are findings of fact, except in so far as the reality of the dedication may be a matter of legal inference from the facts found. The points which are taken in this Court are two (1) that the waqf was invalid for want of delivery of possession; and (2) that the settlor and his wife retained complete control over the income during their joint lives and that this renders the waqf illusory and invalid either altogether, or, in the alternative, as held by the Trial Court, for the period of their lives.

The only ground on which the waqf is assailed under the first head is that no application for mutation of names was made by Abdul Ali Khan, though he lived for 8 years after the execution of the deed of waqf. On the other hand, it is proved that under the deed of waqf he appointed himself as first Mutwalli and expressly declared that he was holding the property henceforth as Mutwalli and not as owner. This, according to the accepted rule of Muhammadan Law, is sufficient, and it was so held by this Court in Mohammad Abdul Jalil Khan v. Mohammad Ubedullah Khan (1). This ground of attack, therefore, fails.

As regards the second plea, the suggestion that the waqf can be treated as a testamentary waqf may be rejected at the outset. A Will is a document which may be cancelled by the testator at any time up to his death and only comes into operation at the latter event. Here there was an irrevocable dedication of the corpus of the property from the date of the deed. The provisions of the deed which are relied on as showing that the dedication was illusory are set out in the judgment of the Trial Court. They amount to this, that during the lifetime of the settlor and his wife the amount to be spent on charitable and pious purposes was left entirely to their discretion, both as to the sum to be expended and as to the purposes for which it was to be spent. They were to spend as much of the profits as they deemed proper on charitable and pious purposes recognised by Muhammadan Law and the remainder for their support, and no one was to have the right to call them to account. This state of things was, however, confined entirely to the lifetime of Abdul Ali Khan and his wife. It is not disputed that after their death the objects of the waqf were carefully specified and were proper objects, and that the Mutwalli was directly bound to spend the money on those objects. The question is, therefore, substantially that stated by the learned Additional Judge, namely, where the reservation of what practically amounts to a life interest in the income as distinct from the corpus is it sufficient to invalidate the waqf. This question was first raised in the case of Jaun Beebee v. Abdollah Barber (2). In that case five questions were referred to the Maulvies for decision. The first question was

"Whether, according to Muhammadan Law, an endowment to charatible uses is valid, when qualified by a reservation of the rents and profits to the donor himself during his life?"

The Maulvies alluded to the difference of opinion between the Imam Muhammad and the Imam Abu Yusuf on this point and agreed that the opinion of most of the learned upheld the view of Abu Yusuf who considered the waqf legal. Judgment was given accordingly. The same view was taken by the Bombay High Court in the case of Casamally Jairajbhoy Peerbhoy v. Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim (3). It was suggested that Jaun Beebee's case (2) had been dissented from in the Full Bench case of Bikani Mia v. Shuk Lal Poddar (4) but this is not the case. The judgment was cited at some length by Ghose, J., (pp. 185-188) and also by Trevelyan, J., (p. 223 of the report) and was distinguished from the case before them, but neither of the Judges pronounced it to be incorrect.

The appellants have also referred to the Privy Council ruling in Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (5). This ruling is in no way contrary to the view taken by the Court below. The test laid down by the Privy Council for the validity of the endowment was that there must be a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some time or other. Their Lordships also quote with approval the opinion of Kemp, J., in an earlier case, "that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items, which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family, and which, after they lapse, will leave the whole property intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Muhammadan Law."

In this case there was admittedly an ultimate dedication of the entire property to religious and charitable uses. The weight of authority is entirely in favour

CHAURASI AHSARICK AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 17, O. XXXIV, r. 14, scope of—Mortgage suit—Compromise decree—Decree directing execution against properties of judgment-debtor in certain order—Decree-holder whether can bring mortgaged properties to sale—Execution petition—Prayer for sale of immoveable property in case of moveable property proving insufficient—Alternative prayer, whether constitutes amendment of petition.

The class of case contemplated in O. XXXIV, r. 14, of the Civil Procedure Code appears to be that class of case in which a suit is brought upon the covenant to repay contained in a mortgage deed or upon the debt arising out of that covenant or in respect of some other obligation arising out of the mortgage and not to a suit which is brought in order to enforce a sale of the mortgaged properties. [p. 145, col. 2.]

Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree against the mortgagor not in the form of a mortgage-decree but merely in the form of a personal decree, the mortgaged properties cannot be allowed to be sold in execution of such a decree until there is another decree directing the enforcement of the charge against the mortgaged properties. [p. 145, col. 2; p. 146, col. 1.]

In a mortgage suit a compromise decree was passed directing that the udgment-debtor should pay the decretal amount by certain instalments and in case of failure to pay 3 consecutive instalments, execution for the amount due should issue against the othe p operties of the judgment-debtor and in the event of the amount not being realised in that manner against the mortgaged properties. Default having taken place, the decree-holder applied for execution against the properties referred to in the compromise decree in the order in which they became liable. There being no moveable properties of the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder applied for attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties:

Held, (1) that the decree was nothing more than a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage; [p. 145, col. 2.]

(2) that inasmuch as the decree itself provided, in the event of default and in the event of the other property of the judgment-debtor proving insufficient, for a sale of the mortgaged property itself, it was not necessary for the decree-holder to bring another suit asking again for the sale of the property merely because the other remedy given under the decree had proved infructuous; [p. 146, col. 1.]

(3) that the application to be allowed to proceed against the mortgage properties came directly withinthe execution petition itself, and it required no amendment of the execution petition to enable the Court to proceed against those properties. [p. 146, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Santal-Parganas, dated the 7th December 1922, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Santal-Parganas, dated the 21st December 1921.

Mr. S. K. Mittra, for Mr. S. C. Mittra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Respondent.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtors in a suit brought upon a mortgage in which a compromise decree was passed. The respondents, who are the decree-holders, sought to execute their decree. The judgment-debtors raised certain objections. The Court rejected those objections and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. From the decision of the District Judge the judgment-debtors have apealed to this Court.

It appears that the decree-holders instituted a suit against the judgment-debtors in order to enforce a mortgage executed in their favour by the judgment-debtors. The result of that suit was a compromise. The compromise provided that the judgment-debtors should pay the sum due upon the mortgage amounting to the sum of Rs. 3,800 by certain instalments and in the event of default of three consecutive instalments, the decree-holders were to be allowed to realise the entire amount remaining due from the person and other properties of the judgment-debtors, and in the event of the amount due not being so realised the decree-holders were to be entitled to realise the amount from the mortgaged property by sale. The mortgage property is a four-annas share of Mauza Ghat Majbonarah, Touzi No. 445, and if the whole amount was not realised in that manner then certain provision was made for proceeding against other property, which is not material for the purpose, of this appeal.

In June 1921 the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree, there having been a default in respect of three consecutive instalments under the terms of the decree. It is important to bear in mind how the application for execution was framed. The application for execution was framed as an application for execution against the property referred to in the compromise decree and for execution against that property in the order in which it became liable under the compromise decree. The mode in which the assistance of the Court was required was, first of all, by attachment and sale of the moveable properties of the judgment-debtors; and, secondly, by attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties. The moveable properties were set out in a schedule, the mortgaged properties were merely mentioned under the description given in the decree as the four-annas share of Mauza Ghat Majbonarah, Touzi No. 445. The moveable properties apparently could not be found, at all events they were not attached and, as far as one can gather from the judgment of the lower Courts, the judgment-debtors contended that they had no such moveable properties. Having failed to effect execution by attachment of those moveable properties, the decree-holders applied to the Court for attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties. In objection to that application certain points were taken on behalf of the judgment-debtors. As already stated, both the lower Courts dismissed those objections and ordered the execution to proceed by attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties.

The only points which have been urged before us in this appeal are, first, that the case comes within the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 14, and, therefore, a further suit is necessary before the mortgaged properties can be sold; and, secondly, that the application for sale of the mortgaged properties in the present execution proceedings is in fact an amendment of the execution petition which, under the decided cases, the Court has no power to grant after registration of the petition.

With regard to the first point, I think it is clear that the decree obtained in the present case is something more than a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. Order XXXIV, r. 14, applies to a decree of that nature and it provides that the mortgagee having obtained such a decree shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage; and it further provides that he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in O. II, r. 2. The class of case contemplated in O. XXXIV, r. 14, appears to me to be that class of case in which a suit is brought upon the covenant to re-pay contained in the mortgage-deed, or upon the debt arising out of that covenant, or in respect of some other obligation arising out of the mortgage, and not to a suit which is brought in order to enforce a sale of the mortgaged properties. This rule corresponds to, or rather takes the place of, section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act which is repealed by the Civil Procedure Code and under the previous Act it had been held that a suit of the nature described in O. XXXIV, r. 14 did not entitle the mortgagee to put to sale the mortgaged properties. The old enactment was, with a slight modification, re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code and still remains the rule. It seems quite obvious that there may be very good reasons for refusing to allow the mortgaged properties to be sold merely because the mortgagee has obtained a decree against the mortgagor not in the form of a mortgage-decree but merely in the form of a personal decree against the mortgagor, a decree which does not in any way affect the mortgaged properties. In such a case it is clearly desirable that before the charge upon the mortgaged properties can be enforced there should be a decree directing the enforcement of that charge. The present case is one entirely different. The decree obtained in the present case was with a slight modification exactly the sort of decree obtained in an ordinary mortgage suit. The suit was a mortgage suit and a suit praying for the sale of the mortgaged properties; but a compromise between the parties instead of the ordinary form of mortgage-decree being passed which would order the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal sum within a certain time failing which it would order the mortgaged properties to be sold, the compromise decree provided that the judgment-debtor should pay the decretal amount by certain instalments and if he should fail in the payment of three consecutive instalments then execution for the whole amount due should issue against the other properties of the judgment-debtors and in the event of the amount not being realised in that manner against the mortgaged properties. It is, therefore, clear that the decree itself in this case orders, in the event of default and in the event of the other properties of the judgment-debtors proving insufficient, a sale of the mortgaged property itself, and I can see no reason why it should be necessary in the event which has happened for the decree-holders to have to bring another suit asking again for the sale of the property merely because the other remedy given under the decree has proved infructuous. This case is altogether different to my mind from the case contemplated in O. XXXIV, r. 14, and the appeal on that ground must fail.

With regard to the second point, it has no doubt been held in the case of Asgar Ali v. Trollokya Nath Ghose (1) that, under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17, no amendment of the execution petition is permissible after the petition has been registered. It would follow, therefore, that if the decree-holder wishes to execute his decree in some manner not provided for by the execution petition, he must bring a fresh execution case for that purpose. In later cases, however, more particularly in the case of Gnanedra Kumar Rai v. Shayama Sunaer Jen [Nishendra Kumar Roy] (2) and a more recent case in this Court Ram Sumran Prasad v. Babu Ram Banadur (3), it has been held that an application to file a fresh list of properties against which execution is sought is not an amendment of the execution petition. The present case, however, is even a clearer case than either of those mentioned, because in the present case, upon looking at the execution petition filed, it appears that execution was asked for not merely by attachment and sale of the moveable properties of the judgment-debtors but also by attachment and sale of the mortgaged properties, if the former should prove to be insufficient. It is, therefore, abundantly clear that the present application to be allowed to proceed against the mortgaged properties comes directly within the execution petition itself and it requires no amendment of the execution petition to enable the Court to proceed against those properties.

For these reasons I think that this appeal must fail on both grounds. The result is, that the appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondents who have appealed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2053 OF 1920.

GULLI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Legal representative, object of appointing—

GULLI v. SAWAN.

Suit by son attacking alienation by father—Death of son—Father whether legal representative of son—Legal representative brought on record and case decided, whether can be re-opened on the application of another legal representative.

The object of appointing a legal representative of a deceased party to a suit, is that the suit might proceed and a decision be arrived at. [p. 148, col. 1.]

N. brought a suit attacking an alienation made by his father G.; during the pendency of an appeal by the vendees N. died without issue, and on the application of the vendees appellants G. was substituted on the record as N.'s legal representative:

Held, that G. could not, for the purposes of the suit, be regarded as the legal representative of his son, and that as the proper legal representative of G. had not been brought on the record the vendees' appeal had abated. [p. 148, col. 2.]

Once the legal representative of a deceased appellant in a case is brought on the record and the case disposed of, it cannot be re-opened if some other legal representative of the deceased comes to Court within six months of his death and claims to be made a legal representative. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 12th June 1920, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, dated the 13th May 1919.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. B. A. Cooper, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree-table will afford assistance:—

On the 9th of March 1898 Jhaba sold certain lands for Rs. 2,200. On the 6th of June 1902 Gulli and Puran sold some of their lands for Rs. 1,000, and on the 7th of August 1902 Rabi and Mangal sold some land belonging to them for Rs. 900. On the 25th February 1919 Nigahia, son of Gulli, instituted three suits relating to the aforesaid alienations alleging that the lands alienated were ancestral and that the alienations had been made without consideration and for no necessity. He prayed that the said sales should not affect his reversionary rights. The Trial Court dismissed the suit relating to the first alienation (by Jhaba), but decreed the other two suits, holding necessity proved in the second alienation to the extent of Rs. 570 and in the third to the extent of Rs. 565. The vendees, Sawan, etc., appealed against these decisions. They also appealed in the suit relating to Jhaba's alienation as they had not been allowed costs. Nigahia himself preferred an appeal against the dismissal of the suit in connection with Jhaba's sale. Gulli, Nigahia's father, was a respondent in all the appeals. While the appeals were pending, on the 6th of March 1920, Nigahia died. The vendees-appellants applied to the Court in their appeals asking that Gulli, the father of Nigahia, be brought on the record as Nigahia's legal representative, as being his sole heir and legal representative, and at the same time urging that Gulli had forfeited any rights he might have had in the land. In the appeal filed by Nigahia, Gulli himself made an application, alleging that he was the legal representative of his son and asking that he be brought on the record as such.

The learned District Judge (Misra Jwala Sahai) held that Gulli could not himself question the validity of the sale in question and dismissed the appeal by Nigahia and, accepting the appeal by the vendees-appellants in the other two cases, dismissed all the suits. The learned District Judge's order was passed on the 12th of June 1920 and on the 6th July 1920, one Arjan Singh, acting through Sardar Attar Singh, Vakil, who had been for Gulli throughout, filed an application acting in connection with the appeal filed by Nigahia relating to the alienation by Jhaba, alleging that he and certain other persons named in the application, were Nigahia's legal representatives and should be brought on the record. This application was dismissed on the 7th of July 1920, the learned District Judge recording the fact that the appeal had already been decided.

Arjan Singh has now come up to this Court in revision qua the order dismissing his application and Gulli has preferred appeals in the other three cases. The revision and the appeals have been filed through Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, and we have heard Mr. Tek Chand for the vendees-respondents. This judgment will dispose of all the appeals and the revision.

Turning to the revision (No. 728 of 1920) it was contended by Mr. Sethi that the learned District Judge should have re-opened the appeal in question (relating to the alienation by Jhaba), inasmuch as Arjan Singh had come into Court within six months of Nigahia's death. Reliance was placed on Vellayam Chetty v. Jothi Mahalinga Aiyar (1) and Janardhan v. Ramchandra (2). Neither of these authorities appear to us to be in point. In the first case it was held that an unsuccessful appellant could not insist upon having a re-hearing of the case because it turned out at the time of the hearing the respondent was dead. In the Bombay case the facts were entirely different. We are unable to see any ground for revision and the order admitting the petition clearly shows that it was admitted because in it was asserted that Nigahia had left a son. Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi has admitted before us that this was wrong and that Nigahia died without issue. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Turning now to the appeals relating to the alienation by Jhaba and Rabi and Mangal. The learned District Judge appears to have been under the impression that the disabilities of the legal representatives should be taken into account. In this view we are unable to agree. When a party to a suit dies a legal representative is appointed merely in order that the suit might proceed and a decision be arrived at. It is the original parties' right and disabilities that have to be considered and the mere fact that Gulli could not have brought a suit to set aside these alienations on the ground of limitation is not, in our opinion, sufficient to render the suit by Nigahia liable to dismissal. Gulli in these two cases was undoubtedly the legal representative of his son and the learned District Judge should have decided the appeals on the merits. We accordingly accept these two Appeals Nos. 2054 and 2055 of 1920 and remand them to the learned District Judge for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will follow the event, and the stamps will be refunded.

Turning now to the appeal relating to the alienation by Gulli and Puran (Appeal No. 2053 of 1920), it appears to us that here again the learned District Judge has erred. Mr. Tek Chand contended that Nigahia was really suing as representative of all the reversioners of Gulli and that Gulli could not be regarded as his own reversioner. For the purposes of this suit it seems to us that, strictly speaking, Gulli could not be regarded as the legal representative of his son. The alienation attacked in the suit was made by him (Gulli) and his brother Puran, and Gulli was not, therefore, the proper legal representative. The appellants in the case were the vendees and it was incumbent on them to move the Court to bring on the record the proper legal representatives. The pedigree-table shows that there were other reversioners, for instance, Rabi and Mangal, and the vendees were to blame for having brought the wrong person on to the record. Their appeal accordingly abated and no proper application having been made within the prescribed period from the death of Nigahia, this appeal has abated.

We accordingly accept this appeal as well and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge restore that of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. As, however, Gulli himself claimed to be the legal representative of his son, we direct that the parties in this appeal should bear their own costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 41—Execution of decree—Transfer of decree—Certificate, when to be sent—Jurisdiction to execute decree.

The Court to which a decree is sent for execution retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree until the execution is withdrawn from it, or until it has fully executed the decree, or has executed it so far as it has been able to execute it within its jurisdiction or has failed to execute it and has certified the result to the Court which forwarded the decree. It is only when one of these stages has been reached that the Court to which a decree has been sent is bound to send a certificate under section 41 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Court which sent the decree, and in the case of a failure to execute, it is intended that there should be a complete failure such as would result in no benefit to the judgment-creditor for one reason or another, and not merely a partial failure. [p. 149, col. 2; p. 150, col. 1.]

Abda Begam v. Muzaffar Husen Khan, 20 A. 129; A. W. N. (1897) 218; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 443, relied on.

It does not follow that because one application for execution fails in a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution, that that Court is bound to send a certificate under section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Court in which the decree was passed. [p. 150, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 437 of 1917.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Appellants:—My submission to your Lordships is two-fold. First, the lower Court is wrong in saying that the Islampur Court had jurisdiction to entertain the present application for execution. On the transfer of the decree by the Satara Court to the Islampur Court, the decree-holder made many abortive attempts to execute the decree and as the Islampur Court failed to certify to the Satara Court, as it ought to have, its failure to execute the decree, I submit its jurisdiction is gone and any order by the Islampur Court is without jurisdiction.

Secondly, I submit the present Darkhast of 1915 though within three years from the previous Darkhast of 1912 is time-barred on the ground that the Darkhast of 1912 was illegal and could not, therefore, save limitation. The judgment-debtor died in 1912; his legal representatives were brought on the record by the Islampur Court after the decree for execution had been transferred to it by the Satara Court. I submit the Islampur Court had no jurisdiction to bring the heirs on record. In support of my contention I rely upon Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (1). No doubt the issue as to whether an application for bringing the heirs on record was not made to the Satara Court before the execution was transferred was not raised. The issue may be sent down and it will be found that it was the Islampur Court that brought the heirs on record.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This is an attempt by the judgment-debtors to evade execution of the decree passed by the Satara Court in Suit No. 162 of 1901, which was transferred by the Satara Court to the Islampur Court for execution. It is contended that the jurisdiction of the Islampur Court under the certificate which had been issued by the Satara Court had exhausted itself. Section 41, Civil Procedure Code, is relied upon. It was urged that, because the certificate was not sent by the Islampur Court, as ought to have been done, therefore, its jurisdiction is gone. But the jurisdiction of the Islampur Court would continue until it had sent a certificate under section 41, Civil Procedure Code. In Abda Begam v. Muzaffar Husen Khan (2), which was a case under the corresponding section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, it was held that the Court to which a decree was sent for execution retained its jurisdiction to execute the decree until the execution had been withdrawn from it, or until it had fully executed the decree and had certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or had executed it so far as that Court had been able to execute it within its jurisdiction and had certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree or until it had failed to execute the decree and certified that fact to the Court which forwarded the decree. It does not follow that, because one application for execution fails in a Court to which the decree has been sent, that that Court is bound to send a certificate to the Court in which the decree was passed. The judgment-creditor might still be anxious to execute his decree in the former Court and if that interpretation which is now sought to be placed on section 41 is correct, it would result in the decree being transferred from one Court to another without any corresponding advantage to the judgment-creditor. It is only when the Court to which the decree is sent has executed it, or has failed to execute it that that Court is bound to send a certificate under section 41. It seems it was intended that there should be complete failure such as would result in no benefit to the judgment-creditor for one reason or another, and not merely a partial failure.

It is also urged that the Darkhast of 1912 was illegal, and, therefore, would not save time. Gopal, one of the judgment-debtors, having died in 1912, the Darkhast proceeded against his sons as his legal representatives. The Islampur Court, it is urged, would have no power to put the representatives of Gopal on the record, and we are asked to assume that such an application was made to the Islampur Court, which was not competent, instead of the Satara Court, which was the proper Court. But it was for the appellants to prove the fact they contended for. An issue on that point was never raised in the Trial Court. It was never suggested that all the proper steps were not taken to place the legal representatives of Gopal on the record, and, whatever the actual facts may be, the appellants cannot ask us to assume that proper steps were not taken to put Gopal's representatives on the record. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 70—Admission of execution of document, effect of.

The admission of the execution of a document is sufficient proof as against the executant himself but does not make it binding upon other persons who were not parties to it.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 3rd March 1922, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Puri, dated the 3rd February 1921.

Mr. B. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. R. Chaudhuri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant No. 1 on a mortgage-bond alleging that it had been executed by defendant No. 1. The remaining nine defendants are alleged to be transferees from the plaintiffs.

The Munsif found that the witnesses who were alleged to have attested the deed had not really attested it according to law but had signed their names on the document before the executant had signed it. He accordingly dismissed the whole suit.

There was an appeal to the District Judge who was of opinion that, inasmuch as the executant had in his written statement admitted the execution of the document, no further proof of attestation was necessary, and he has remanded the suit to the Munsif for the trial of the remaining issues in the suit. The present appeal has been preferred against that order of remand by defendant No. 2 only.

Now, it is clear that, under section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, the admission of the execution of the document is sufficient proof as against the executant himself, but there is no authority for the proposition that the document is for that reason binding upon the other defendants who were not parties to it. The document must be proved according to law as against them unless section 58 of the Indian Evidence Act applies to the case and relieves the plaintiffs from the burden of proving attestation in respect of any of the defendants who have admitted the fact of attestation. The learned District Judge must find on the evidence whether the Munsif's finding on the question of attestation is correct, and in considering this question he will, no doubt, refer to the written statement of the defendant No. 2 which is alleged by the respondents before us to contain an admission that there was attestation.

The result is that the appeal will be decreed and the case remanded to the District Judge in order that he may dispose of it according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV—Decree for sale in favour of puisne mortgagee—Prior mortgagee not party to suit—Prior mortgagee, rights of.

When a prior mortgagee, who has obtained a decree under O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code, is sued by a puisne mortgagee, whom he did not join in his suit, he, the prior mortgagee, is entitled to use his prior mortgage as a shield and to have the discharge of his decree made a condition precedent to the grant of a sale decree in favour of the puisne mortgagee. [p. 52, cols. 1 & 2.]

Special second appeal against the decree of the Divisional Court, Bassein, in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1920.

Mr. Ormiston, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bannerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs, the N. N. V. Chetty Firm, the assignees of a mortgage in favour of the K. P. A. Firm, sued the mortgagors first and second defendants and the K. A. P. L. Firm third defendant, who were in possession of the land, having purchased it by auction in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by them against first and second defendants. In the previous suit plaintiff was not made a party although third defendant was aware of his mortgage.

Third defendant pleaded not only the mortgage on which he had obtained a decree and became the purchaser, but also a prior mortgage as a shield. The Court of first instance found that the second mortgage which had been admitted in the previous suit by the mortgagors was not proved, and further that the first mortgage in favour of the third defendant was not proved.

Accordingly, a decree for sale was granted.

On appeal the Divisional Court found that the second mortgage, in execution of the decree in which the K. A. P. L. Firm became purchaser, was not proved. This mortgage, therefore, cannot affect the plaintiff except in so far as explaining how third defendant came to be in possession of the suit land. The Divisional Court found, however, that the evidence as to the first mortgage was adequate and on persual of the evidence there can be no doubt that the decision was correct.

The relief which the Divisional Court intended to grant is not quite clear and the form of the decree is defective, but it would seem that from the form of the decree referred to in the judgment, the intention was to pay off the decree of the first mortgagee before plaintiff received anything.

The main point in this appeal is whether the third defendant is entitled to use his prior mortgage as a shield and prevent plaintiff from realising anything by sale of the mortgaged property till the prior mortgage is satisfied.

For the plaintiff, the holder of the puisne mortgage, it is contended that he is entitled to bring the property to sale, and that he has impleaded the third defendant in his capacity as auction-purchaser in possession and not as mortgagee, he is entitled to sell the property subject to any interest which the third defendant may have under his prior mortgage. It is further contended that the order for sale subject to the prior mortgage should only be made in subsequent execution proceedings.

In Ram Naraln Sahoo v. Bandi Pershad (1) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a first mortgagee in possession under a prior sale may always shield himself under his mortgage and purchase, though his right to possession may be defective.

The puisne mortgagee's right, when he was not a party to the first mortgagee's suit, is limited to a right of redemption or sale of the mortgage premises, subject to the lien of the first mortgagee or auction-purchaser on a decree by the latter. He cannot compel the first mortgagee to part with possession without redeeming the first mortgage.

The facts here are not quite similar, as the mortgage under which defendant purchased has not been established, but, he is in possession under a decree on sale and holds a prior mortgage. The inference would seem to be from this ruling that, as argued by the Advocate for the respondent, plaintiff is not entitled to bring the property to sale until he has redeemed third defendant's first mortgage.

In the recent case of Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where a puisne mortgage (as in this case) has not been made a party to suit in which a prior mortgagee has obtained a decree, the puisne mortgagee is entitled to occupy the position which he would have done as a party.

When the prior mortgagee, having obtained a decree under O. XXXIV, is sued by a puisne mortgagee, whom he has not joined in a former suit, he is entitled, in all cases in which he would have been entitled before the coming into force of the Act of 1882, to use the prior mortgage as a shield and to have the discharge of his decree made a condition to a sale decree in favour of the puisne mortgagee.

In the present appeal the mortgage on which defendant obtained his decree is not proved, but he is in possession under the decree and alleges a prior mortgage, which has been established in evidence. The position is, therefore, similar and we are of the opinion that the principle involved is the same. We consider that the discharge of the defendant's prior mortgage should be made a condition precedent to the grant of a sale decree in favour of the plaintiff-appellant.

We do not think that the fact that it is now alleged that the third defendant was impleaded merely in his capacity as auction-purchaser makes any material difference to the merits of the case. It was alleged in the plaint that defendant purchased at the sale in execution of his mortgage-decree. The first mortgage was explicitly pleaded in the written statement and under the circumstances defendant was entitled to use it as a shield, since there is strong authority for holding that, having sold the property under one mortgage, he could not bring it to sale again under another. If, as is also argued, the first mortgage must be regarded as having merged in the second, then defendant's title to use it as a shield would be considerably strengthened.

The appeal, therefore, fails substantially, but the decree of the lower Appellate Court is incorrect in form and must be varied. The respondent will be given his costs in this Court. The order of the lower Appellate Court as to costs will stand.

Our order is that, on the appellants paying Rs. 796-12-0 due on the first mortgage to respondents within two months from date of decree, the appellants may apply for sale of the mortgaged property in satisfaction of the sums of Rs. 3,000 principal and Rs. 1,124 interest due up to 30th September 1920. In each case further interest at the contract rate will be permitted. Otherwise the decree will be in the Form 8, Appendix D.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Chaukidari chakran lands—Suit by putnidar—Adverse possession—Limitation, commencement of.

A putnidar is entitled to the chaukidari chakran lands within the putni and the recovery of possession of such lands by the putnidar is not barred unless for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, the possession of the Zemindar had been adverse to the plaintiff, and, having regard to the language of Art. 144 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, the Court must in each case ascertain on the facts on record when the possession of the Zemindar became adverse to the plaintiff. [p. 154, cols. 1 & 2.]

The possession of the Zemindar may become adverse to the putnidar in a variety of ways, e.g., when the lands are settled by the Zemindar with tenants or when the putnidar after being invited to come and take the lands does nothing and the Zemindar thereafter makes other arrangements either for holding the lands in khas possession or for settling the same with ijaradars or the like. [p. 154, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decree of the District Judge, Hoogly, dated the 24th January 1920, affirming the decree of the Officiating Sub-Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 20th September 1918.

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray, Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal and Babu Benode Lal Mookerjee, for the Applleant.

Babu D. N. Chukerbutty, Dr. D. N. Mittra, and Babu Sarat Kumar Mitter, for the Respondents.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Deputy Registrar in No. 1138.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals arise out of three suits for recovery of possession of certain chaukidari chakran lands after establishment of the plaintiff's title thereto. It is alleged that the putni mehal known as Lot Udaynarainpore was originally held by one Ram Narayan Mookerjee under the Zemindar, the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan, and that the plaintiff Srmati Nagendra Bala Choudhurani purchased on the 8th April 1905 the patni tenure in respect of the said Lot Udaynarainpore comprising 13 Mouzahs at a sale held by a Receiver appointed by this Court on its Original Side in a suit for partition of certain plaint properties among the representatives of the said Ram Narayan Mookerjee, and that thereafter the plaintiff tried to obtain possession of certain chaukidari chakran lands comprised in the said Mouzahs which had been resumed by the Government under Bengal Act VI of 1870 and which had been settled during the years 1896 to 1899 with the Zemindar, the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan. The main defence of the Zemindar was that the suits were barred by limitation. As regards the defendant Provash Chundra Chatterjee, who was made party in one of the said three suits and who, it appeared, had taken settlement of some of the said lands from the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan, it was alleged on the latter's behalf that he was merely the benamidar of the plaintiff Nagendra Bala Choudhurani. The three suits referred to above were Suits Nos. 29, 30 and 54 of 1916. Suit No. 29, in which Provash Chundra Chatterjee was a defendant, related to the lands of six Mouzahs comprised in the said putni and the two other suits related to the lands of three other Mouzahs. The learned Sub-Judge decided the question of limitation in favour of the plaintiff and the question of benami in favour of the defendant Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan. Accordingly, on those findings, the Subordinate Judge gave a decree to the plaintiff in all the three suits declaring her title to the said chaukidari chakran lands and directing that she should get khas possession of the same except the lands settled with Provash Chundra Chatterjee who was found to be the benamidar of the plaintiff.

As regards the question of limitation, the learned District Judge, agreeing with the learned Subordinate Judge, held that Art. 144 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act was the Article applicable in the circumstances of these cases, but while the Subordinate Judge held that the defendant Zemindar had not succeeded in establishing that he had held the lands adversely to the plaintiff for more than 12 years before the institution of these suits on the ground that the Zemindar had not, within a period of over 12 years prior to suit, taken direct posession of the lands after the resumption thereof under the Choukidari Act and the settlement of the same with him by the Collector, the learned District Judge was of opinion that time ran against the putnidar from the date of the settlement of the lands by Government with the Zemindar.

On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant it has been argued before us that. having regard to the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases of Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1) and Ranjit Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2), there can arise no question now as to the right of the plaintiff to the lands in question, nor can the recovery of possession of these lands by her be barred unless for more than 12 years prior to the dates of the institution of these suits, the possession of the Zemindar had become adverse to the plaintiff. This argument is, no doubt, correct; the real question is to ascertain when the possession of the Zemindar in a case like this became adverse to the plaintiff. Does the possession of the Zemindar become adverse to the putnidar at the moment the lands are settled with the Zemindar by the Government without more or does the possession of the Zemindar become adverse only at the moment when some act is done by him indicative of a hostile attitude on his part towards the putnidar?

No doubt it has been held in the case of Rang pal Mandal v. Kumar Kamala Ranjan Roy (3) that in cases of this description, time runs against the putnidar from the date of the settlement of the lands with the Zemindar by the Government. That decision may be reconcilable with the facts of that case and with the pleadings therein; we think, however, having regard to the language of Art. 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, that, in each case the Court must ascertain on the facts on record when the possession of the defendant, who is usually the Zemindar, became adverse to the plaintiff. The possession of the Zemindar may become adverse to the putnidar in a variety of ways, e.g. when the lands are settled by the Zemindar with tenants or when the putnidar after being invited to come and take the lands does nothing and the Zemindar thereafter makes other arrangements either for holding the lands in khas or for settling the same with ijaradars or the like. In each case, the facts, in our opinion, have got to be investigated having regard to the language of Art. 144 of the Limitation Act. In the cases before us, there is no finding by the lower Appellate Court as to when on the facts in these cases the possession of the Zemindar became adverse to the plaintiff and we are, therefore, of opinion that the matter should go back to the lower Appellate Court for clear and specific findings on that point in the cases out of which these Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1032, 1137 and 1138 have arisen in respect of all the lands other than the lands settled with Provash Chundra Chatterjee. Either party may adduce further evidence upon the question of possession and such evidence may be taken by the lower Appellate Court itself or under its direction by the Court of first instance. Costs of the Appeals Nos. 1032, 1137 and 1138 will abide by the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the point indicated above.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Mortgage-deed containing forfeiture clause—Oral agreement suppressing forfeiture clause, whether admissible.

A deed of mortgage contained a forfeiture clause to the effect that the mortgagor would be debarred from redeeming the property after the expiration of two years from the date of the mortgage. Some considerable time after the forfeiture clause had taken effect, the mortgagor brought the present suit for redemption alleging a subsequent oral agreement whereby the mortgagee promised to allow redemption at any time:

Held, that the subsequent agreement not being in writing and registered, the plaintiff was precluded under proviso (4) to section 92 of the Evidence Act, from proving the oral agreement.

Second appeal against a decree of the Divisional Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Appeal No. 147 of 1921.

Mr. Ko Ko Gyi, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge of the Divisional Court saw the real points in the case which appear to be simple.

In the Trial Court the points were in a state of confusion. The facts are shortly these:—The plaintiff mortgaged a piece of paddy land to the defendants for Rs. 200. About a year afterwards the plaintiff says, he, by a pyatpaing, made over the land to the defendants who promised to allow redemption at any time.

In the mortgage there is a forfeiture clause to the effect that the mortgagor was to be debarred from redeeming the property after the expiration of two years from the date of the mortgage.

The plaintiff asked for redemption in March 1921. I understand that by this he held the defendants to their promise made about a year subsequent to the mortgage as stated above. By that time, if there was nothing else between the partis, the forfeiture clause in the mortgage would have taken effect and the property would have become, by reason of such forfeiture, the absolute property of the mortgagees, that is, the defendants. But plaintiff says that that is immaterial because he has this subsequent promise which is a new contract in substitution of the registered mortgage.

This new contract is a verbal one.

Mr. Ko Ko Gyi has read to me two sections of the Indian Contract Act bearing upon the subject of novation of contracts but it appears to me that a knowledge of these two sections gives no light to a proper decision of this case.

The parties having entered into a contract, can substitute another in its place, and the substituted contract is the one to be looked to, not the one which was first entered into.

But the question is: How is the subsequent agreement, which is claimed to be the substitute for the first, to be made? If the law requires that it should be made in a certain way, it must be made in that way otherwise it will not take effect as a contract; therefore, it will never be a substitute for the old contract.

This subsequent oral agreement set up by the plaintiff is to rescind the mortgage. It requires to be in writing and registered; in other words, section 92, proviso (4) of the Indian Evidence Act precludes the plaintiff from proving this oral agreement. If he cannot prove it, then his allegation goes to the ground.

What remains is the mortgage which has a forfeiture clause to take effect within two years of it, but the suit was filed in 1921, a long time after the forfeiture clause had taken effect. Therefore, the property at the time of the suit belonged to the mortgagees under the terms of the mortgage, and the plaintiff had no right of redemption. Therefore, his suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court.

to judgment-debtor for settlement of sale proclamation —Terms of proclamation settled ex parte —Question of liability of property to attachment, whether res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

A party who is sought to be affected by the bar of res judicata should have had notice of the point that was to be decided and should have had an opportunity of putting forward his contentions against the decision. [p. 161, col. 1.]

Subramania Iyer v. Rajeswara Sethupathi, 38 Ind. Cas. 627: 40 M. 1016, followed.

A decree-holder applied for attachment of the moveable property of his judgment-debtor but the proceedings came to nothing. Within a year of these proceedings an application was made for attachment of the immoveable property. No notice was given to the judgment-debtor as none was required by law under the circumstances. An application was then made for the sale of the property and notice was given to the judgment-debtor for settlement of the terms of the sale proclamation. The latter did not attend on the date fixed and the terms of the sale proclamation were settled ex parte. Afterwards, the judgment-debtor applied for release of the property alleging that it was not liable to be attached. The decree-holder contended that the question of the liability of the property to attachment was res judicata as it must be taken to have been decided on the hearing of the application for settling the terms of the sale proclamation:

Held, that notice to the judgment-debtor to be present at the settlement of the terms of the sale proclamation could not be regarded as raising the question of the liability of the property to be attached and, therefore, it could not be said that the judgment-debtor was invited to object to the attachment, and, that being so, the order that followed could not be regarded as an implied adjudication that the property was correctly attached. [p. 161, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Dindigul, in Appeal Suit No. 8 of 1921, preferred against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Palni, dated the 7th December 1920, and made in Execution Application No. 171 of 1920, in Execution Petition No. 9 of 1920 in Original Suit No. 840 of 1918.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 26th of January and the 2nd day of February 1923, respectively, upon perusing the grounds of appeal the order of the lower Court and the record in the case, upon hearing the arguments of Mr. S. Ganapathi Ayyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. V. Sundara Aiyar, for the Respondent, and having stood over for consideration till the 12th of February 923, the Court (Oldfield and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Plaintiff, the present appellant, obtained a decree against Kathaperumal Goundan, who afterwards died and was subsequently represented by Kandasami, his brother. Kandasami claimed the property attached by plaintiff as his own and not that of Kathaperumal in his hands and his claim was rejected by the District Munsif. He, however, appealed successfully and this second appeal is against the order allowing his claim. It is opposed by his legal representative, to be referred to as respondent.

One ground, on which she opposes the appeal, that she is not and Kandasami was not a party to the proceedings and that, therefore, no second appeal lies, can be dealt with shortly. Kandasami's own appeal to the lower Appellate Court involved the admission that he was or represented a party and the applicability of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and his representative cannot allege the contrary.

The substantial question for decision then is whether Kandasami's claim is concluded by his failure to advance it in the proceedings taken by plaintiff to bring the property now claimed to sale. That he advanced it only in his claim petition, Execution Application No. 171 of 1920, on 12th August 1920, and not in the proceedings which resulted in the District Munsif's order of 8th June 1920, is not disputed. It is urged only that (1) the order of 8th June 1920 can in no circumstances be regarded as an adjudication actual or constructive against his right to the property, and (2) even if that order is such an adjudication, it was not passed after any valid notice to him and he can now show that it was not, in spite of his failure to take proceedings in respect of it under O. IX, r. 13.

On the question whether the order of 8th June 1920 was in effect an adjudication against Kandasami's claim and in favour of the liability of the property to sale in his hands we have not before us the petition which initiated the proceedings. But there is no reason for doubting what has throughout been assumed and not disputed that it was for attachment and sale of the property; and the text of the order of 8th June 1920, "Proclaim and sell on 14th August 1920. Upset price Rs. 1,000," shows what would ordinarily be the case, that the proceedings were to obtain an order for sale and to fix the terms of the sale-proclamation and the date on which the sale would be held; and, so far as plaintiff asked for an order for sale, the contention that the property was not liable under the decree on which Kandasami based his subsequent claim, would have been open to him and would, if established, have resulted in the dismissal of the petition. His failure to adopt this ground of defence would accordingly, if section 11, Explanation IV is applicable, debar him from adopting it later. Against this it is first urged, generally, that neither section 11, Explanation IV, nor the principle of constructive res judicata applies to execution proceedings. But, whether the explanation or any broader principle is applicable, this is unsustainable, at least, when, as was here the case, those proceedings are between parties to the suit or their representatives and result in an adjudication on a question in issue between them. This has been established since Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) and maintained in the very recent decision in Rajeswara Sethupati Avergal (Rajah of Ramnad) v. Velusami Tevar (2), the latter case dealing directly with the consequence of failure such as plaintiff before us relies on, to adopt ground of defence. It is then necessary only to make sure that the ground in question was open to Kandasami; and respondent in fact urges that it was not, because he was a party to the proceedings, not in their wider scope above referred to, when the plaintiff's right to sell the property was in issue, but only for the settlement of the sale proclamation, and decisions at that stage are administrative and not judicial This also, however, is unsustainable. It is true that, as this Court held in Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (3), proceedings for the settlement of a sale proclamation under section 287 of the former Code, corresponding with the present O. XXI, r. 66, are of that character, and, therefore, not appealable. But the reference there to such proceedings as excluded from the purview of the then section 244, now section 47, shows that they were not regarded as concluding the enquiry, if any is necessary, into the decree-holder's right to bring the property to sale. Such enquiry can be, and is held if an issue entailing it is raised, in the disposal of the application for sale, the settlement of proclamation bring a distinct stage therein, which in case of the making of a valid objection would never be reached; and the fact that orders passed in the course of that settlement are not appealable or binding in other proceedings cannot affect the character of those passed in the decision of the substantive question whether the sale shall be held at all. No doubt, and this is the tenor of the decision in Subramania Iyer v. Rajeswara Sethupathi (4), caution is necessary before orders of the latter class are treated as conclusive and the Court must be satisfied that the matter, in respect of which they are relied on, was in issue and that the party to be affected had clear notice that it would be so. But, although the notice alleged to have been given to Kandasami in the persent case is not before us, it is not alleged and there is no reason for supposing that it was not in general terms and, even if it referred specifically only to the settlement of the proclamation, it would still have been notice that a sale had been asked for, to which, until the passing of the order "Proclaim and sell" of 8th June 1920, he could and should have made his objection.

There remains the contention that all this is immaterial, because that notice in fact was not served. The service relied on was by affixture: and the lower Appellate Court has now found, differing from the Court of First Instance, that, as a matter of fact, it was insufficient. If it is open to us to act on that finding, one which we should ordinarily accept, the order of 8th June 1920 and Kandasami's failure to advance his claim before it will not stand in the way of his advancing it now. But we have to deal with plaintiff's contention that we cannot act on such a finding or disregard that order, because it has not been set aside in the only way authorized by law, proceedings under O. IX, r. 13. This contention is substantial and cannot be met by treating, as we are asked to do, the subsequent claim petition as an application under that provision. For it does not contain the appropriate prayer or averments or anything to show how it was presented within the prescribed period of limitation, the contrary being prima facie the case.

The question is, then, whether O. IX, r. 13, applies to and affords the only remedy open to a party against who an order has been made in his absence in execution proceedings. In accordance with Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) this should be answered in the affirmative; and in fact such answer would exclude the anomaly involved in allowing the validity of an order passed ex parte to be disputed, perhaps after long delay, whenever it is necessary to dispute it in subsequent proceedings, after the period allowed by Art. 164, Schedule I, Limitation Act has elapsed. On the other hand, it is said that O. IX, r. 13, does not in terms apply to proceedings other than suits and that there is authority irreconcilable with Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5).

The first of these contentions was rejected in the case last mentioned on the ground that, although O. IX refers only to decrees not orders, such orders as that then and now in question are decrees with reference to the definition in section 2 of the Code; and it is now pointed out with some force that, although this may justify the application of Art. 164 above referred to, it is no answer to the consideration that the whole order including rule 13 is applicable in terms only to suits and, therefore, it is to be inferred, to the description of decrees passed in them. And, next, reference has been made to the argument from the history of those provisions based by Jenkins, C. J., in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (6) on the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-Ullah (7) in which what (with great respect) is the real and better justification for the conclusion in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) the present section 141, corresponding with the former section 647, is referred to. With all due deference, that argument is not convincing, because, first, it is based on a conjecture as to the intention of the Legislature, which is inconsistent with the plain and unrestricted terms of section 141, is unnecessary in order to explain them and would nullify the action of the Legislature in deliberately omitting, when the Code was re-enacted in 1908, the explanation inserted in 1892. Next, the case before the learned Chief Justice was an ordinary claim by a third party, to which section 47 was inapplicable, the further remedy being by a suit, in which the previous order would not be conclusive. Last, Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-Ullah (7) the foundation of the judgment, to adopt the only view reconcilable with Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) and Rajeswara Sethupati Avergal (Rajah of Ramnad) v. Velusami Tevar (2), decided only that the dismissal of an execution application not prosecuted by the decree-holder did not debar him from applying again, not that an order passed after notice to the judgment-debtor was not binding on him and did not require to be set aside before the adjudication on any substantive question involved in it could be disregarded.

This failing, reliance is placed on the course of authority against the application of O. IX, r. 13 and the correctness of the decision of this Court already referred to. But, although it is true that Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) was dissented from on this point in Bhubaneswar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (8) and is irreconcilable with other cases cited therein and with Ritu Kuer v.

Alakhdeo Narain Singha (9), that would not be material, if the conclusions reached after full consideration in our own Court were clear. It is true that the only one of those other cases which was decided in Madras Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (10), would seem either irreconcilable with Rajeswara Sethupati Avergal (Rajah of Ramnad) v. Velusami Tevar (2) above referred to are distinguishable on the ground that no previous adjudication in the particular matter in issue was in question. But the difficulty arises from the dictum in it that section 141 is intended to apply to proceedings in Civil Courts, such as Probate, etc., and not to execution, anticipating the reasoning of Jenkins, C. J., above referred to in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (6) and negativing the foundation on which it has been suggested that the conclusion in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) might more properly have been based. Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (10), although reported after, was decided before, but is not referred to in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5) and it is doubtful whether the two decisions can be reconciled.

The question whether they can be and, if not, which is correct, is one for a Full Bench, and there is nothing to add except that the matter has since been considered in Madras, so far as we have been shown, in two cases only, to both of which Sadasiva Ayyar, J., was a party, his decision in Periakaruppan Chetty v. Chidambara Tambiran (11) and Kali Shettathi v. Shama Rau (12) being the one consistent and the other inconsistent with his previous conlusion in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5). In the second of these two cases, however, there was no reference to that or any recent authority.

The matter standing thus, we refer for the decision of a Full Bench the question:—

Whether O. IX is applicable to proceedings in execution between parties to the decree or their representatives?

This appeal coming on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench, dated the 12th February 1923, upon perusing the petition and the order of the lower Court and the record in the case and the said Order of Reference to a Full Bench and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. S. Ganptai Ayyar, for the Appellant, and of Messrs. T. S. Rama Ayyar and V. Sundaram Ayyar, for the Respondents, the Court expressed the following

Schwabe, C. J.—The present appellant is the decree-holder. The respondent is the legal personal representative of a brother of the decree-holder who had been brought upon the record for the purpose of execution. An application has been made for attachment of the moveable property of the original defendant, the judgment-debtor. Those proceedings had come to nothing by reason of the fact that the present appellant failed to find the necessary expenses. Within a year of those proceedings, application was made for attachment of the immoveable property. By reason of the operation of O. XXI, r. 22, no notice of those proceedings was required to be given to the representative of the judgment-debtor and no notice was given. An application was then made for the sale of the property and in due course a notice for settling the sale-proclamaton, in Form No. 21 of Appendix E of the Code of Civil Procedure, was issued. That notice stated that the decree-holder had applied for a sale of the property and continued, "you are hereby informed that the 14th day of August 1920, has been fixed for the purpose of settling the terms of the proclamation of sale." That notice was served by affixing it to some place alleged to be the residence of the respondent. The respondent, who alleged that he never received the notice, did not attend on the date fixed for settling the terms of the proclamation. He was declared ex parte and the terms of the proclamation were settled in his absence. He then applied to the District Munsif for the release of the property on the ground that it was not liable to be attached. The District Munsif dismissed that application, and on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the Subordinate Judge remanded it to the District Munsif to enquire into the facts as to whether or not the property was the property of the judgment-debtor, holding that the notice of the proceedings in which he has been declared ex parte was not properly served upon him. That raises an interesting point as to whether or not it was open on these proceedings to the District Munsif or the Subordinate Judge to discuss the question whether or not notice had been properly served or whether it was necessary for the respondent to take some different form of proceedings to challenge that notice, but, in the view we take of another point in this case, it is unnecessary for us to express any opinion on that point.

The appellant contended that the question of the ownership of this property was res judicata and that it had been decided or must be taken to have been decided on the hearing of the application for settling the terms of the proclamation of sale. Under section 11 of the Civil Procedur Code "no Court is to try any issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit." Several cases have decided that matter must be taken to have been substantially in issue in a former suit or proceeding if the point was open and could have been raised in the former proceedings. In this case the respondent had no notice at all that the matter of the ownership of the property would or could come up for decision on the hearing of the application for settlement of the terms of the proclamation of sale. He did not even get a draft of the proposed terms. All that he was told was that a certain date had been fixed for settling those terms and it would be a very remarkable thing if, on receipt of such notice, it were to follow that, if he did not attend on that occasion, he must be taken to have attended and raised the question whether or not the property was the property of the judgment-debtor. Our attention has been called to no authority in support of that contention and it seems to me to be quite wrong, because that was not the time for discsusing the question of the ownership of that property, although it is possible that the Court would on an application then made have listened to some argument on the point nor did the terms of the notice that he got suggest that it was. Our attention has been called to the case of Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (5). But I think, on this point, the whole of that decision turns on these words: "Now the order of August 1909 was no doubt an ex parte order but it was passed after notice was issued to the 2nd defendant to show cause why such an order should not be passed and after the Court had satisfied itself on the affidavit and the return of the process-server that the notice had been duly served." If in this case the respondent had been asked to show cause why the property should not be sold the reasoning of that decision would apply, but in this case by the formal notice that he got he was not asked to show cause as to anything and he had no intimation at all that the matter would be open to him to raise or that it would be discussed. Under those circumstances, I cannot see that it is possible to hold that his non-appearance on that occasion amounts to a decision against him that the property was the property of the judgment-debtor

Our attention has also been called to the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (3) that what takes place on the hearing of the application to settle the terms of the proclamation of sale is more of an administrative character than judicial and that, therefore, no appeal lies against the decision of a Court on that occasion as to what that proclamation is to contain. That being the decision of the Full Bench, unless it is possible to say that part of what takes place on that occasion is judicial and part administrative, it would be a strong ground for contending that the matter cannot be res judicata by reason of the non-attendance at a sitting of the Court, such sitting being held administrative and not judicial.

I desire to say that our decision in this case must be taken to be confined to the particular facts of this case, that is to say, that where you have nothing more than the non-attendance at the hearing of an application to settle the terms of a sale-proclamation, the respondent cannot be taken to be estopped by the principle of res judicata thereafter in respect of the liability of the property to execution by reason of that non-attendance.

On these grounds I think the Subordinate Judge was right in remanding this case to the District Munsif. The result will be that this case must go back to the Referring Bench with that direction.

Oldfield, J.—I agree. As one of the Referring Judges, I add that, speaking for myself, I am now clear that in stating the effect of the obligation imposed by the notice to Kandasami, we had not sufficient regard to the fact that it was given in proceedings which originated without notice to him of the attachment.

Ramesam, J.—I agree: but I wish to add a few words. The leading decision on the application of the principle of res judicata to execution proceedings is the decision of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dichit v Grija Kant Lahiri (13). It was held in that case that if, after notice, a decision was passed on an execution petition, it would not be open to parties to object to that decision when a subsequent application is presented. In applying that case a Bench of this Court in Subramania Iyer v Rajeswara Sethupathi (4) say: "One principle seems to be clear, and that is, that the party who is sought to be affected by the bar of res judicata should have notice of the point which is likely to be decided against him and should have an opportunity of putting forward his contentions against such a decision. In the present case notice went to the respondents to show cause why they should not be brought on the record as the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor for the purpose of execution. They had no notice that any particular property was going to be attached...We must, therefore, overrule this plea" I entirely agree with the principle underlying these remarks. Another example of the application of this principle is the decision in Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra Bhunjgaya (14). Notice to the judgment-debtor to be present at the settlement of the terms of the proclamation cannot be regarded as raising the question of the liability of the property to be attached and, therefore, it cannot be said that the judgment-debtor was invited to object to that attachment. That being so, the order that followed cannot be regarded as an implied adjudication that the property was correctly attached. I agree with the order proposed.

IBRAHIM alias KAKA valad MAINUDDIN PATANKAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Khoti khasgi lands—Partition, absence of—Division among different branches, effect of.

Where there has been no general partition of khoti khasgi lands, members of different branches would hold their shares for reasons of convenience and not for the purpose of partition in the strict sense of the term, and no member of a branch would acquire title by adverse possession in any of the lands. [p. 162; col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 247 of 1920.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. G. B. Chitale), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was filed by the plaintiffs to recover possession of a certain thikan which was khoti khasgi land in the khotki belonging to the defendants' family. The evidence showed that Jainu owned 16 pies share in the Khoti. He had four sons. The first defendant through whom the plaintiffs claim had a 5⅓ pies share which was represented by certain lands separately owned for many years by Bapu and his father Balu, while the other members of Jainu's branch also held the other khasgi lands belonging to Jainu's share in separate possession. The plaintiffs purchased from the first defendant what rights of possession he had and do not claim possession as absolute owners. True, in the Trial Court it was held that the branch of the first defendant had acquired title by adverse possession to the suit thikan, and there are passages in the judgment of the District Judge which seem to point to his having come to the same conclusion. There are also other passages inconsistent with the finding, as, for instance, where he said that defendant, No. 1's title to hold the suit thikan was adverse as there was no general partition. If it is still possible for the members of Jainu's branch to file a suit for partition so as to readjust the division of the Khasgi land which had been made many years ago amongst the branches, then it would follow that no member of the branch would acquire title by adverse possession in any of the lands as he would hold his share for reasons of convenience and not for the purpose of partition in the strict sense of the word. We see no reason why the first defendant should not pass on a possessory right to the plaintiffs or why the 5th defendant should object to such possession. The 15th defendant has no objection, and the other defendants except No. 5 have not appealed. We make it clear that defendant No. 1 had a possessory right in the suit thikan although the right to partition still remained with the members of the Jainu's branch, so that the partition of the khasgi lands was not final. The plaintiffs have succeeded to the rights of the first defendant in the suit thikan, and, presumably, if they do not do anything more then they would acquire no further rights. But if they assert absolute ownership openly in the suit thikan then the other members of Jainu's branch would have to take steps to prevent them acquiring absolute rigths by prescription. We think the plaintiffs were entitled to the decree which was given them, and we make the real position clear. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

GHANI AHMAD alias ZAMIN ALI AND OTHERS—DECREE HOLDERS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 92, 93—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4, O. XXXIV, rr. 7, 8—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Redemption decree passed under Transfer of Property Act—Death of defendant after decree, effect of—Application to deposit money, nature of—Limitation.

Order XXII, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, does not a ply to execution proceedings, it only applies where a defendant dies before the passing of the final decree of the Original or Appellate Court as the case may be. [p. 163, col. 2.]

Under sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act only one decree for redemption was passed, and the application to deposit the decretal amount under such a decree is made in execution proceedings, to which O. XXII, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code has no application. [p. 163, col. 2.]

RAM RUP v. GHANI AHMAD.

A judicially declared right of redemption is a valuable right, according to the ordinary meaning of the word. Once a mortgagor has obtained a decree for redemption his right is definite, ascertained and final, subject only to his depositing the decretal amount. [p. 164, col. 1.]

A decree for redemption obtained under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, is not affected by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to such decrees. [p. 163, col. 2.]

A decree for redemption was obtained in 1906 under sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act. An application to deposit the decretal amount was made in 1920. It was discovered that one of the defendants had died in the meanwhile and no application had been made within time to bring his legal representatives on the record:

Held, (1) that the redemption decrees still continued to be governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 163, col. 2.]

(2) that, therefore, the application to deposit the decretal amount was an application in execution; [p. 163, col. 2.]

(3) that O. XXII, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application to such a case, and, therefore, there had been no abatement; [p. 163, col. 2.]

(4) that the right to deposit the decretal amount was a continuing right which could be exercised at any time until an order absolute was passed, and the application was not governed by Art. 181 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 164, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 29th April 1922, confirming that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated the 23rd January 1922.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—These are two similar appeals in execution proceedings. Ghani Ahmad and Nisar Ahmad, predecessors of the decree-holders, obtained a redemption decree on 24th August 1906 against Mahesh Pershad and three other persons. The date fixed for payment of the mortgage-money was 24th February 1907. Mahesh Pershad died in May 1908. No applications was made by the mortgagors to have his legal representatives brought on the record. No application for an order absolute or final decree was ever made by the mortgagees. On 14th June 1920 the respondents put in an application against the three surviving mortgagees and the legal representatives of Mahesh Pershad to deposit the amount of the two decrees and for an order putting them in possession of the mortgaged property by redemption. To this application it was objected that the mortgagor's right to deposit the money and obtain redemption had abated by reason of their failure to implead the legal representatives of Mahesh Pershad within six months of his death. This plea has been overruled by both the Courts below. It is now raised again in second appeal to this Court.

The case has been mainly argued on the question whether the proceedings are governed by the present Code of Civil Procedure or by the law in force at the time of the redemption decree which was that embodied in sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act. Order XXII, r. 4, on which the appellants rely, does not apply to execution proceedings. It only applies where the defendant has died before the passing of the final decree of the original or Appellate Court as the case may be.

The present Code provides for a preliminary decree for redemption followed by a final decree when the decree-holders have deposited the amount due from them. It is only in execution of the final decree that they can get back actual possession of the property. Under the old law contained in sections 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act only one decree for redemption was passed. If the mortgagor paid the amount due from him he could under section 93 claim to be put in possession of the property in execution of his decree. If he failed to pay the money the mortgagees were entitled to apply for an order, not a decree, debarring him absolutely of all right to redeem. If, therefore, the old Code is applicable the proceedings under which the mortgagees have applied to be put in possession of the property are proceedings in execution and O. XXII does not apply to them. It was in fact by application in execution that they have proceeded.

By section 6 of the General Clauses Act the repeal of any Act is not to affect any right or liability acquired or incurred under the repealed enactment or any legal proceedings or remedy in respect of such right or liability. The contention of the appellants is that the manner in which a redemption decree shall be enforced is a mere matter of procedure and not a question of right, but a judicially declared right of redemption is certainly a right, and a valuable right, according to the ordinary meaning of the word. The position of a mortgagor who has obtained a decree is very different from that of a mortgagor who has still to bring a suit. In the latter case all sorts of defences may be pleaded. It may be found that his right is barred by limitation or by renunciation, or that the claimant is not in fact the legal representative of the original mortgagors, or that the integrity of the mortgage has been broken up. In fact, until a decree has been passed there is no certainty whether or under what conditions he may be entitled to recover the property, but once he has got a decree in his favour his right is definite, ascertained and final, subject only to his depositing the money. The lower Courts were, therefore, right in holding that this case is governed by section 6 of the General Clauses Act and that the respondents' right to deposit the money is not barred.

A subsidiary plea was raised that the application was barred by Art. 181 of the Limitation Act. This matter was dealt with by a Judge of this Court in Gokaran Singh v. Mangli (1) He referred to the decision in Vidyasagar v. Ratipal (2) and showed that there was considerable authority of this Court against the contention, and that the right to deposit the money under a decree nisi has been held to be a continuing right which might be exercised at any time until an order absolute was passed.

For these reasons I dismiss both appeals with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 240 OF 1920.
March 15, 1922.

MI SAN MA KHAING AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS
versus
SHWE BA—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 91, 120—Suit for declaring instrument inoperative—Limitation applicable—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 39, 42—Holder of money-decree—Suit to declare sale by judgment-debtor inoperative, whether competent.

Art. 91 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act can only be applied when the plaintiff has been himself, or through his predecessor-in-interest, a party to the instrument assailed. Where a third party sues for a declaration that an instrument is inoperative as against him, Art. 120 is applicable. [p. 165, col. 1.]

A person who holds a mere money-decree, and who has not put that decree into execution and attached the property of his judgment-debtor, has no locus standi to sue for a declaration that a sale by the judgment-debtor of his property is fraudulent and inoperative. [p. 165, col. 2.]

Mr. Keith, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent held what he considered to be a mortgage on the immoveable property in question. The deed was dated December 3rd 1912.

About two years after the date the principal mortgagor, appellant No. 1 sold the property by a registered conveyance to the husband (since deceased) for the second appellant.

Nearly four years later, or in January 1919, the respondent sued the mortgagors on his mortgage, but he only obtained a money-decree it being held that the mortgage was invalid and inoperative for want of legal attestation.

He then brought this suit on September 27th, 1919 in order to set aside the sale by the mortgagor to the second appellant's husband.

Two days later, or on September 29th 1919, he applied for attachment and sale of a one-half share in this property in execution of his money-decree, his case being that San Ma Khaing could not dispose of the one-fourth share of her orasa son and that one-fourth share was attached on or about October 6th 1919.

MI SAN MA KHAING v. SHWE BA.

The attachment so made was removed by the second appellant in January 1920.

In February 1920 respondent amended his plaint, so as to add a prayer for a declaration that the sale to Shwe Ban U was fraudulent and inoperative.

The present suit was not one under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, and never purported to be so.

It is admitted that the suit was filed more than three years after the sale but respondent claimed that he only became aware of the sale in February 1919 so that his suit could not be barred by time under Art, 91 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Moreover it is urged further that in view of the prayer for a declaration the suit is governed not by Art. 91 but by Art. 120.

Two main questions emerge from these facts (1), whether the suit was within time, and if so (2) whether the respondent had any cause of action; or, in other words, whether the suit was maintainable.

The respondent not being a party to the sale-deed, Art. 91 cannot apply. The suit was in effect a suit for a declaration and it is perfectly clear that the Art. 120 is applicable. It is now settled law that Art. 91 can only be applied when the plaintiff has been himself or through his predecessor-in-interest a party to the instrument assailed. As stated , this was not the case here. The suit cannot, therefore, be held to have been time-barred.

As regards the maintainability of the suit it seems clear that, inasmuch as respondent had no mortgage on the property and only obtained a mere money-decree, he had no lien on the premises in question and at the time of suit had no more than a mere right to attach this or other property. Further, in order to attach this property he must, of course, annul the conveyance in question. There was as yet no attachment and no removal of attachment on any portion of the property and obviously he was powerless until the sale was set aside.

The question, therefore, is whether he could sue to set it aside in the circumstances stated otherwise than by a proper suit to declare his right to attach the property.

In our opinion he could not do so. His proper relief would have been to attach the property and wait till that attachment had been removed and then to have sued to have his right to attach it declared within the statutory period of one year. Had he done this, it is possible that he might have succeeded. However, he elected to sue before making an attachment and to this day he has never prayed for a declaration of his right to attach. In this way, he failed to have any tangible cause of action whatever.

It has been suggested that, inasmuch as his case is that the sale was made in view to defraud him of his mortgage (of course this is not possible) he has, on that account, an independent cause of action. In our opinion there is no force in this suggestion since his mortgage never existed.

No authorities have been quoted to us which would support his claim to any cause of action at the time of his suit.

Mr. Keith for the respondent has, however, urged that sections 39 and 42 of the Specific Relief Act suffice to show that his client could maintain the suit. In our opinion those sections are, in the present circumstances, of no avail, and do not assist respondent at all. In any case, in view of the fact that he had a proper remedy, we consider that the declaration sought for should not have been made.

We are of opinion that the lower Courts went astray and decided the case wrongly on the law point involved in the question of the maintainability of the suit.

The appeal is allowed. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside, and the suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

versus

RANGANAYAKI AMMAL alias AMIRTHAMMAL—DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Husband and wife—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights by husband—Defence of cruelty—Legal cruelty, what is.

Where a Hindu falsely charged his wife with having attempted to poison him, and treated her generally with loathing and disgust, threatened her with personal violence, and on one occasion pushed her out of the house by the neck, in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the husband:

Held, that under the Hindu Law the circumstances were sufficient to constitute "legal cruelty" so as to establish a good defence to the plaintiff's suit and disentitle him to a decree.

Cruelty in the legal sense need not necessarily be physical. Constructive cruelty may also be a ground of relief. [p. 171, col. 2.]

A course of conduct pursued by the husband which is calculated to break the spirit of the wife or by which force, physical or moral, is systematically exerted towards the wife to such a degree and during such a length of time as to injure or undermine her health is a sufficient justification for refusing to the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights notwithstanding that there is no actual physical violence. [p. 171, col. 2.]

Russell v. Russell, (1897) A. C. 395; 66 L. J. P. 122; 75 L. T. 249; 61 J. P. 756, Evans v. Evans, (1790) 161 E. R. 466; 1 Hag. Con. 35, Bethune v. Bethune, (1891) P. 205; 60 L. J. N. 195, Thompson v. Thompson, 15 Ind. Cas. 886; 39 C. 395, Armour v. Armour, 1 A. L. J. 318, considered.

Before passing a decree in favour of the husband for restitution of conjugal rights the Court should be satisfied that by giving its aid to him it does not thereby endanger the life, limb, liberty or the health of the wife. If there is danger to any of these the Court will be amply justified in refusing the husband any decree. [p. 170, col. 1.]

The Courts in India are Courts of Justice, equity and good conscience. In cases where no specific rules exist, they look to the English decisions for guidance. The Common Law of England furnishes precedents which are in conformity with equity, justice and good conscience. But the Ecclesiastical Law of England is not the Common Law of England and the former is applicable to a state of things which does not obtain in India and, therefore, great care should be exercised in importing wholesale into India the strict principles of the Ecclesiastical Law of England which are embodied in the decisions of English Courts. Where, therefore, the decisions of the English Courts rest not upon the principles of Common Law but on the peculiar principles of the Ecclesiastical Law, the Courts in India are not bound to follow them since the strict and peculiar principles of the English Ecclesiastical Law are inapplicable to India. [p. 169, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree, dated the 31st March 1920, in O. S. No. 25 of 1919 on the file of the District Court, South Arcot.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for Messrs. A. Krishnasami Ayyar and T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The facts as established by the evidence do not amount to legal cruelty. The only acts complained against the husband in the course of 10 years of married life are (1) a charge that the wife attempted to poison the husband, which charge, even according to the defence evidence, was disproved immediately and nobody thought anything about it thereafter; (2) that when the misunderstandings between the husband and the wife were serious, the husband once necked her out of the house.

The other charges attemped to be proved were mere personal recriminations in respect of which no Court of law would give either consort any relief. My submission is these circumstances by themselves do not in law constitute legal cruelty which is necessary for refusing relief to the husband. [See Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, sections 96 and 456; Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (1), Russell v. Russell (2), Evans v. Evans (3).]

Any party to a marriage is prima facie entitled to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights unless circumstances are established which will endanger the health, liberty, or safety of the recalcitrant consort and it has been ruled [see Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (1)]; that it is only evidence of such cruelty as will support a decree for divorce in an English Ecclesiastical Court which would justify a refusal of conjugal rights in Courts in India.

Judged by the standard enunciated by the majority of the Judges in Russell v. Russell (2). I submit that, in the present case, no legal cruelty of any sort has been established. The principles applicable to this class of cases are not affected by the polygamy or monogamy that may be sanctioned by a particular system of jurisprudence.

If the law gives a man a right to marry more than one wife, he has certainly a right to the consortium of all his wives. In any event, even a decree now given could not be enforced by imprisonment under the new amended Civil Procedure Code and there is no reason why in appeal my client should be deprived of the moral sanction of this Court's decree to rehabilitate himself in the affections of his wife. In any case, the lower Court is wrong in giving a decree for maintenance in favour of the wife when no counter-claim was made. That part of the decree clearly cannot stand.

Dr. S. Swaminathan and Mr. Desikachariar, for the Respondent :—The decision in Russell v. Russell (2) does not apply to the facts of this case. It is well settled that, to constitute a proper defence, physical cruelty is not necessary. Reference was made to Thompson v. Thompson (4); Armour v. Armour (5) and the English cases cited in the Calcutta case.

The general principles of English Ecclesiastical Law are not by themselves applicable to India. Courts in India are Courts of Equity and need conform, when no rules exist in India, to the English Common Law which is different and less vigorous than the English Ecclesiastical Law. It would be enough if, as a result of the husband's conduct, the wife's health had suffered.

It is submitted on the facts of this case legal cruelty has been clearly made out.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the husband against the decree of the District Judge of South Arcot, dismissing his suit for restitution of conjugal rights against the first defendant, his wife, on the ground that he was guilty of legal cruelty. The plaintiff's case is that he married the first defendant about 18 years ago, that he lived with her as husband and wife till she left him, that he had to marry a second wife as the first defendant had no issue, that the first defendant left him about 19 months before he filed his plaint, at the instigation of the second defendant, her father, and the other defendants have induced her to stay away from the husband and that he was entitled to restitution of conjugal rights against the first defendant. The first defendant pleaded that the husband was guilty of cruelty, that she was ill-treated by him, that he falsely charged her with an attempt to poison him, and that when she went to the husband's house at the request of her father, he pushed her out by the neck and threatened to slipper her if she ever crossed his threshold. The learned District Judge has believed the evidence of the defendants and their witnesses and refused the plaintiff any relief.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar who appears for the appellant contests the findings of fact and argues that, on the facts found, no legal cruelty has been established. The admitted facts are, that the first defendant was married to the plaintiff when she was quite young that she lived with him as man and wife for about 10 years, that, as she had no issue, the plaintiff married a second wife, about 1913, that the first defendant continued in her husband's house for about five years after the second marriage and has left the husband's protection. She filed a petition for maintenance on 14th November 1918 before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tindivanam and he passed an order in her favour on 22nd February 1919 and the revision petition by the plaintiff against that order was dismissed by the High Court on 28th July 1919. He filed this suit on 7th April 1919.

The plaintiff, as his first witness, swears that he lived with the first defendant as man and wife till she left him without any ostensible reason. His suggestion for her leaving him is that the father applied to him for a loan of Rs. 1,000 for the purpose of prosecuting a case against one Kamalatchi Ammal and he refused to lend him money whereupon the father took the daughter away and refused to send her back. He denies the allegation that he suspected his wife of an attempt to poison him and denies the acts of cruelty. The plaintiff is a man in well-to-do circumstances and seems to be very influential in his own village. His evidence is supported by P. W. No. 3, his peternal aunt, a widow living in his family. The other witnesses on his side do not throw any light on the matters in dispute. On the other hand, the first defendant has been examined as D. W. No. 1 and she says that there were no marital relations between her and the plaintiff after he married his second wife, that he would not even speak to her, that he took away her jewels on some pretext, that she was made to do household work like a servant, that he abused her when she took some butter-milk to him to be taken with his food, that he did not drink the butter-milk but got up from his unfinishd meal and said that he would not drink from her hand even in his next birth, that he would not allow her to touch the child of the second wife though the child was attached to her, that when he suffered from a slight ailment, he charged her with having put poison in his coffee, that he used very violent language to her, that he and his mother gave directions that she should not enter the kitchen which was the only room she had entered up to that time after the second marriage and that she, unable to bear the cruel treatment, left the house and went to Korkady to live with her father and mother and that the father after sometime brought her to her husband's house and when she entered the house he came from inside and necked her out. Her evidence is supported by that of her father as regards her being pushed out by the neck when he took her to her husband's house. D. W. No. 4, the village Munsif of the place, against whom no serious motive has been alleged says that he was sent for on one occasion by the plaintiff, that when he went to his house, his mother and peternal aunt showed him a Karundagam (a small metallic box) and asked him to open it and he did so and it emitted a bad smell. He was told that the first defendant was keeping that medicine for poisoning her husband. He asked that the first defendant should be sent for and as she was unable to go to him she sent word that it was kept by her for stomach-ache and he was afterwards told that she proved the innocuousness of the medicine by taking it herself. The other witnesses support the evidence of the first defendant that the husband considered her to be a disgusting woman and said that he would have no relations with her.

The learned District Judge, after carefully examining all the evidence, has come to the conclusion that her version of the case is better entitled to weight than that of the plaintiff. I have no hesitation in agreeing with him inasmuch as no arguments have been put forward on the side of the plaintiff which could in any way induce me to consider that the learned Judge has not correctly appreciated the evidence in the case.

The next question pressed by the appellant is that the acts of cruelty found are not sufficient to establish a good defence to the plaintiff's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. It is now settled that Courts in India have jurisdiction to entertain suits for restitution for conjugal rights and to grant relief when the parties are Hindus or Muhammadans. Vide Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (1). But the difficult question is, under what circumstances would a Court be justified in refusing to grant the relief asked for in such a case. In this case the parties are Hindus. Mr. Mayne in his book on Hindu Law sums up the law thus: "When the marriage is once completed, if either party refuses to live with the other, the case is no longer one for specific performance of a contract, but for restitution of conjugal rights." (Section 96). "Nothing will justify her in leaving her home except such violence as renders it unsafe for her to continue there, or such continued ill-usage as would be termed cruelty in any English Matrimonial Court." (Section 456). Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar strongly pressed on our attention the case of Russell v. Russell (2) and contended that a mere allegation of the commission of an offence would not amount to cruelty and that his client, though hastily, thought that the first defendant was capable of poisoning him but he repented of it and that inasmuch as he was anxious to live with her, he entertained no fear of her poisoning him and, therefore, she was not entitled to live away from him. He also contended that the only act of actual cruelty in the populer sense was her being shoved out when she went to his house after leaving him for a time. In this connection it must be remebered that the plaintiff does not admit of having made an unfounded charge but denies having made it. He does not plead that he has forgiven his wife or that he had misled her into thinking that she was capable of committing a heinous offence but totally denies having made any such charge. Therefore, there can be no repentance on his part and the way in which this case has been pressed shows that he is anxious to have a decree in his favour without any regard to the future welfare of his wife. In Russell v. Russell (2) the House of Lords held that a "false charge of having committed an unnatural criminal offence brought by a wife against her husband, although published to the world and persisted in after she did not believe in its truth, is not sufficient evidence of legal cruelty to entitle the husband to a judicial separation." The case was decided by a majority of five Lords against four. Before considering the English authorities, it is to be borne in mind that the Matrimonial Law of England is the Canon Law of the Church and matrimonial causes were heard and determined by Ecclesiastical Courts. The Roman Church even now does not recognise divorce. The Anglican Church though it allows divorce is still leaning towards strict monogamy. It was only under the Matrimonial Causes Act (20 and 21 Vict. Chap, 85) that the King's Courts were given jurisdiction to entertain matrimonial causes and by section 22 they were directed to determine them as far as possible on the principles of the Ecclesiastical Law. That jurisdiction is now exercised by the Probate Division of the High Court of Justice. The Legislature did not alter the Canon Law except in few matters and the Judges who administer the law are bound by the precedents which were established in the Ecclesiastical Courts. To import the Ecclesiastical Law of England wholesale into India is as injudicious as it is inequitable. In the Christian countries, monogamy is the rule. No man or woman can marry a second time when the first marriage is subsisting. In England, therefore, if a wife or a husband refuses to cohabit or to render to one another marital duties, the other party cannot have any relief except as is granted by the Courts and that is the reason why Courts were strict in enforcing the marital duties and were jealous of the rights of the parties to the marriage and would not allow any violation of the marital tie, and compelled the recalcitrant party to submit to the embraces of the other and forced them to live as man and wife. In India, the Hindu Law permits a man to have more than one wife at the same time, but among the higher castes, a woman can marry only once. When a man marries more than one wife and ill-treats one of his wives in such a way as to make it impossible for her to live with him not merely with any degree of comfort but without danger to her health, the question for consideration is, should the Court enforce the strict rule in English Ecclesiastical Law or should it consider whether the circumstances of each case would justify its using its power to compel the wife to live with her husband who hates and loathes her and when by such residence her health is likely to be seriously impaired. The Courts in India are enjoined to decide according to justice, equity and good conscience in cases where no specific rule exists and they naturally look to the English decisions for guidance. The Common Law of England furnishes precedents which are in conformity with equity, justice, and good conscience. But the Ecclesiastical Law of England is not the Common Law of England and the former is applicable to a state of things which does not obtain in India and, therefore, great care should be exercised in importing wholesale into India the strict principles of the Ecclesiastical Law of England which are embodied in the decisions of the English Courts. Even in England, the tendency of the latter cases is to relax the rules of the Ecclesiastical Law as regards the marital rights and duties in order to give relief where a Court of Equity would consider such relief to be proper.

With these preliminary remarks, I will examine the cases relied upon by the appellant. In Russell v. Russell (2) the wife brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights and the husband resisted it on the ground of cruelty by the wife. The cruelty proved was, " that from that time after the trial, although she had heard the verdict in favour of her husband at the close of the trial, that she thenceforth wrote letters, made statements, pursued her husband, practically, insisted on the same charge... not by one single act or one single letter, but by a continuance and persistence in conduct of that sort." The charge was that he was guilty of an unnatural offence. The case was tried before Pollock, B., with a Jury. He pronounced a decree for a judicial seperation. The Court of Appeal held that the husband was not entitled to a decree for judicial separation. Two of the learned Lords Justices, Lopes and Lindley, define cruelty thus : " There must be danger to life, limb or health, bodily or mental, or reasonable apprehension of it." The leading judgment in that case was delivered by Lord Harschell who held that the wife's persistence in making a false charge against her husband knowing the charge to be false, however, culpable such conduct was, did not amount to legal cruelty. He followed the dictum of Lord Stowell in Evans v. Evans (3) and held that the plaintiff's act did not amount to legal cruelty. Lord Stowell in the course of the judgment in Evans v. Evans (3) observes: "I take it the rule cited by Dr. Bever from Clarke and the other books of practice, is a good general outline of the Canon Law, the law of this country upon this subject. In the older cases of this sort which I have had an opportunity of looking into, I have observed that the danger of life, limb, or health is usually inserted as the ground upon which the Court has proceeded to a separation. This doctrine has been repeatedly applied by the Court in the cases that have been cited. The Court has never been driven off this ground. It has been always jealous of the inconvenience of departing from it, and I have heard no one case cited in which the Court granted a divorce without proof given of a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt." After an examination of a number of cases, Lord Herschell observes at page 455 " I think the law of restitution of conjugal rights as administered in the Courts did sometimes lead to results which I can only call barbarous. I need seek no better illustration of this than the case of Holmes v. Holmes (6) decided in 1755 which is relied on for the proposition that the Courts can only refuse restitution on grounds which would justify a divorce. Conduct of a most revolting character on the part of the husband was held to afford no answer to his claim for a restitution of conjugal rights. Indeed, if the broadest definition of cruelty which has been contended for in this case were accepted, it would still be to my mind unsatisfactory that a husband who, though stopping short of cruelty in that sense, had by insult and outrage driven his wife to leave him, should, without repentance for the past or any assurance of amendment for the future, be able to invoke the assistance of the Court and call for the strong arm of the law to force his wife under pain of imprisonment to resume cohabitation. One would think that the Court might well refuse to afford its assitance to one who acted thus. And, notwithstanding the decision to which I have referred, there are not wanting dicta of eminent Judges, and notably, of Lord Stowell, that 'something short of legal cruelty' might bar a suit for restitution. However that may be, the matter is of less importance than it formerly was, as the Legislature has interposed ; and even if the Court is still bound to make a decree for restitution, it is no longer bound to enforce it as before." Lord Davey who agreed with Lord Herschell was obliged to confess: "My only duty is to say whether the appellant's contention is conformable to the principles on which the Ecclesiastical Courts formerly acted and gave relief. I am constrained to say that in my opinion it is not."

Considering the rigour of the Ecclesiastical Law, the Legislature interposed and made it optional with the Court to enforce the decree for restitution of conjugal rights by imprisonment. Order XXI, r. 32, of the Civil Procedure Code, prescribes the mode in which a party could be compelled to obey a decree for restitution of conjugal rights ; but I am not aware that the Court could refuse the execution of a decree unless it be that the health of the party against whom the decree is sought to be executed would suffer by such restitution. The latitude given to the English Courts has only been recently given to the Indian Courts by O. XXI, r. 33, Civil Procedure Code, as regards the execution of decrees in such cases. Lord Halsbury, who differed from the majority, says at page 420: "In the view the Ecclesiastical Courts took of the sanctity and perpetual obligation of the rights between the spouses, it is intelligible enough that they should have sternly enforced the duty of continued cohabitation, except in such cases as, to use the phrase continually recurring, 'when the facts show an absolute impossibility that the duties of the married life can be discharged.'" With regard to the conduct of the plaintiff, he observes: "For my own part, I believe an accusation of this kind is an incurable injury to the person against whom it is directed." Lord Hobhouse who was also in the minority in considering what would be cruelty, observes as follows: "That violence and bodily danger are far the most common forms of cruelty accounts for the frequent repetition of the formulæ relating to such things. But we find not only judicial recognition that there may be other forms of cruelty, but judicial dicta and decisions taking a wider range, and quite irreconcilable with the rigid line by which it is now sought to confine the jurisdiction of the Court," and after an examination of the cases on the point, he says: "The conclusion I draw from the authorities is that there is no rigid rule to exclude from the consideration of Judge or Jury a case where acts, cruel in their nature, are so grave as to destroy the foundatins of conjugal life. I do not think that any rule can be laid down less wide than that of Lord Stowell 'that the causes must be grave and weighty, and such as to show an absolute impossibility" meaning of course, a moral impossibility 'that the duties of married life can be discharged.' The fact that violence and personal danger are far the most common ground alleged for separation, has led to repeated statements of the doctrine of danger in terms applicable and appropriate to those cases. But they are only one class of the broader category indicated by Lord Stowell."

In Bray v. Bray (7) Sir John Nicholl observes with regard to the conduct of the husband who accused his wife of the most abominable intercourse that can possibly be conceived, no less than incest with one of her nearest relations: "It is not, I think, possible to conceive cruelty of a more grievous character (except, perhaps, great personal violence) than the accusation made by this husband against his wife."

Cruelty in the legal sense need not necessarily be physical cruelty. A course of conduct which, if persisted in, would undermine the health of the wife, is a sufficient justification for refusing to the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. In Kelly v. Kelly (8) it was held "If force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted, to compell the submission of a wife to such a degree and during such a length of time as to injure her health and render a serious malady imminent, although there be no actual physical violence such as would justify a decree, it is legal cruelty and entitles her to a judicial separation." In that case, the husband adopted a deliberate system of conduct towards his wife with the view of binding her to his authority. No physical violence was found against the husband but only a course of conduct which was a kind of tyranny to the wife. Channell, B., in the course of the judgment observes: "It would be difficult to frame a definition of legal cruelty which should be applicable to all the cases which may arise. The object of the Matrimonial Court in exercising its jurisdiction in decreeing for judicial separation for cruelty is to free the injured consort from a cohabitation which has been rendered, or which there is imminent reason to believe, will be rendered, unsafe by ill-usage of the party complained of. It is obvious that the modes by which one of two married persons may make the life or the health of the other insecure are infinitely various, but as often as perverse ingenuity may invent a new manner of producing the result the Court must supply the remedy by separating the parties." In Bethune v. Bethune (9). The President of the Probate Division Sir James Hannen gave a decree for divorce on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty the cruelty consisting of a long course of systematic neglect and insult. The law is summed up in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 16, section 976: "A course of conduct calculated to break the spirit of the sufferer (more usually the wife) continued till health breaks down or is likely to break down under the strain sometimes termed 'constructive cruelty' is also a ground for relief", and reliance is placed for the proposition upon a number of cases. In India there are cases in which it was held that it was not necessary to prove physical violence in order to deny the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights: Vide Thompson v. Thompson (4) and Armour v. Armour (5).

The facts proved in this case are sufficient, in my opinion, to deny the plaintiff the relief claimed by him. When a husband, who is guilty of a course of conduct which would be regarded as cruel to the wife, comes before a Court seeking its aid to compell his wife to submit to his embraces, it is the duty of the Court to see whether the health of the wife is likly to suffer by forcing her against her will to live with him. The observations of Lord Brougham in Paterson v. Paterson (10) seem to be peculiarly applicable to the present case: "If the husband, without any violence or threat of violence to the wife,—without any maltreatment endangering life or health or leading to an apprehension of danger to life or health,—were to exercise mere tyranny, to utter constant insults, vituperation, scornful language, charges of gross offences (utterly groundless), charges of this kind made before her family, her children, her relations, her friends, her servants, insulting her in the face of the world, and of her own domestics, calling upon them to join in those insults, and to treat her with contumely and with scorn,—if such a case, were to be made out, or even short of such a case, viz., injurious treatment, which would make the married state impossible, to be endured, rendering life itself almost unbearable, then I think the probability is very high that the Consistory Courts of this country would so far relax the rigour of their negative rule, at present somewhat vague, as to extend the remedy of a divorce a mensa et thoro to a case, such as I have put." This observation was made before the Matrimonial Causes Act gave a salutory relief in hard cases. The facts found in this case are:—

1. The husband charged the wife with the attempted murder of her husband by poison.

2. He insulted her on more than one occasion and called her by the most vile epithet.

3. He treated her with loathing and disgust and abused her when she took some butter-milk to him, and he expressed his disgust by getting up from his unfinished meal.

4. He sent word through a servant that if she went back to him she would be dragged out by a pariah and slipered.

5. He threatened her with violence by saying that he would hash her to pieces with a knife and allowed the second wife to abuse her and to say that she (meaning the first defendant) deserved to be made to stand in the road and be spat on by passers by, that it was enough that she had not wrung its (child's) neck and thrown it into the well and that if she touched the child again she would be beaten with a broom-stick.

6. He used personal violence by pushing her by the neck. The mother-in-law and the peternal aunt who treated her with kindness turned against her after the charge of an attempted murder was ventilated by the husband.

I think these circumstances are sufficient to make out cruelty under the English Law. But in India where the conditions are different it is not necessary to implicity follow the precedents of the Ecclesiastical Courts in considering what is equitable in the circumstances. The Indian Courts are

(10) (1850) 3 H. L. C. 308 at p. 328 88 R. R. 101; 10 E. R. 120.

Courts of justice, equity, and good conscience and though a decision of the House of Lords is to be regarded with the utmost respect, yet it is not binding upon the Indian Courts and where the decision rests not upon the principles of the Common Law but upon the peculiar principles of the Ecclesiastical Law of England, the Courts in India are not bound to follow the decisions for the simple reason that the Ecclesiastical Law of England is not the law of this country and monogamy, so far as the husbad is concerned, is not the rule of Hindu Law. The Hindu Law does not recognise any divorce. It permits a husband to have as many wives as he likes. The husband in this case had no marital relations with his wife.—the first defendant—for a period of more than seven or eight years and it would be cruel now to force the wife to go back to the husband against her will.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar argued that the plaintiff was anxious to have his wife back, that he had repented of his past conduct and that he is willing to treat her as a wife should be. He also urged that in country places personal violence towards the wife by the husband is excusable and that we should not apply to the parties the principles which would govern a case where the parties are educated and enlightened. I am not prepared to believe that domestic relations in the moffusil and in the country places are as described by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar. No doubt sometimes, the Hindu society overlooks personal violence to the wife by the husband, but when a Court's intervention is asked for, the Court should not be guided by the public opinion, in a country village, but by what is just and equitable in the circumstances. In this case the plaintiff is a man of influence in his own village. There is no public opinion at all in that place. Is there safety or security for the wife if the husband chooses to charge her again with an attempt to poison him and hands her over to the Police on his becoming slightly ill and for which illness he could not find any reason? There is no guarantee that the suspicion which he once entertained will not be revived again if he or his second wife or his second wife's child should fall ill. If he was really anxious to have his wife back, he could very well have gone to her and offered to treat her properly. When the maintenance proceedings were before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, he suggested that the parties should settle the matter out of Court and the plaintiff, in order to make out that he was willing to settle the matter, sent his handyman to fetch his wife and she rightly refused to go with him as she thought that the plaintiff was attempting to dupe her. If he was in earnest, he could have sent his peternal aunt or any of his female relations to fetch her. I am not prepared to put any faith in the protestations of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar on behalf of his cleint. A Hindu wife looks upon her husband as her Lord and Master and she has no happiness outside her husband's house. Knowing the conditions in India as we do, I am not prepared to believe that a Hindu wife would stay away at the instance of her father or other relations when there was no sufficient reason for her conduct, for she considers her husband's home is her proper place and she would not leave it without the gravest reason, as she has nothing to look forward to here or hereafter. There is a civil suit pending in which the wife seeks to recover her jewels from the husband. I am satisfied that the plaintiff has brought this suit only to satisfy his vanity and to defeat the order made in favour of the wife for maintenance and this suit is not a bona fide attempt to get back his wife to continue the marital relations. I consider the facts established sufficient cruelty on the part of the husband which would justify the Court in refusing the plaintiff the relief he seeks. The case might perhaps be different if the Court is asked to dissolve the marriage, but in a case of restitution of conjugal rights, the Courts need not consider what would be sufficient to grant a divorce according to the Matrimonial Law of England. On the other hand, before passing a decree in favour of the husband the Court should be satisfied that by giving its aid to him it does not thereby endanger the life, limb, liberty or the health of the wife. If there is danger to any of these, the Court would be amply justified in refusing to give a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

The learned Judge has decreed separate residence to the wife. There is no counter-claim by the defendant to the plaintiff's suit and I do not see how the Court could grant a decree for separate residence when there is no proper claim for it. That portion of the decree of the lower Court should be expunged.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 19 OF 1923.

June 12, 1923.

Pesent:—Sir Dawson Miller, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay.

BHAGWAT PRASHAD SINGH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

DWARKA PRASAD SINGH AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 11 to 14—Application for execution, requirements of—Return of execution application for additional Court-fee—Court-fee not paid, effect of—Application, whether "in accordance with law"—Decree-holders, several—Verification of application by all, whether necessary.

The fact that an execution application returned for amendment is not amended and re-filed within the time allowed, does not necessarily make the application one not in accordance with law for the purposes of Art. 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 176, col. 1.]

Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer, 23 C. 217; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 145, not followed.

Order XXI, rr. 11 to 14 gives the particulars which the law requires to be stated in an application for execution. If the application conforms with those rules and is presented on a properly stamped paper, it must be taken to have been properly presented in accordance with law, even though it is returned for some other reason. [p. 175, col. 1.]

An execution application was returned for supplying a copy of the Record of Rights concerning the property sought to be made liable in execution and for payment of Court-fee on the additional amount of interest claimed between the date of the plaint and the date of the application. The order was not complied with. Within three years another execution application was made and the question was whether the previous application operated to save limitation:

Held, that assuming these were matters which the Court might have required to be done, a failure to do them could not affect the validity of the application as such, and that under Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act the later application filed within three years from it was within time. [p. 176, col. 1.]

Under O. XXI, r. 11 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code it is not necessary that an execution application should be verified by all the applicants where there are more than one. It may well be that some of them may not be acquainted with the facts of the case. It would be straining the language of the rule too far to say that where there are more applicants than one, the verification should be signed even by those who are not acquainted with the facts of the case or that where one or more are acquainted with the facts, their verification is not sufficient. [p. 176, col 1]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The question for determination in this appeal is, whether an application for execution of a decree filed on the 9th April 1922 is barred by limitation. The judgment-debtor, who is the appellant before us, contended before the Additional Subordinate Judge that the decree was time-barred on the ground that more than three years had passed since the last application for execution. The question depended upon whether a previous application for execution presented on the 24th April 1919 was duly made in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 (v) of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. It is admitted that if the application of the 24th April 1919 was duly made in accordance with law the present application is not time-barred.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the previous application was duly made in accordance with law and dismissed the judgment-debtor's objection. His decision was affirmed on appeal to the District Judge. From that decision the judgment-debtor has preferred the present appeal to this Court.

The validity of the application of the 24th April 1919 is challenged on three grounds, (1) that a copy of the Record of Rights was not filed together with the application; (2) that no Court-fee was paid for the additional amount of interest claimed between the date of the plaint and the date of the application, and (3) that the application was not verified by all the decree-holders. When the previous petition for execution was presented it was endorsed by the Sherishtadar of the Court with a note that no Court-fee on the increased amount of interest was filed and that copy of the Record of Rights was not filed, but that a written translation of the verification which was in the mahajani character had been supplied. On the same day, the 24th April 1919, the Subordinate Judge passed the following order :—

"Return the execution petition for needful and to be re-filed in 10 days from this date."

That order apparently meant that the decree-holders were to pay the additional Court-fee and supply a copy of the Record of Rights within 10 days. The order was not complied with but the present petition was presented within three years. In my opinion, it was not necessary that the previous application should be returned for the purposes mentioned. Order XXI, rr. 11 to 14, of the Civil Procedure Code gives the particulars which the law requires to be stated in an application for execution. If the application conforms with those rules and is presented upon a properly stamped paper I think it must be taken to have been properly presented in accordance with law. Rule 17 of the same Order prescribes the course which the Court shall take when the application does not conform with the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 and provides that the Court shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of those rules as are applicable to the case have been complied with. If they have not been complied with, the Court is empowered either to reject the application or to allow the defect to be remedied within a time to be fixed by it. It further provides that where an application is amended under the provisions mentioned, it shall be deemed to have been an application in accordance with law and presented on the date when it was first presented. It may, perhaps, be inferred from this that where the application is returned on the ground that the requirements of the rules have not been complied with and is not amended within the time fixed it cannot be regarded as having been presented in accordance with law. It is nowhere stated, however, that where the application conforms with the prescribed requirements and is returned for some other reason it shall not be deemed to have been presented in accordance with law. On referring to rr. 11 to 14 no provision is found for the payment of any Court-fee on the amount claimed in excess of that covered by the Court-fee paid together with the plaint, or for supplying a copy of the Record of Rights, and, assuming these were matters which the Court might require to be done, the failure to do them cannot, in my opinion, affect the validity of the application as such. It was contended, however, that the failure to supply the additional Court-fee was a fatal defect in the application. The application was presented with an 8-annas stamp, which is admittedly in accordance with the requirements of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, then in force, for applications of this nature. The authorities are not uniform on the question whether additional Court-fee is payable on interest which has accrued on the decretal amount since the date of the suit and for which no Court-fee has been paid with the plaint. But assuming, without deciding, that it was within the competency of the Court to require payment of the additional Court-fee before it would order execution to proceed in respect of the additional amount claimed, such a fee was in no sense a Court-fee payable on an application for execution. It was, if payable at all, a Court-fee payable on the plaint in respect of a part of the subject-matter in dispute which could not be estimated at the time when the plaint was presented, and which it is not usual to exact at that time. The failure to pay this fee would, at the most, entitle the Court to hold its hand and refuse to allow execution to proceed or to dismiss the application if the fee should not be paid within the time ordered but its non-payment cannot invalidate an application for execution properly stamped in accordance with the requirements of the Court-Fees Act and containing the particulars required by the provisions of O. XXI, rr. 11 to 14. But it was further contended that once the application was returned for amendment it could not be regarded as an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act unless the amendment was made within the time ordered and the application again presented. In support of this argumnt the case of Gopal Sah v. Jankl Koer (1) was relied on, but in that case the original application did not contain all the particulars required by section 235 of the Code of 1882 (now O. XXI, r. 11), and it was returned for amendment within a specified time. The order requiring amendment was not complied with and it cannot be said that the application was ever properly presented in accordance with law. In the present case the application was not returned on account of any defect in supplying proper particulrs. In the case relied on it is true a broad proposition was laid down that once the application is returned for amendment of any kind, even though the defects had not vitiated the application, it could not be regarded subsequently as made in accordance with law unless the defects had been cured within the time allowed. It was not necessary on the facts of that case to lay down any such broad proposition, and the judgment in that respect was criticised and not followed in the later case of Mathura Prosad v. Anurago Koer (2) decided by the same High Court in 1910. In my opinion the broad proposition there stated cannot be supported upon a proper interpretation of the rules of O. XXI or upon general principles and should not be followed.

The only other question which was raised was that the application was not verified by all the decree-holders. The application was signed by all the decree-holders and was verified by all except one. O. XXI, r. 11 (2), provides that save as otherwise provided by sub-rule (1) every application for the execution of a decree shall be in writing signed and verified by the applicant or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case. The verification in the present case was clearly signed by persons acquainted with the facts of the case and as they were themselves the decree-holders it may be presumed that the Court was satisfied that they were acquainted with the facts of the case. It does not appear to me that the application need be verified by all the applicants. It may well be that where there are a number of decree-holders, some of them are not acquainted with the facts of the case, and all the law requires is that the application should be verified by some person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case. I think it would be straining the language of the rule too far to say that where there are more applicants than one the verification should be signed even by those who are not acquainted with the facts of the case or that where one or more are acquainted with the facts of the case their verification is not sufficient. In my opinion, this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of certain crops, or, in the alternative, the value thereof. The plaintiff's allegation was that he had sown wheat, lahi and mustard in 4 bighas of alluvial land bearing No. 169, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 9, having colluded with the Patwari, the defendant No. 10, forcibly cut away the crops sown by the plaintiffs about the 20th of March 1921. The defendant No. 10 is the Patwari of the village and was to receive one-tenth of the crops to be appropriated by defendants Nos. 1 to 9. The plaintiff again sowed some wheat, etcetra, on another plot of 7 bighas but the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 in collusion with defendant No. 10 cut and removed the crops. The plaintiff, therefore, brings the suit for recovery of the grain removed by the defendants or Rs. 347 the value thereof.

The defence of the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 was that they had been ploughing and sowing the field in question as it emerged from the river every year and had always been reaping the crops, that in the year in dispute they ploughed and sowed it as usual under a lease of Bhadon Sambat 1977 given by Shah Qutubuddin, the lambardar and that the plaintiff had never sowed the field in question nor had he any right to the crops. They also contended that there was no collusion between them and the defendant No. 10.

Defendant No. 10 denied any collusion with the other defendants and alleged that the defendants themselves sowed the crops and reaped them.

The First Court came to the conclusion that Qutubuddin, the lambardar, had authority to grant the aforesaid lease and the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 did, as a matter of fact, cultivate the plot in dispute. It further found that the plaintiff had no right to institute the suit and that the Patwari was not in collusion with the defendants. It did not decide the question of the value of the crops alleged to have been removed and on these findings dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff went up in appeal. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has rightly found that the patta given by Qutubuddin was not for a period of more than a year and that the rent reserved could not be said to have been more than Rs. 100 in value. The patta, therefore, did neither require stamp nor registration (see, in this connection, Schedule I, Art. 35, Exemption A, of the Stamp Act of 1899, also Government Order No. $\frac{1048}{VII-I-34-I}$, dated the 3rd of December 1885 published in the N.-W. P. Gazette of 1885, Part I, page 579). The lambardar has a right to give a lease of zemindari property having regard to the particular season [vide the case of Muhammad Kazim v. Miyan Khan (1)]. In this case having regard to the words of the patta and specially to the fact that the land gained by alluvion was to be measured later on, this patta could not refer to more than that particular year. There was no certainty that the same land or the same quantity of land would emerge from the river the succeeding year. This patta could not, therefore, be said to be one for more than one year nor could it be said that the rent reserved was more than Rs. 100. This patta by the lambardar was, therefore, valid and the defendants were justified in cultivating the land. The lease was, therefore, admissible in evidence and required neither a stamp-duty nor registration. These were the only grounds pressed in the appeal. Under these circumstances, it is not necessary to consider the question whether a second appeal lies or not. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit to enforce a mortgage security. The document was executed on the 27th March 1911 by the father of the defendant in favour of the father of the plaintiff to secure a loan of Rs. 35,00 which was to carry interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month. The suit was instituted on the 9th February 1920 by the son of the mortgagee against the son of the mortgagor. The plaintiff stated that as the original document had been lost, he produced a certified copy from the Registration Office. The defendant contested the claim on a two-fold ground; namely, first, that there was no valid mortgage-bond, executed and attested in conformity with the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act; and, secondly, that no consideration had been paid on the basis of the mortgage transaction. The Subordinate Judge has overruled these contentions and has decreed the claim. On the present appeal, that decree has been assailed on each of the two grounds urged in the Trial Court.

As regards the first objection, the Subordinate Judge held that section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act rendered it unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove execution and attestation of the bond, inasmuch as the defendant, in his written statement, admitted execution of the bond by his father. This view cannot be supported. Section 70 provides that the admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself, shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested. The Subordinate Judge interpreted this section to mean that the admission by the representative of a party to an attested document may be treated as sufficient proof of its execution. This view is unsustainable on the plain language of the section. The section speaks of an admission by a party to an attested document of its execution by himself, that is, of its execution by the party concerned. An admission by the representatives of a party to an attested document of its execution by the party cannot be treated as an admission of the party to an attested document of its execution by himself.

Apart from this, there is an additional difficulty in the way of acceptance of the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. In the present case, no doubt, the defendant admitted that the bond was executed by his father. At the same time, he specifically denied that the bond had been duly attested as required by law. In such circumstances, it is incumbent upon the party who relies upon the mortgage instrument to establish that the document was attested as required by law. The case is covered, not by Nibaran Chandra Sen v. Nagendra Chandra Sen (1); Satish Chandra Mitra v. Jogendra Nath Mahalanobis (2), but by Arjun Chandra Bhadra v. Kailas Chandra Das (3). It is consequently necessary for us to examine whether the document has been proved to have been duly attested.

It is not disputed that a mortgage-bond is not duly executed and cannot operate as a mortgage unless it is in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two witnesses who sign the document as attesting witnesses; Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (4) and Ganga Pershad Singh v. Ishri Pershad Singh (5). We must accordingly examine whether this document was in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two persons who affixed their signatures as attesting witnesses. The original has been lost and we have on the record only a certified copy obtained from the Registration Office. The document shows, on the face of it, that it was signed by the executant Rakhalraj Ray. This is, indeed, admitted by the defendant. At the foot of the document we have the signature of the scribe Soshi Bhushan Ray. Thereafter follow the names of two persons who are described as witnesses; these names are Haran Chandra Chatterjee and Bhushan Chandra Das. The document was executed on the 27th March 1911 and, as the endorsement made by the Registering Officer shows, was presented for registration on the same day by the mortgagor Rakhalraj Ray. He admitted execution and was identified by Bhushan Chandra Das whose name appears on the deed as that of an attesting witness. On the strength of this admission of execution, the registration was completed. In the Trial Court, the scribe Soshi Bhushan Roy, though summoned as a witness, did not appear to give evidence. Haran Chandra Chatterjee was examined on commission. Bhusan Chandra Das was duly summoned and was present in Court on the 18th March 1921; but when the trial actually commenced he was not found and accordingly was not examined. The examination of Bhusan Chandra Das might not have been insisted upon by reason of the erroneous view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the scope of section 70 of the Indian Evidence Act: we consequently decided to give an opportunity to the parties to examine Soshi Bhushan Ray and Bhusan Chandra Das. It was further alleged in the course of the argument that Haran Chandra Chatterjee, on the ground of pretended illness, avoided the Court, and was examined on commission. We accordingly decided to summon Haran Chandra Chatterjee also for examination in this Court. These three persons have been examined here. Soshi Bhushan Ray admits that he acted as the scribe; but he states that he was not present when the document was actually executed.

Haran Chandra Chatterjee adheres to the statement he made in the Trial Court that he was present at the time of execution of the document, that he saw the executant affix his signature thereto and that he thereafter put down his own name as that of an attesting witness. Bhusan Chandra Das states that at the request of the mortgagor he became a witness to the document. He admits that he did affix his signature to the document but he has no recollection of any other circumstances in connection with the execution of the document. He admits, that, on the day of execution, he was later on present at the Registration Office and that he identified the mortgagor Rakhalraj Ray when the latter admitted execution before the registering officer. The question thus arises whether on the facts stated, the inference may legitimately be drawn that the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act have been fulfilled; in other words, whether Rakhalraj Ray executed the document in the presence of two persons who saw him execute the document and became attesting witnesses. As regards Haran Chandra Chatterjee there can, in our opinion, be no doubt that he was present, that he did see the execution and that he affixed his signature as an attesting witness. As regards Bhushan Chandra Das, we accept his testimony that he was present and affixed his signature as an attesting witness at the request of the mortgagor. But he was unable to recollect whether he actually saw Rakhalraj Ray execute the document. The appellant contends that such evidence as this does not entitle the plaintiff to treat the document as a valid mortagage-deed. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well founded.

The principle applicable to cases of this character was considered by this Court in Jogendra Nath Mukhopadhya v. Nitai Churn Bundopadhya (6) by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Dei v. Munna Lal (7), Uttam Singh v. Hukam Singh (8) and Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam (9) and by the Madras High Court in Venkata Reddi v. Muthu Pambulu Naick (10). In the first of these cases, Jogendra Nath Mukhopadhya v. Nitai Churn Bundopadhya (6), the mortgage-deed, on the face of it, showed that it was attested by two witnesses. One of them was the writer, but he denied execution of the deed by the mortgagor. This denial, however, was found to be false by the Court of Appeal below. The other witness stated that the mortgagor signed in his presence, but he was not able to remember whether the mortgagor signed also in the presence of the writer. It appeared, however, on the face of the document, that the signature of the writer preceded that of the other witness. It was ruled by this Court that it might be fairly presumed that both signed as attesting witnesses after the execution of the document by the mortgagor and that such presumption might be made on the principle enunciated in section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. Reference was made to the decision in Burgoyne v. Showler (11). In that case, upon the face of the Will, without a memorandum of attestation, there was a signature of the testator at the foot, as also the subscription of two witnesses. It was ruled by Dr. Lushington that, in the absence or death of witnesses, prima facie, the presumption is that the testator signed in the joint presence of the two persons and that they subscribed in his presence. This principle was applied by the Allahabad High Court in the three cases mentioned where reference was made to Wright v. Sanderson (12). These decisions were followed, as based on sound principle, by the Madras High Court in the case mentioned before. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in In the goods of Gunstan, Blake v. Blake (13), Harris v. Knight (14) and In the Goods of Frances Peverett (15). In the case before us, we have the affirmative testimony of one attesting witness that he was present, saw the execution and became an attesting witness. We have the testimony of another witness that, at the request of the mortgagor, he became an attesting witness. We have the further fact that, on the same day when the document was later on presented for registration, this second witness identified the executant, who, in his presence, admitted execution before the registering officer. At that time the signatures of these witnesses appeared as those of attesting witnesses on the face of the document presented for registration. We may, in these circumstances, legitimately draw the inference that the requirements of the law were fulfilled. No doubt, as pointed out in In the Estate of Strong, Strong v. Hadden (16), the question is one of inference from the surrounding circumstances; and cases are conceivable where the Court may decline to draw the inference by reason of proof of facts which show that the requirements of the law were not in the contemplation of the parties. In the present case, no such considerations arise and we hold that the document in suit is a duly attested and registered mortgage-deed.

We may add that when the case was originally argued before us, advantage was taken by the appellant of the failure of the respondent to produce the mortgage-bond to build the argument that the mortgage-bond was never taken out of the Registration Office because the consideration was not in fact paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor. At the request of the parties, we called for a report from the Registration Office as to whether the document was still in the custody of the officer concerned. The Registrar stated that the document was taken out of the Registration Office on the 31st March 1911, that is, four days after it had been executed and presented for registration. If the document was taken out by the mortgagor, it should in the normal course of events be in the custody of the appellant. If, on the other hand, it was taken out by or on behalf of the mortgagee, we have to consider whether the story of loss, as narrated by Haran Chandra Chatterjee, is probable. Bhushan Chandra Das has stated that he actually took it out of the Registration Office on behalf of the mortgagee and made it over to Haran Chandra Chatterjee, who states how it was lost while in his possession. This story is corroborated by the affidavit made by Haran Chandra Chatterjee before the Magistrate of Howrah on the 10th April 1910 when he notified the loss of the document. The failure of the plaintiff to produce the original mortgage-bond does not consequently lend colour to the theory that the mortgagor did not deliver the document to the mortgagee because no consideration was paid for the transaction.

As regards the second objection, the defendant is in no better position. The document was executed by his father, and contains a recital that the consideration had been received by the executant. The burden lies upon the executant or his representative to prove that the recital was untrue and to satisfy the Court how he became a party to a document which contained

We hold accordingly that the Subordinate Judge has correctly found that consideration passed as alleged and that the mortgage transaction was operative.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Administrator-General's Act (III of 1874), s. 52—Administrator-General's Act (III of 1913), s. 42—Rules framed by Madras Government, r. II (3) (c)—Administration commenced under Act of 1874—Fees payable to Administrator-General—Computation, method of—Interpretation of Statutes.

In the case of the administration of an estate which commenced before the 1st April 1914, the amount which the Administrator-General is to receive is a percentage on the value of the assets distributed, provided they have, before distribution, been collected by him; with the result that if there is a rise in the value of the estate since collection he gets a larger amount by way of commission, and if there is a fall in the value of the estate his commission decreases proportionately. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated the 23rd of September 1921, passed in the exercise of the Original Testamentary Jurisdiction of this High Court, in O. P. No. 13 of 1921.

Mr. J. R. Atkinson, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The question is whether, for the purpose of arriving at the amount of commission payable to the Administrator-General in the administration of an intestate estate in cases where the administration commenced before April 1914, the value of the assets is to be taken at the date of their collection or at the date of their distribution.

By the Act of 1913, the fees, whether by percentage or otherwise, to be charged in respect of the duties of the Administrator-General are those that may be prescribed by the Government provided that in respect of estates the administration of which commenced before the Act, the fees prescribed are not to exceed the fees leviable in respect of such an estate under the Act of 1874, which had been in force down to that date, and which was by that Act repealed. The word "prescribed", in that section means "prescribed by rules issued by the Government." So far as Madras is concerned, rules have been issued by Government in 1916. Rule II (1) prescribes that the Administrator-General shall be entitled to receive a commission upon the amount or value of the assets which he collects at rates varying according to the total value of the estate. Sub-section 3 (c) of the same rule, referring to the commission payable in such cases says that, "such commission shall be payable to and retained by him upon the collection of the assets." The rule goes on after a full stop. "In the case of any estate the administration of which has been committed to the Administrator-General before the 1st April 1914, the commission chargeable shall be at the rate of five per centum as prescribed by section 52 of the Administrator-General's Act, 1874, or at the rate of three per centum in the case of estates falling under section 53 of that Act." Though it is very difficult to construe that rule, I think that it means that the new rates prescribed are to prevail in respect of estates newly coming under the administration, but that in respect of old estates, the old law is to prevail. I think that the object of that was to avoid the difficulties which would otherwise arise owing to the proviso in section 42 of the Act of 1913, which would involve an examination in each case to ascertain whether or not the rate charged exceeded the rate chargeable under the old Act, and, in my judgment, the policy was to keep alive for the pre-1914 administrations the old Act of 1874.

We will, therefore, have to look at the Act of 1874 (section 52) to ascertain how the amount to be charged by the Administrator-General is to be arrived at. In construing section 52 of the Act of 1874, we must apply all that rules of construction which applied to that section, when in force, in order to throw light on the intention of the Legislature in enacting particular words in the section under interpretation, and, therefore, I think, in order to solve the question of the meaning of section 52, we are entitled, and indeed bound, to look to sections 53, 54 and 55.

The first principle of interpretation is to take the ordinary interpretation of the words, and it is only in cases in which there might be more than one ordinary interpretation of words, that one has to look to anything outside to arrive at the meaning. The words of section 52 are: "The Administrator-General of Bengal shall be entitled to receive (a commission) at the rate of three per centum, and the Administrators-General of Madras and Bombay, respectively, at the rate of five per centum, upon the amount or value of the assets which they respectively collect and distribute in due course of administration." The amount of the commission, whether it be three per centum or five per centum, is made payable upon the amount or value of the assets collected and distributed. The ordinary English meaning of these words is "on what is both collected and distributed;" or, to put it in other words, "on what, having been collected, is distributed." On that interpretation the value cannot be properly ascertained until distribution. It is said that, if one looks at section 54, it is clear that the meaning is not the ordinary English meaning, but the words must be read either to mean "on the amount or value of the assets when collected" or "on the amount or value of assets when distributed, whichever may be the lesser amount," and an argument was addressed to us based on section 54 which in fact provides that one-half of the commission is to be payable and retained by the Administrator General upon collection and the other half upon distribution, which is said to show that you must value at the time of collection in order to arrive at the commission payable. I confess that this provision of section 54 gives rise to very considerable difficulty, but, on the whole, I think it can be explained by saying that the object of section 54 was to provide for the payment on account to one Administrator-General, and the possible adjustment of accounts between him and a subsequent Administrator-General when one had collected and the other had distributed, and was not intended to, and did not, affect the amount that was to be paid by the estate, and I think the words, "the amount of the commission lawfully retained by the Administrator-General upon the distribution of the assets shall be deemed a distribution within the meaning of this Act" are a corroboration of this view, because, in my view, if the other interpretation were right, that clause might be read "the amount of the commission lawfully retained by the Administrator-General upon the collection or the distribution of assets shall be deemed a distribution in the due course of administration within the meaning of this Act." In my view the true explanation is that that section had nothing whatever to do with the public, except in so far as it entitled the Administrator-General to retain some money in advance, and that the rights as between the public and the Administrator-General are governed by section 52; and I see no reason for departing from what, in my view, is the natural interpretation of the words of that section and there is no reason for not holding that the amount which the Administrator-General is to receive is a percentage on the value of the assets distributed provided, of course, they have, before distribution, been collected by him, with the result that if there is a rise in the value of the estate since collection, he gets a larger amount by way of commission, and if there is a fall in the value of the estate his commission decreases proportionately.

On these grounds, I think, this judgment must be reversed and the appeal must be allowed but, without costs as the matter is one of public importance and the Administrator-General quite properly does not press for his costs. The respondent will take his costs out of the estate.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I think this is a very difficult case. The matter arises by reason of section 42 of Act III of 1913 which provides for fees for the Administrator-General by rules promulgated by Government. The Act took the place of an old Act, II of 1874, which provided fees for the Administrator-General on a totally different basis. In those days the taking of the fees was a personal remuneration for his services; under the present Act the fees go to Government and the Administrator-General is paid a fixed salary for the work of his office. By the rules certain rates are fixed. By rule II (3) (a), the Administrator-General is entitled to receive on the amount or value of the assets which he collects in the course of administration remuneration according to a certain scale varying with the value of the estate. Sub-rule (c) runs as follows:—"Such commission shall be payable to and retained by him upon the collection of the assets. In the case of any estate the administration of which has been committed to the Administrator-General before the 1st April 1914 (it is in regard to such an estate that this case has arisen) the commission chargeable shall be at the rate of five per centum as prescribed by section 52 of the Administrator-General's Act, 1874, or at the rate of three per centum in the case of estates falling under section 53 of that Act." The argument that has been put forward in this case is that the reference to section 52 of the Act of 1874 and section 53 of that Act did not incorporate anything of those sections beyond the rate of percentage, which is contained therein, five per centum in one case and three per centum in the other. That is a very attractive argument and would make a very short way to the decision of the case, but, in my opinion, it is an argument that cannot be accepted, though I have very great doubt about it. The words occur in a section which is not fixing a schedule or scale of charges which is sub-section (a), but in a section which appears to be defining and fixing the time at which the commission shall be payable to and taken over by the Administrator-General, which is upon the collection of the assets. I cannot think that even a careless draftsman would insert in such a section a topic which did not relate to the matter therein but related to what I may call the method of computation of the commission as distinct from what the amount of the commission is to be.

Having got over that initial difficulty I find myself in this position: that I am to look to section 52 of the Act of 1874 to find out how the perception of the commission is to be carried out, and the section runs thus: "The commission shall be received at the following rates, viz., at the rate of five per centum upon the amount or value of the assets which they (that is, the respective Administrators-General) respectively collect and distribute in due course of administration." They are to be paid commission on the value of what they collect and distribute. If these words stood alone, I should have very little difficulty about it. It seems to me that they must mean as my Lord paraphrased it—the amount of assets which, having collected, they proceed to distribute in due course of administration. They cannot distribute before they have collected. It may be that the words are superfluous, but to my mind they bear the plain meaning that the commission is to be taken on what reaches the hands of the beneficiary through the hands of the Administrator-General. It seems to me that that produces the most reasonable result, that the beneficiary should pay commission only on what reaches him during the course of administration. I cannot overlook another aspect of the case, viz., that the new Act unquestionably has put an end to that construction, so that to the mere argument that it was reasonable, I do not think that I ought to attach too much weight in construing the Act of 1874. Nevertheless, I think that this is the primarily reasonable meaning of the words apart from any question of policy or equity. But then it is said, in order to constr section 52, you have got to look to section 54 of that Act and if you find that that contemplates some other method of computation, then, although section 54 is no doubt dead, it is perfectly legitimate to use it as a means of ascertaining what must have been the necessary meaning of section 52. I accede to that argument and I think we are entitled and indeed bound to look at the other sections for the purpose of construing any one of them though only one is in fact re-enacted. Section 54 says that one half of the commission shall be paid to and retained by such Administrator-General upon the collection of the assets and the other half shall be payable to the Administrator-General who distributes any assets in due course of administration, and may be retained by him upon such distribution. If the object of that section is clearly to provide for the case where there is a change in the office of the Administrator-General during the course of the administration of any given estates and to provide a method by which the commission should be shared between the successive incumbents of the office, then, of course, the provision that one half of the commission would be paid to the Administrator-General who collects the assets will of course take effect, whether there is going to be a change or not, because no one knows whether the Administrator-General will survive to distribute or whether he will not. The argument based on these words is that 'one-half of such commission' involves this position, that the exact amount of the commission must be known at the time of the collection of the assets, because you cannot allot one-half of a quantity which is not once and for all fixed. The answer appears to me to be that you can make an approximate estimate of the likelihood of the total amount of the assets and on such an estimate the one-half commission has to be based. If the estate, as is the case in regard to the estate that has given rise to the present discussion, increases in value between the collection and distribution, it is obvious that there has got to be a collection of the other half of the commission upon the estate which has increased in value. Some suggestions have been made in the helpful arguments of Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar as to how that is going to be worked out. Where there are two halves you must have obviously a second valuation of some sort if you are to carry out section 52 and bring in the value of the estate and distribution at all. This is no doubt a rough and ready rule and to carry it out literally may effect the result: that the subsequent Administrator-General would get a large commission, while his predecessor who had worked for the collection would get a comparatively small amount. That may be the effect of that section. Another method is to suggest that what the section contemplates—for it says not a word about it—must be some sort of real adjustment as between the Administrator-General in office at the time of collection and the Administrator-General in office at the time of distribution so as to make their sharers equal. But I think, it is unnecessary for me to go into the various suggestions as to the true construction of section 54 because, as I have already said, section 54, to my mind, is only legitimately considered as a guide to construe section 52. I have come to the conclusion in agreement with my Lord, that section 54, whatever it means and whatever be its true construction, is an important guide. There are two possible results, first, that the Administrator-General should have a little cash in hand to proceed with his work of collecting the assets and administering the estate and, secondly, that the foundation should be laid for an adjustment of some sort as between successive Administrators-General. But section 54 does not control the fixing of the commission as between the Administrator-General—whether he be the same person throughout or not—on the one hand and the beneficiary who is to pay the commission on the other, and, in my opinion, the commission fixed by section 52 can only be the commission upon the value of the assets as they are ultimately distributed and placed in the hands of the beneficiary or beneficiaries.

I, therefore, agree that this appeal must be allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 151—Order for payment of costs of commission; nature of—Enforcement of such order—Inherent power—Proceedings to enforce order, nature of—Appeal.

An order passed by a Court for the payment of the costs connected with the execution of a commission which are recoverable from the parties to the suit, is virtually an order in favour of an officer of the Court, and may be enforced under the inherent powers conferred on the Court by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, and any proceeding taken to enforce such order is not a proceeding between the parties to the suit within the meaning of section 47 of the Code, and the order is not open to appeal. Execution second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 5th of October 1922.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Appellants.
Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In a suit for partition a preliminary decree was passed appointing a Commissioner to make a partition and to ascertain the debts and outstanding amounts and the capital and stock-in-trade of a certain shop and to take them in account in framing his proposals. That decree was the subject-matter of an appeal to this Court. While that appeal was pending, the Commissioner proceeded with his work and found that a sum of Rs. 100, settled as payable to him for executing the commission, was insufficient in consideration of his labour. He, therefore, when submitting his accounts and the list of the properties proposed to be partitioned, moved the Court to award him Rs. 800 as his fees for the work he had done. The Court thereupon ordered that Rs. 600 should be paid to him by the plaintiffs and Rs. 200 by the defendant, and that if the appeal from the preliminary decree was successful, the defendant would be entitled to recover the latter sum from the plaintiffs. It further ordered that a decree for the amount should be prepared in favour of the Commisssioner against the parties to the suit. This order was passed on the 22nd of March 1919; but no decree was actually prepared in pursuance of the above order in favour of the Commissioner. The plaintiffs made default in the payment except of a small portion of the money.

RAM CHAND v. BANK OF UPPER INDIA, L. D., DELHI.

The appeal from the preliminary decree eventually succeeded and the entire claim was ultimately dismissed by the Court of first instance on the 15th of April 1920. In the closing or final decree then prepared the direction of the 22nd of March 1919 regarding the payment of remuneration due to the Commissioner by the plaintiffs was not embodied. Meanwhile, the plaintiffs obtained an order adjudicating them insolvents, on the 24th of March 1920. They subsequently obtained an order of discharge on the 26th of January 1921. During the insolvency proceedings no mention is said to have been made by them of the amount which they were liable to pay to the Commissioner and in the schedule of proved debts prepared the amount due to the Commissioner is not stated to have been shown.

An application has since been made by the Commissioner for the execution of the order of the 22nd March 1919 by the arrest of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs opposed this application on the ground among others that, having been declared insolvents and discharged they were not liable to arrest in lieu of a debt proveable in the insolvency proceeding within the meaning of sections 34 and 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). When this objection came up for hearing the plaintiffs-judgment-debtors stated, that they were not in a position to pay any money at that time but would be able to do so after they start some business and earn some money. The Commissioner agreed to allow them time for the payment of the money due to him. The learned Subordinate Judge acceded to the request of the judgment-debtors for time and allowed them two years to pay the money, but at the same time he disallowed their objection. The judgment-debtors appealed to the District Judge who dismissed their appeal holding that no appeal was entertainable under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The preliminary question for consideration here is, whether section 47 has any application to the case. As has already been pointed out, there was no decree prepared in the case; in fact the person who was seeking redress was not even a party to the suit in which the order sought to be executed was passed. The order in question was virtually an order passed by the Court in favour of one of its officers for the payment of costs connected with the execution of a commission which were recoverable from the parties to the suit. An order of that character may be enforced by the Court under the inherent powers conferred upon it by section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure in such manner as may be thought proper. Any proceeding taken in enforcement of such an order is not a proceeding between the parties to a suit for the execution of a decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the learned District Judge was right in holding that no appeal lay to the Court below and no appeal would similarly lie here. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LIMITED, DELHI—PLAINTIFF—AND THE DIAMOND JUBILEE FLOUR MILLS COMPANY, LIMITED, DELHI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Company in liquidation—Secured creditor, rights of—Winding up order, effect of—Appeal—Objection to document admitted by First Court, whether entertainable.

The rules relating to insolvency proceedings are, as far as possible, applicable to liquidation matters. [p. 192, col. 1.]

When a Company goes into liquidation, a secured creditor may realise his security and recover therefrom the whole of his principal as well as the interest up to the date of his realisation, and not merely the amount due on the date of the winding-up order. But if he realises his security and has to prove for a balance, the remaining assets of the Company would only be liable for such principal and interest as was due on the date of the winding-up order. The hypothecated property is liable for the whole claim and it is only the liability of the remaining of assets that is affected by the winding-up order. [p. 192, cols. 1 & 2.]

A secured creditor in the case of a liquidation is on the same footing as in that of insolvency proceedings. He may, if he choose, disregard the liquidation proceedings and proceed against his security. [p. 192, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

It is too late in appeal to object to the admissibility in evidence of documents, for instance, answers to interrogatories, which have been admitted without objection in the First Court. [p. 190, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the Bank of Upper India, Limited, Delhi, against the Diamond Jubilee Flour Mills Company, Limited, Delhi, and one Ram Chand for the recovery of Rs. 1,60,914-2-7 due on account of advances made to the said Flour Mills and secured by a deed referred to as a "cash credit loan bond," dated the 24th September 1901 and executed in favour of the Bank by the said Flour Mills and Ram Chand jointly. The said Flour Mills were in liquidation when the suit was instituted and the Official Liquidator contested the suit alleging that it was premature owing to the fact that it had been brought before the expiry of six months' notice agreed upon in the deed. It was also contended that the Bank was not entitled to any interest accruing after the 24th of June 1913 on which date the Bank went into compulsory liquidation.

Ram Chand filed separate pleas supporting the Official Liquidator in his allegation that the suit was premature, and pleading further that the suit was time barred, and that he was not personally liable. Further, he contended that his land was not chargeable with this claim inasmuch as his liability had been discharged owing to the variation of the original contract in which he was only a surety. The Bank in reply traversed these pleas and, as against Ram Chand, claimed that he was the principal debtor and not a surety and was also personally liable. The Trial Court framed the following issues:—

"1. Can plaintiff demand the amount due without six months' notice in the event of any of the contingencies mentioned in paragraph 2 f (b) of the plaint?

"2. Have any of these contingencies occurred?

"3. If not, is not the suit liable to dismissal as premature being brought before the expiry of the six months from notice?

"4. Was the plaintiff able to secure his rights by intervening in an application for liquidation, and does this disentitle him to costs?

"5. Is Lala Ram Chand liable only as a surety after plaintiff has exhausted his remedy as against defendant No. 1?

"6. Is the suit against Lala Ram Chand time barred under Art. 132, Limitation Act?

"7. Do the agreements mentioned in paragraph 4 of the plaint discharge Lala Ram Chand from liability?

"8. Does Lala Ram Chand incur any personal liability beyond that attaching to the land hypothecated?

"9. Is plaintiff debarred from bringing Lala Ram Chand's land to sale by suit?

"10. Is the mortgage in contravention of the provisions of section 69, Transfer of Property Act, and therefore void, and can no suit be brought on it?"

It was ultimately held that Ram Chand was a principal and not merely a surety, and that he was not personally liable, his liability extending only to the land hypothecated by him; and the Bank's suit was decreed against both the Mills and Ram Chand to the extent of the amount claimed together with future interest as agreed in the bond. It was, however, declared that the only amount realizable by sale from the property charged was that due under the bond on the 24th of June 1913, i.e., the sum of Rs. 1,52,000 and proportionate costs, the Bank being directed to prove for the balance in insolvency proceedings, presumably liquidation proceedings being meant. The Mills were rendered liable for the Bank's costs, but Ram Chand was allowed half his costs against the Bank. Against this decree two appeals have been preferred, one, Civil Appeal No. 291 of 1917 by the Bank through Mr. C. Bevan-Petman, and the other, Civil Appeal No. 459 of 1917, by Ram Chand through Mr. Moti Sagar. In the appeal by the Bank the decision of the Trial Court that the property hypothecated was only liable to the extent of Rs. 1,52,000 was attacked. In the appeal by Ram Chand all the findings against the appellant were contested. At the hearing, however, only two points were argued; first, that on the proper construction of the deed Ram Chand was only a surety, and, secondly, that the suit was barred by limitation. The remaining points were specifically dropped by Mr. Moti Sagar. The appeals being against the same decree they will both be disposed of by this judgment and I will first take up Civil Appeal No. 459 of 1917, namely, that by Ram Chand.

It appears that the site on which the buildings belonging to the Diamond Jubilee Flour Mills were constructed belonged to Ram Chand, appellant. Ram Chand was a member of a firm called Ram Chand and Company, which firm were the Managing Agents of the Flour Mills on the date when this cash credit bond was executed. It was alleged that the contract between the executing parties was to advance to the Mills alone a sum not exceeding two lakhs, and that a proper construction of this document showed that Ram Chand only signed it as a surety, he being the owner of the land on which the Mills' premises were situated. The preamble of the deed is to the following effect:—

"An agreement made at Delhi this twenty-fourth day of September 1901 between the Diamond Jubilee Flour Mills Company, Limited, and Lala Ram Chand, the owner of the land on which its premises are built, hereafter collectively referred to as the said Company of the one part and the Bank of Upper India, Limited, Delhi Branch. * * * of the other part."

In paragraph II, it was agreed that—

"The advance shall bear compound interest at eight (8) per centum per annum calculated half-yearly, such advances to be re-paid by the 'said Company' by such recoupments as the 'said Company' may make from time to time, provided that the 'said Company' shall not borrow any sum from any other person or Banker whatsoever for the purpose of making such recoupments except on the expiry of the six months' notice hereinafter mentioned. The said Bank shall be entitled to the re-payment of all principal and interest due to it on account of such advances on giving six months' written notice of its desire to close the account, provided that such account may be closed without such notice at any time if the said Company goes into liquidation, stops its Mill's working, works at a loss or commits breach of any of the terms of this agreement * * *"

In paragraph III, it is stated that—

"As security for the said advances and interest or any balance thereof that may be due from time to time the said Diamond Jubilee Flour Mills Company, Limited, hereby grants unto the said Bank a first lien on certain property specified including buildings plant, machinery, tools, furniture, stock in trade, raw materials, etc."

It then proceeds to recite as follows:—

"And the said Lala Ram Chand hereby grants unto the said Bank a first lien free from all encumbrances and charges on the land on which the said Company's premises are situated."

Then follow the boundaries.

It was contended that the expression "the said Company" which was declared in the preamble to refer to the Flour Mills and Ram Chand collectively, has not been strictly employed in that sense throughout the various clauses of the deed, and that, therefore, it was open to Ram Chand to prove by oral evidence that he was acting merely as a surety when he signed the deed. In this connection attention was drawn to the evidence of Mr. G. H. Webb at page 71 of the paper-book. This gentleman had been in the employ of the Bank when this contract was entered into. He was examined in 1916 or something like 15 years after the execution of the deed. He was examined on interrogatories and a copy of the deed was shown to him. His evidence is to the effect that Ram Chand was only a surety to the extent of the land hypothecated by him. Objection was taken to the admissibility of this evidence by Mr. Petman. Mr. Moti Sagar contended that this evidence having been admitted without objection could not now be objected to in appeal and in support of his contention he cited Shahzadi Begam v. Secretary of State (1), in which it was held that it was too late in appeal to object to the admissibility in evidence of a document which had been admitted without objection in the First Court. It seems to me that this authority is in point, and that the evidence of Mr. Webb must be regarded as admissible at this stage. Mr. Webb's testimony, however, is the only evidence supporting Ram Chand's claim that he was a mere surety. Mr. Petman contended that Mr. Webb's evidence was really worthless. He was a dismissed employee of the Bank (which appears to be correct) and was speaking from memory. After a perusal of this gentleman's evidence, it seems to me impossible to accept it as conclusively proving that Ram Chand was merely a surety and not a principal when he executed the cash credit bond in question. The land of which he was the owner, and on which the premises belonging to the Flour Mills stood, had been leased to the Flour Mills by Ram Chand on a 99 years' lease. He was a member of the firm who were the Managing Agents of the Mills and from the correspondence on the record, printed at pages 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 of the printed paper-book, there can be no doubt that Ram Chand was well aware of the real nature of the transaction. He was aware that the Bank was agreeing to advance monies to the Flour Mills on the security of the property belonging to the Mills as well as on the security of the land, of which he was the owner. He himself went into the witness-box at the end of the case and has stated that he signed this deed as a surety. He admits, however, that the land belongs to him and not to Ram Chand and Co., and that the Mills used to send a balance-sheet to the Bank every year. He admits having signed the document, and that his signature refers to his land only. He, however, states that he did not read the deed and further that he only read it after the suit had been filed. I find it impossible to believe this evidence. The document itself appears to me to be perfectly clear, and under it Ram Chand hypothecated his land to the Bank not as a surety but as a principal, and I would hold accordingly. In this view of the case, Ram Chand being a principal and not a surety the question whether any act or acts on the part of the Bank discharged him does not arise, and it is, therefore, not necessarry to discuss Mr. Moti Sagar's arguments on this point.

The second point taken by the learned Advocate for the appellant was that the suit was barred by limitation. It was contended that a breach of the conditions entered in the deed took place before April 1902 and that as the suit was not brought till the 30th April 1914 it was barred under Art. 132. In support of this the balance-sheet for the year ending 30th April 1902, printed at pages 50 and 51 of the paper-book, was referred to. There, on the debtor's side, is entered an item of Rs. 16,248-14-6 as "other loans as drafts not enumerated above." Next, an entry dated the 27th of January 1902, printed at page 3 of the paper-book was referred to as showing that the Flour Mills had, to the knowledge of the Bank, incurred a loan of Rs. 5,000 from another source which had been paid into the Bank. Reliance was placed on Sham Sundar v. Abiul Ahad (2) and Sitab Chand v. Hyder Malla (3) as authorities for the proposition that time commences to run from the date of the first default. With these authorities I am in accord. The question is, however, whether the item of Rs. 5,000 referred to has been shown to have been a loan. The entry at page 3 shows that a hundi was discounted by the Bank for Rs. 5,000 the hundi being drawn on Radha Kishen-Hazari Lal, Meerut. As pointed out by the learned District Judge it has not been shown that this amounted to a borrowing from the Meerut firm. The Mills may have been due this amount from Radha Kishen-Hazari Lal at Meerut for goods supplied, and this transaction may have been nothing more than the ordinary trade method of adjusting mutual accounts and purchases. In my opinion it has not been proved that the Flour Mills borrowed this or any other sums, for payment to the Bank, and that, therefore, no breach of the covenant not to borrow from any other person has taken place, and I, therefore, am of opinion that the suit is not barred by time.

The other points raised in the grounds of appeal having been dropped by Mr. Moti Sagar, in my view of the questions referred to above, Ram Chand's appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

I now turn to the appeal by the Bank, Civil Appeal No. 291 of 1917. Mr. Moti Sagar raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal was bad, in that it had been filed by the Bank of Upper India, which Bank had gone into liquidation, and that, therefore, it was only the Official Liquidator who could appeal. This contention was not supported by any affidavit or other proof, and Mr. Petman informed the Court that, prior to the institution of the appeal, he had corresponded with the Agent of the Bank. In these circumstances, this objection must be overruled.

The point for determination in this appeal is, whether the District Judge is right in declaring that the Bank can only recover Rs. 1,52,000 and proportionate costs by sale of the properties hypothecated, and must prove for the remainder in the liquidation proceedings. Mr. Petman contended that the Bank being a secured creditor was not bound to prove for any portion of its claim in the liquidation proceedings. He contended that the rules relating to insolvency proceedings were applicable to liquidations and in support referred to Lindley on Companies; In re Joint Stock Discount Co., Warrant Finance Company's case (4), in which it was held that a secured creditor cannot be deprived of his security until he has been paid in full the principal, interest, and costs due thereon, In re David Lloyd & Co., Lloyd v. David Lloyd & Co. (5), where it was held by Jessel, M. R., that as a rule a mortgagee has a right to relalize his security; and in Humber Ironworks and Ship-building Company, Warrant Finance Company's case (6), where Sir G. M. Gifford, L. J., held that the creditor proves in the winding-up as in bankruptcy, for whatever the amount of the principal and interest up to a particular date may be; but that is for the purpose of convenience in the administration of the winding-up, and does not and is not intended to affect any other rights which the creditor may have, and does not amount to an appropriation in any shape or form.

Mr. Petman then referred to section 16 (5) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and pointed out that the power of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security is specially reserved under the Bankruptcy Laws, and in further support of his contention he referred to—

Shridharnarayan v. Atmaram Govind (7), Shridhar Narayan v. Krishnaji (8), Gopi Nath v. Gur Prasad (9), In re Wyse, Ex parte Chowksey, (10) and Lang v. Heptullabhai (11).

It is not necessary to discuss these authorities as, in my opinion, the position is perfectly clear. As far as possible, the rules of bankruptcy have been held applicable to liquidation matters. When a Company goes into liquidation a secured creditor may realize his security and prove for any balance there may be outstanding. If he realizes his security and has to prove for a balance the remaining assets of the Company would only be liable for such principal and interest as was due on the date of the winding-up order. A secured creditor in the case of a liquidation is on the same footing as in that of insolvency proceedings. He may, if he chooses disregard the liquidation proceedings and proceed against his security and that is the position taken up by the Bank in the present case.

Mr. Moti Sagar referred to Ram Saran Das v, Basheshar Nath (12), where it was held that the—

"Liability created by a mortgage can be and is affected by the winding-up of the mortgagor Company so far at least that interest subsequent to the order of winding-up does not continue to be a charge on the assets. For interest subsequent to the winding-up order until payment, the general rule is that they only receive interest after all debts have been paid in full."

The correctness of this proposition was strenuously attacked by Mr. Petman, and it certainly seems to me open to doubt as I am of opinion that a secured creditor can, if he chooses, realise his security and recover therefrom the whole of his principal as well as the interest up to the date of the realization. The property hypothecated would thus be liable for the whole claim and it is only the liability of the remaining assets that could be affected by the winding-up order. The present case is only concerned with the liability of the hypothecated or mortgaged properties and it seems to me that these properties are liable to be sold in satisfaction of the entire claim and not merely for the amount due on the date of the winding up order. It was also contended that interest was not claimable after the winding-up order as the property of a Company in liquidation vested in the Official Liquidator, and that, therefore, in the present case the equity of redemption vested in the Official Liquidator of the Flour Mills on the date of the winding-up order. Doubtless, the property did so vest—but the Official Liquidator is in no better position than the Flour Mills. He can redeem the property by paying up all the monies secured by the deed in question. He cannot force the secured creditor to take less than the amount due at the date of redemption. The property is charged with the monies due according to the terms of the hypothec and continues to be so charged until such monies have been paid up in full according to those terms.

In any event, it is perfectly clear that the portion of the hypothecated property belonging to Ram Chand, i.e., the land, was not, and could not be, affected by the fact that the Flour Mills went into liquidation. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be accepted with costs and the Bank must be given a decree for the whole amount of the claim together with future interest as agreed till realization, recoverable from the entire property hypothecated under the deed, and I would order accordingly.

Martineau, J.—I concur.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs for joint possession with the defendant of some lands. The facts lie within a narrow compass. The lands are said to have comprised an occupancy holding in the possession of a tenant, the landlords being both the plaintiffs and the defendant who are co-owners. The defendant brought a suit for his share of the rent against the tenant in occupation, obtained a decree and, in execution of that decree, purchased the land himself and entered into possession in August 1901. The effect of the decree was merely that of a money-decree and the defendant purchased only the right, title and interest of the tenant. The present suit was commenced on the 23rd of June 1917. It is found that the holding was a non-transferable occupancy holding which was purchased by the defendant. It is conceded that the defendant did not acquire any interest under section 22, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act so as to entitle him to resist the claim of the plaintiffs to joint possession, if there is no bar of limitation. The Court of first instance gave a decree for joint possession with regard to one plot only in favour of the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decree and has dismissed the suit entirely on the ground of limitation.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs, who are the appellants in this Court, that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous. It is argued that the plaintiffs and the defendant being co-sharers, there could be no limitation running against the plaintiffs by the occupation of the land by the defendant unless there was an actual ouster; and it is contended that, because the defendant says that the plaitinffs are entitled to their share of the rent of the land as proprietors of the mahal, there has been no ouster and hence the suit is not barred by the Statute of Limitation. The sole question, therefore, is whether, under the circumstances of this case, the defendant has succeeded in establishing the plea of limitation. There is no doubt that where possession can be referred to a lawful title, it cannot be said that it was illegal and that it was adverse to a co-owner. In order to have the Statute of Limitation run against a co-owner, there must be actual ouster or some act equivalent to ouster. It has to be seen, therefore, whether the taking of possession by the defendant was under a lawful title. The plaintiffs and the defendant as co-sharers were no doubt entitled to receive rent from the tenant in occupation of the land according to their shares. No one of the co-sharers had a right to take actual possession of the land. When the defendant purchased the non-transferable occupancy right, such purchase did not confer any title on him, and when he went into possession, such possession was illegal against his co-sharers. According to the authorities of this Court, the plaintiffs were entitled to seek for possession according to their shares in the land from the date when the defendant took possession of the property. It cannot be said that, when the defendant took possession by virtue of the purchase which he sets up, he took possession in the exercise of his right as a co-sharer in the mahal and that there was no ouster of the plaintiffs with regard to the right to possession of the land. As a matter of fact, the taking of possession of the land by the defendant gave rise to the plaintiffs' right to joint possession and so the defendant's possession, of the entire land was equivalent to an ouster of the plaintiffs. Limitation, therefore, commenced to run against the plaintiffs as regards the right to possession of the land from the date when the defendant took actual possession. It is urged that, because the defendant did not deny the proprietary right of the plaintiffs, there could not have been an ouster of the plaintiffs. Defendant, however, does not dispute the plaintiffs' right to receive rent according to their shares. But he claims a tenant's interest by virtue of his purchase of the right of the tenant and he has been in possession adversely of this limited interest for more than twelve years; and it seems to me that the defendant can acquire such limited interest by adverse possession. It makes no difference that he is a co-sharer of the plaintiffs as landlords. There is no difference in principle, in my opinion, between the present case and the cases of Probhabati Dasi v. Taibatunnessa Chaudhurani (1) and Panchkari Chattopadhya v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (2) as regards the acquisition of a limited interest by the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—In the present case the holder of a money-decree applied during execution proceedings that his money might be realised by a farm of the land of the judgment-debtor, and the question was referred to the Collector who reported on 19th November 1917, that a farm for nine years would satisfy the decree.

was published disallowing such a farm in the case of land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe and the Collector applied to withdraw his suggestion and the Subordinate Judge rejected the decree-holders' application for execution by order of 7th January 1919, which order was confirmed by the District Judge on the ground that the Financial Commissioner's decision concluded the matter. The decree-holder appeals.

Since that time, however, the view taken in this judgment has been dissented from in Salih Mohammad v. Mehar Singh (2), and by a Full Bench of this Court in Datar Kaur v. Ram Rattan (3) in which it was held that a Civil Court can order the temporary alienation of the land of a member of an agricultural tribe in satisfaction of a money-decree, and although Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain for the judgment-debtor doubts whether this decision is sound we consider ourselves bound by it and we, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the orders of both Courts, remand the case to the First Court with a direction to dispose of the application in the light of the High Court decision and Salih Mohammad v. Mehar Singh (2), again referring to the Collector if necessary.

We make no order as to costs as the appeal has not been necessitated by any act on of the judgment-debtor.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Question not finally decided—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Declaration, suit for—Cause of action—Assertion of title—Limitation, commencement of.

A taluqdar brought a suit for resumption of certain muafi plots against the plaintiff. In that suit defendant put in an application claiming to be a partner with plaintiff in the under-proprietary right. The suit was decreed as against the plaintiff only, and the question whether the defendant was a partner with the plaintiff was pronounced to be one for a Civil Court and he was discharged from the suit. More than six years after the date of the defendant's application in the resumption suit, plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the defendant had no superior or inferior right or co-partnership with plaintiff in the plots which were the subject-matter of the resumption suit:

Held, (1) that the question of the status of the defendant as regards the plaintiff not having been decided in the previous suit by the Revenue Court, it was not res judicata;

(2) that the defendant's plea in the resumption suit that he was a partner with the plaintiff furnished the latter with a cause of action and limitation began to run from the date of defendant's application and that the suit was, therefore, barred by time under Art. 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 3rd September 1921, upholding that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 30th May 1921.

Messrs. Haider Husain and J. K. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal by two plaintiffs whose suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below.

The suit was one for a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 against the defendant No. 1 to the effect that defendant No. 1 has no superior or inferior right or co-partnership jointly with the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the four plots Nos. 772, 768, 667 and 770.

There was a suit brought by the taluqdars for resumption of muafi which was decided on 29th November 1915. By that decree the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were declared to be under-proprietors of plots Nos. 772 and 768 and tenants of plots Nos. 667 and 770. Plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the strength of this decree issued a notice of ejectment against defendant No. 1 as their sub-tenant. But defendant No. 1 claimed a suit to contest the notice alleging himself to be a co-sharer with the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. This contention was upheld and the notice was cancelled on 19th March 1918. Hence the present suit.

The question to be decided between the parties is whether Abid Ali, defendant No. 1, (who is now dead and represented by his seven sons) possesses the same rights as the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being a co-sharer with them as under-proprietor of Nos. 768 and 772 and a partner in their tenancy of Nos. 667 and 770 as he alleged, or whether, as plaintiffs say, he is a sub-tenant of plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. But it has to be decided whether this issue can be tried. The bars alleged are res judicata and limitation. Lastly, there is a question whether the relief sought, which is a declaration and, therefore, in the discretion of the Court, ought to be granted.

The way the question of res judicata arises is this. When the talugdars brought their suit for resumption of muafi they made plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 parties to it. Defendant No. 1, however, put in an application claiming, as he claims now, to be a partner with plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. He was made a party but ultimately the decree was given only against plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. As regards the defendant No. 1 it was said that his name was not entered in the papers where he was recorded as a sub-tenant only. The question whether he was a partner was pronounced to be one for a Civil Court and he was discharged from the suit. There is no res judicata here. Apart from all technical objections, such as the array of parties in the Revenue Court as co-defendants, I find that the present question was not decided in that case. What was decided by the Revenue Court was that the plaintiffs talugdars were entitled to get the relief they sought from the parties whom they themselves had named, and who are the only ones entered in the revenue papers. I think there was a decision that Abid Ali had no independent rights in these plots, but that the Court refused to decide whether or not he had any partnership right.

The question of limitation arises in this way. Art. 120 applies. The suit must be brought within six years from the time when the right to sue accrued. Now, in the resumption case when Abid Ali pleaded that he was a partner it is quite clear that that plea gave a cause of action for the present suit. The present suit, therefore, ought to have been brought within six years of that time. Now Abid Ali's application (Exhibit II) is dated 25th May 1914. The present suit was instituted on 16th December 1920 six months beyond time. Therefore, without deciding the main issue, I dismiss the appeal with costs on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think the District Judge was right in holding that the suit was barred under section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, X of 1876. The plaintiff having purchased certain property from one Kasam Punja made an application to the Collector, which must have been due to the fact that he could not get possession of the property which he thought he had purcased. The Collector replied that as Kasam Punja, the plaintiff's vendor, had not proved his ownership at the time of the Suburban Survey inquiry, it was held to be Government land. Therefore, the application had held a right to the said land and asked for a sanad in respect of the same could not hold good because the land was Government land. That refusal to grant a sanad was the cause of action on which the plaintiff relies when he filed this suit.

It is also clear from the notice he gave to the Secretary of State under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the notice was given because his application to the Collector had been rejected. The plaintiff could have appealed under section 203 of the Land Revenue Code but he omitted to do so. Section 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act clearly prevents us from entertaining any suit on account of the Collector's refusal to grant the plaintiff a sanad, as the plaintiff had to prove that, previously to filing this suit, he had presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force, as within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present. He presented no such appeals. This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (5), 58, 63, 194 (3)—Co-sharer entitled to collect rent—Ejectment suit by him, if maintainable.

A co-sharer who is entitled to collect the entire rent of a tenant is, for the purposes of the Agra Tenancy Act, a land-holder and is entitled to eject the tenant. [p. 198, col. 1.]

Jhamman v. Farrukhabad, Sel. Dec. No. 2 of 1910, followed.

Section 194, sub-section (3), applies only to cases where one of two or more co-sharers is not entitled to sue alone. [p. 198, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 29th September 1921.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Dr. M.L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment under section 63 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff is alone entitled to collect the entire rent from the tenants. This has been clearly found by the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge, however, was of opinion that though the plaintiff was entitled to the entire rent he was not entitled to eject the defendant without the concurrence of the entire body of co-sharers. It is hardly necessary to point out that this view, if correct, would be productive of great inconvenience, especially in the eastern districts where co-sharers are often very numerous. The learned District Judge gives two reasons in support of his decision. The first is that section 194 only makes an exception in the case of money-suits, and the other that the word landholder does not occur in section 58 of the Tenancy Act. The reference to section 194 is doubtless to sub-section (3). This sub-section, however, only applies where one of two or more co-sharers is not entitled to sue alone which is the whole point in dispute in this case. It is quite true, as the learned District Judge says, that section 58 does not contain the word landholder. There is no reason why it should, as it only specifies the grounds of ejectment. The operative section under which the tenant is ejected is section 62, and the very opening words of this section are "when a landholder desires to eject a tenant." Landholder is defined in section 4(5) as the person to whom rent is payable, and it is, in my opinion, clear law that the co-sharer who is entitled to collect the entire rent of a particular tenant is also entitled to eject him. He is the landholder for the purposes of the Act. This view was also taken by the Board of Revenue in Jhamman v. Farrukhabad (1) a decision which has been followed in many subsequent cases. I am told by Mr. Agarwala that this decision has recently been dissented from by the present junior member in a ruling which has not yet been reported. However that may be, it is in my opinion good law. It was finally urged by Mr. Agarwala for the respondents that the District Judge's decision does not cover all the pleas which were urged before him. I have accordingly been through the grounds of appeal with the Counsel and it is found that the only plea that can be said to be not covered by the judgment is that contained in paragraph 6 of the memorandum of appeal. In that the defendant urged that he had acquired occupancy rights. This point is not covered either directly or by implication in the judgment of the Court below and the learned Judge does not say that it was not urged before him. I accordingly remit an issue under O. XLI, r. 25, to the lower Appellate Court:— Has Musammat Murta Kuer, the defendant, acquired occupancy right in the land in suit?

On receipt of the finding, which should be submitted by 30th June, ten days will be allowed for objections. The finding will be decided on the evidence already on the record.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v) (e) and Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Temple, if has market value.

A temple which is inalienable and absolutely devoted in perpetuity to religious purposes has no market-value at all as such within the meaning of section 7 (v) (e) of the Court-Fees Act and must be dealt with for the purposes of the Act as a matter "not otherwise provided for" under Schedule II, Art. 17 (vi) of the Act. [p. 201, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether a temple is a "house" within the meaning of section 7 (v) (e) of the Court-Fees Act.

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 20th February 1922, of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, East Tanjore, at Mayavaram, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1921.

This petition came on for hearing on the 8th of January 1923, upon perusing the petition and an order of the lower Court and the record in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. *K. S. RAJAGOPALA NAIDU v. RAMASUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Spencer, J.—The plaintiffs in this representative suit claim to have an exclusive right to manage certain Devastanams mentioned in the plaint and to appoint and remove a Dharmakartha for those temples whenever occasion arises. They pray for a declaration accordingly and ask for delivery of possession by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of all the properties of the suit temples and for payment of certain amounts that may be found due on examination of accounts of the income and expenditure.

The question in this civil revision petition is how such a suit should be valued. The Subordinate Judge has valued it according to the estimate made by a Commissioner of the value of the temples and all the properties attached to them which amounts to more than Rs. 2,00,000. The first plaintiff as petitioner contends that he is not liable to pay Court-fees upon the valuation of the temple properties according to their market value. He maintains that he can value the relief under section 7, clause 4 (c) of the Court Fees Act as he pleases, as the only right in issue in the suit is the right pertaining to trustees of managing the suit properties. In Civil Revision Petition No. 862 of 1917 a similar question came before a Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and myself, the question then being whether a plaintiff who sued for joint possession along with other trustees was bound to pay Court-fees ad valorem as in a suit for possession falling under section 7, clause 5, upon the market-value of the temple and its properties. We made a reference to a Full Bench upon the point. When the reference came before the Full Bench the civil revision petition was withdrawn. The question which was a very important one, upon which Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and I differed, thus remained undecided. Most of the authorities were collected in the reference made by my learned brother and myslf, and after full consideration I expressed an opinion that the plaintiff's valuation was conclusive and should be accepted under section 7, clause 4 (c) and (d) and Art. 17, clause (vi) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act. I pointed out in that case that the plaintiff was only asking for such possession as he was entitled to on the footing of a trustee without having any personal interest in the trust property and for such possession as the holder of the office was capable of, the ownership of the temple properties being vested in the idol. If a plaintiff sets up any proprietary right over temple properties I was willing to concede that he must pay Court-fees valuing his relief of possession upon the value of the temple properties. I then held that the cases in Sonachala v. Manika (1) and Appeal No. 10 of 1911 were distinguishable and I quoted Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinbandhu Thakur (2) and certain other authorities for the proposition that if a plaintiff claims no higher right than that of administering endowed properties he should not be made to pay Court-fees on the same footing as a plaintiff who sues for possession claiming rights as proprietor. The question is an important one, and I am not satisfied that Appeal No. 10 of 1911 and Second Appeal No. 1410 of 1917 in which it was held that the temple and its properties must be valued were corectly decided. It is advisable also that in a matter where no party is more concerned than Government who are interested in the payment of the full Court-fees, the Advocate-General should have notice and should be heard in the matter.

I, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question what are the Court-fees legally payable on the plaint in this suit, Original Suit No. 28 of 1920, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram?

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I am also of the opinion that question should be referred to the Full Bench. The matter was fully discussed and the authorities in support of the rival cotentions were set forth in the referring judgments of my learned brother and Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in Civil Revision Petition No. 862 of 1917, and I, therefore, refrain from covering the same ground again. But there is one point to which I, would like to advert. It has been stated that, in the present case, the fee was paid on the value of the subject-matter so far as it consists of "lands" under section 7 (c) (v) of the Court-Fees Act. The plaintiff, however, has not paid the fee payable on the market-value of the temple in question. The Commissioner appointed valued the temple at Rs. 2,22,000 odd. The estimate was based, inter alia, upon the costs of the materials used, on the ground that by that process the "market-value" of the structure could be ascertained.

(1) 8 M. 516; 3 Ind. [illegible]
(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 771; 19 C. [illegible]

Whatever may be held to be the correct view in regard to the more general question discussed in the judgment in Civil Revision Petition No. 862 of 1917, it seems to me that there is considerable force in the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant, that the structures constituting a temple, which are the abodes of the idols, are not "houses" under section 7 (c) (v) or which "a market-value" can be placed under sub-clause (c). A "house," according to Murray's Dictionary, no doubt, includes a "a place of worship, a temple, or a church". I do not think we shall be justified in turning to English decisions for interpreting the word "house" as they deal with particular Statutes where the word occurs. As Stroud, in his Judicial Dictionary, points out a church consecrated according to the rites of the Established Church was held not to be a "house" under section 105, Metrop. Man. Act, 1885, whereas a Dissenting Chapel was held to be such a "house". Again, a consecrated church, though held not to be a "house" within the section just cited, was nevertheless held to be a "house" qua a building line which a local authority has a right to prescribe. I do not think we can derive much assistance from the definitions or interpretations given above in construing the word "house" in the section of the Court Fees Act.

I am of the opinion that under the Court-Fees Act a temple which is mainly the abode of the deity cannot be said to be "house", the "market-value" of which is capable of being ascertained. A temple being extra commercium is ex hypothesi incapable of having a market-value. It is well-known that, to construct structures similar to numerous temples in India, sums amounting to lakhs or tens of lakhs of rupees would be required, and I do not think that the Legislature intended that a Court-fee should be levied on what is described before us as the "market-value" of the temples. I am therefore, inclined to hold that it is not possible to estimate at a money value, a temple and the idols in it, and that, in any event, so far as the subject-matter comprises the aforesaid, the case falls within 17 (v) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, V of 1922.

This petition came on for hearing in pursuance of an Order of Reference to a Full Bench, dated the 23rd January 1923.

OPINION.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is a reference to a Full Bench on the question of the Court-fee payable on a suit by the plaintiff claiming to be a trustee of a temple against the defendant who is in possession of the temple, also claiming to be a trustee. The property in question has been valued by the plaintiff for purposes of Court-fee at a certain amount, but the Comissioner has reported that the amount is too small solely on the ground that the temple buildings ought to be valued at their cost of construction less, presumably, something for depreciation. It is contended by the plaintiff that the temple buildings as such are not assessable at all for purposes of Court-fee. The section of the Court-Fees Act alleged to be applicable is section 7 (v) (c) which provides that, where the subject-matter is a house or garden, it has to be valued "according to the market-value of the house or garden." It is first argued, and with considerable force, that the temple is not a house at all. I do not think it necessary to go into the question of what is and what is not "a house" or whether any part of this temple could be properly included within the proper definition of the word "house." I think it better to leave that question over until it arises definitely for decision, for we have not in this case the full facts as to the exact nature of the buildings in qustion and the use to which they are or can be put. But, it is further argued that this temple, even if it can be considered as a house, has no market value. "Market value" has been defined in England as meaning what it would fetch in the market under the state of things existing at the time, and that definition is to be found repeated with great clearness in Manmatha Nath Mitter v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3). That was a case under the Land Acquisition Act and what was acquired was a road and compensation was claimed in respect of that road based on the value of the land on which the road stood when it ceased to be a road, for agricultural or building purposes or the like: and their Lordships of the Privy Council made it quite clear that, apart from the fact that the Land Acquisition Act itself in terms prohibited such considerations, the principle of compensation based on the "market value" which is the wording in that Act as well as in the Court Fees Act, is that things have to be taken as they stand at the time.

Now, this temple is an ancient temple and its history dates at least thousand years back, and there seems to be no doubt, that the temple is devoted absolutely and in perpetuity to religious purposes. On those facts we have to enquire whether there is a market for such a thing. In my judgment, such enquiry results in the conclusion there is no market and that it can have no market-value at all. The principle applied by the Commissioner, when he has taken as the market-value, what may be called the hypothetical construction value, is, in my judgment, entirely wrong. He has got to find the market-value of the thing as a temple at the time. It is not suggested before us, on behalf of the respondent or on behalf of the Crown, who attended as amicus curiæ, that in fact there is any market for such things. I think also that it would be conclusive against such a contention, that the property is inalienable and was devoted in perpetuity to religious purposes.

On these grounds, I come to the conclusion, that there is no market value at all for this temple as such. That being so, it does not come under that section of the Act, and has to be dealt with as a matter "not otherwise provided for"—under Schedule II (17),—except that, apparently, there is in this case some market-value for some part of the property claimed, and in respect of that the plaintiff has put on a valuation. There is no appeal in respect of that valuation by him, and, therefore, that valuation stands and must be taken as correct.

Taking this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider the question specifically referred to us by the Referring Bench, namely, whether, on a claim by a trustee for possession of trust properties for the purpose of proper administration of that trust, he will have to pay Court-fee on the value of the trust property, or whether in that case he is only bound to pay the nominal amount of Rs. 10 or Rs. 15. This question had been referred on a former occasion to a Full Bench of this Court, but it was not decided then, and, owing to the facts of this case, it shares the same fate now.

The answer to the question referred to the Court is, the Court-fee legally payable are the fees already paid.

Oldfield, J.—I entirely agree.

Ramesam, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a Single Judge of this Court, dated the 22nd March 1918, dismissing an appeal from the Subordinate Judge by whose decision the plaintiff's suit which had been dismissed by the Munsif was remanded to the Munsif for a fresh trial.

The facts of the case, so far as they are material to the present appeal, are these: In February 1886 the plaintiffs' ancestors mortgaged 12 bighas of land over which they had occupancy rights to the ancestors of the defendants under a usufructuary mortgage and put the defendants' predecessors in possession, and out of the proceeds of the land they were to satisfy themselves under the terms of the mortgage in lieu of receiving interest on the money advanced. In the same year, about six months later, in August, a fractional proprietor of the property by name Kailas Chandra, who had in the previous year obtained a rent-decree against the mortgagors, took out execution proceedings and the property, the subject of the mortgage, as well as other property belonging to the mortgagors, was sold in execution of that decree. The sale took place on the 7th June 1886, the property having been attached in the previous March and the sale was confirmed on the 27th August 1886. The suit by the proprietor being one by a fractional proprietor only entitled him to a money-decree and not a rent-decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore, what he purchased at the sale was merely the mortgagors' equity of redemption subject to encumbrances, that is to say, he purchased the right, title and interest which the mortgagors had and the interest so transferred to him was subject to the mortgage of the defendants which was still subsisting, but it seems to me that from that moment the plaintiffs lost all right, title and interest they had in the property and that that interest was transferred to Kailas Chandra. No steps were taken by the mortgagors to set aside that sale and in the year 1892 Kailas Chandra sold the equity of redemption which he had purchased at the auction-sale in execution of his decree to the mortgagees themselves and, therefore, the situation was that the mortgagees' interest as such merged in their greater interest as proprietors of the occupancy right. So matters went on, and in the year 1910 there were Survey operations in which a portion of the land was recorded as in the possession of the plaintiffs and another portion was recorded as in the possession of the defendants. Then, in the year 1915, the plaintiffs who represent the original mortgagors brought this suit claiming to redeem the property and they tendered to the defendants the sum of Rs. 240 which was the amount of the loan and, on the defendants refusing to accept it, paid the money into Court and claimed to be entitled to redeem the property and get possession. In their plaint the plaintiffs allege that the purchase at auction in the year 1886 made by Babu Kailas Chandra and the subsequent sale by him of the equity of redemption to the mortgagees, who are now represented by the defendants, was fraudulent, collusive and illegal, and they say that no process of execution of the decree was served nor was delivery of possession at all made in the locality or at the house or on the person of the plaintiffs, and that neither Kailas Chandra nor the defendants ever came into possession of the said land in the capacity of purchaser at auction-sale or purchaser under the sale-deed and that the defendants have all along been in possession in the capacity of mortgagees, that the entire proceeds of the execution of the decree, sale and delivery of possession have been surreptitiously and fraudulently taken and that the purchase at sale and under the sale-deed, which are quite fraudulent and illegal, cannot be a bar to the plaintiffs' redemption.

When the matter came before the Munsif he pointed out very properly that, on the plaint as it stood, it was not contended that the purchase at auction by Kailas Chandra was a nullity, and he pointd out that, if the sale was a valid and subsisting sale until it had been set aside, and could not be treated as a nullity which in fact the plaintiffs did not claim to do, it was a bar to any claim to redemption until it was set aside by a Court of competent jurisdiction. It was not very clear from the plaint whether the sale to Kailas Babu included all the lands in suit and, therefore, the learned Munsif ascertained for himself from the record whether this was so or not and found that in fact the purchase by Kailas Chandra did include all the lands in suit as well as some others. The result was, according to the Munsif, that Kailas Babu purchased the equity of redemption, which was all that was left to the plaintiffs at that time, and that this he sold to the defendants who were at that time the mortgagees or rehandars under the usufructuary mortgage-deed of the plaintiffs. It appeared to him, therefore, that it was unnecessary in this case to go into any evidence at all because no suit had been brought to set aside the sale and, as it was not claimed that the sale was void and could be left out of consideration altogether, the plaintiffs were clearly not entitled to redeem.

On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, he remanded the suit back to the Munsif for a fresh trial by allowing the parties to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases and the ground upon which he did that was that the lower Court did not allow the plaintiffs to prove that the decree obtained by Kailas Chandra was fraudulent and invalid or that the defendants were mortgagees in possession. Now, it is obvious from this that the Subordinate Judge made a mistake in supposing that the plaintiffs had ever questioned the validity of the decree under which the execution sale took place in 1886. If it had been contended that the decree itself was a nullity then, no doubt, that would have been a matter for evidence. But no such allegation was made in the plaint at all. The only contention in the plaint was that the auction-purchase by Kailas Chandra was fraudulent and collusive and illegal and not that it was a sale under a decree which in itself was not operative nor was it indeed alleged in the plaint that the sale itself was void. All that was alleged was that the sale was fraudulent and collusive and, therefore, such as might upon proper proceedings being taken possibly be set aside. But as no proceedings had been taken to set it aside and as the period for taking such proceedings, which in the case of fraud would be three years, had passed from the time when the sale took place or when the plaintiffs knew of the fraud it was clear that there was nothing more that could be done to assist the plaintiffs to get rid of the sale.

An appeal was brought from the decision of the Subordinate Judge to a Judge of this Court and he also seems to have been under the impression, no doubt misled by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, that what was in question in the case was the validity not of the sale but of the decree under which Kailas Babu's auction-purchase took place. The main attack upon the validity of the purchase was that there had been no service of notice to the judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code and that in the absence of any such notice to the defendants the Executing Court had no authority to sell the property and was acting without jurisdiction so that the sale was a nulity. I have already said that it was not specifically raised in the pleadings that the sale was a nullity but the question appears to have been treated in the lower Courts as if such a plea had been put forward. When the learned Judge of this Court came to deal with the case he said: "If the decree (I call attention to the word decree) of 1886 obtained by Kailas Babu was obtained without issue of summons in the suit and if the sale was held without issue of notice then there was no representation at all of the parties interested and the Court's jurisdiction to proceed with the trial was ousted" and he says that evidence must be taken in order to ascertain whether the decree was obtained without issue of summons and notice upon the defendants. He concludes: "If the plaintiffs succeed in proving this then they are entitled to regard the decree and the sale as nullities and to proceed to establish their claim to redemption. If they fail, then the question will arise whether the defendants having purchased the equity of redemption, if they did purchase it, are entitled to resist redemption on the principle of Pancham Lal v. Kishun Pershad (1)." He points out that this is a debatable point but one which, so far as this Court is concerned, has been settled by the decision in Sheo Narain Ojha v. Ram Jatan Ojha (2).

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 47; 14 C. W. N. 579; 12 C. L. J. 574.
(2) 41 Ind. Cas. 532; 2 P. L. J. 587; 1 P. L. W. 729; (1917) Pat. 373.

So far as the decision of the learned Judge is concerned, I do not think there could be anything to complain about it if in fact it were based upon a true apprehension and appreciation of the facts of this case. And if, in fact, it were alleged and proved that there had been no issue of summons in the suit upon the parties, then clearly the plaintiffs would be entitled to treat the decree and all subsequent proceedings arising therefrom as a nullity, but that never was the case from start to finish and the only question, so far as the validity of any part of the proceedings is concerned, was the question whether the sale not the decree was a nullity or merely voidable.

A considerable argument was addressed to this Court on both sides as to whether the omission to issue notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code was such a defect as would render the subsequent sale proceedings absolutely null and void or whether it was merely an irregularity which, whilst entitling the plaintiffs to have the sale set aside on proper proceedings being brought, did not have the larger effect of rendering the sale absolutely void. That might be a question of some nicety but it is unnecessary in this case for the Court to decide that point because, under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 22, it appears that the Court executing the decree is only required to issue the notice there mentioned in cases where the application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree, and from the documentary exhibits put in in this case it appears that the date of the decree in favour of Kailas Chandra was the 4th September 1885 and that the application for execution was the 20th February 1886 so that no question at all could arise as to whether the sale was void or merely voidable owing to the absence of the notice under O. XXI, r. 22, because in the particular circumstances of this case that rule has no application. It seems to me, therefore, that the defendants' appeal in this case must succeed and that the decree of the Munsif must be restored because the question about which so much argument has been put before the Court turns out not to be a question which really arises. The result is that the validity of the sale, so far as any fault in procedure is concerned, is unimpeachable and not only is it not void but it could not even be set aside as voidable upon the grounds which have been alleged by the respondents.

A further point, however, arose during the argument to this effect that it is pleaded that Kailas Chandra never in fact got possession of the property which he purchased. Now, what he purchased at the auction-sale was the interest of the mortgagors which was the equity of redemption. The mortgagees were still in possession and entitled to remain in possession and could not be turned out either by the mortgagors themselves or by a purchaser of the mortgagors' equity of redemption because he purchased subject to all encumbrances. Therefore, there was no physical possession which the purchaser could take and it was only symbolical possession that could have been effected in his favour in the particular circumstances of the case. It is not, in my opinion, necesssary in a case like the present that symbolical possession of an intangible right should be given to the purchaser in order to complete his title if in fact he does exercise rights of ownership over the property which he has purchased. What happened in the present case was, that having purchased the equity of redemption in the year 1886 he did in fact transfer it by sale to the defendants the mortgagees and, therefore, he exercised in a most effective way the rights of ownership and rights of possession, so far as he could be said to have possession in the property which he purchased, by that subsequent sale in 1892. It must be taken, therefore, that as against the plaintiffs, the mortgagors, his rights were complete and final even if transfer of possession were necessary at all events from the year 1892. There is no other point which has been discussed before us in the case. In my opinion the appeal must be allowed with costs here and in all the lower Courts and the decree of the learned Munsif must be restored dismissing the claim.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF NANDURBAR—DEFENDANT—OPPONENT.

Construction of document—Municipal Octroi Schedule, prescribing value of goods—Octroi, whether can be charged on actual value.

Where the Octroi Schedule of a Municipality provided for the charging of Octroi on certain articles at a certain rate per cent. per cart-load and the value of a cart-load of each article was prescribed in the Schedule:

Held, that it was not open to the Municipality to charge Octroi at an ad valorem rate on the actual value of the articles. [p. 206, col. 2.]

Application praying for reversal of the decree passed by the Second Class Sub-Judge at Nandurbar, in Small Cause Suit No. 142 of 1921.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant, Municipality claiming Rs. 60-4-6, being the amount charged by the Municipality, by way of Octroi duty on cloth over and above what it was under the law entitled to levy. It is admitted that section 167 of the District Municipal Act applied, and, therefore, the first five items sued for are beyond time. Shortly put, the Municipality claimed to charge on the plaintiff's goods, which were bales of cloth, an ad valorem rate on the value of the goods according to the present value and not according to the value appearing in the schedule of rates. The Octroi Schedule is divided into 3 columns in the first column are the names of various articles; in the second column is the rate per cart load; and in the third column is the weight in maunds or price. The cart-load is to be reckoned at 16 maunds of 40 pakka seers. 'Cloth' comes under class VII as cloth of all sorts and articles made of cotton, silk and wool; the rate per cart-load is 12 annas per every Rs. 100 or part of it. In the third column the price is to be taken at Rs. 500 per cart-load of 16 maunds.

It seems to me clear that Rs. 500 was the limit value of a full cart-load of cloth of all sorts and articles made of cotton, silk, etc., upon which the rate of 12 annas per cent. was to be levied. Otherwise, the amount Rs. 500 in the third column had no meaning. But if no amount was mentioned, as the rate was 12 annas per cent., it would be necessary to have some method for appraising the value of such goods by means of an appraiser at the Octroi Station. But to obviate all difficulties of that kind, the framers of the schedule fixed the price per cart-load on which the ad valorem duty was to be paid.

If we turn to class VIII which includes iron and articles of iron, the rate per cart-load is 12 annas, the price of a cart-load of 16 maunds being taken at Rs. 150.

Again, copper, brass, tin, lead, zinc and articles made therefrom are all charged at 8 annas per cart-load the value of a cart-load of 16 maunds being taken at Rs. 400.

In those cases, as there was no rate per cent., it really was not necessary to place any value on the cart-load, for according as the cart appears to the clerk to have a less or a greater load than the average load he would be entitled to charge more or less than 12 annas.

That appears to me to be the obvious construction which the Court should put on this schedule. Unfortunately, in 1919, the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts found fault with the method upon which the Octroi duty had been charged.

He said: "As it appears to be the intention to charge those articles, against which value is stated ad valorem the present practice should either be stopped, and cloth, iron and other metals, etc., against which value is stated, should be charged ad valorem after seeing the original invoices showing the purchase-prices received by the importers from the exporting merchants, or the schedule amended with the sanction of the Commissioner C. D. so as to legalise the present practice. It appears advisable in the interest of the Municipality to charge cloth and iron, etc., or articles made thereof ad valorem as is done by most Municipalities."

It seems to me that the proper procedure was exactly the opposite. If it was considered desirable in the interest of the Municipality that cloth and iron, etc., or articles made thereof should be charged on their actual value ad valorem, it would certainly be necessary to add to the schedule rules prescribing how the real value of those goods was to be ascertained. It would also be necessary to set up the proper machinery for arriving at such valuation. It seems to me probable that when the schedule was framed, it was considered advisable that there should be as little delay as possible at the Octroi Station, and that the methods of arriving at the Octroi duty to be charged should be of the simplest possible description. If it was intended that the contents of cart-loads of goods such as these of various descriptions and quality had to be valued at the Octroi Station, and if the rate was to be charged on such value, then it was necessary to have expert appraisers to estimate that value. Moreover, it would not be possible in many cases to obtain without much delay the invoices showing purchase-prices received by the importers from the exporting merchants. However, if the Municipality wish to charge Octroi duty ad valorem on the value of the goods imported within their limits, then they must set up a proper machinery for that purpose. The Rule will be made absolute and there will be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 8-4-0. No order as to costs.

SHEO DUTT BAHADUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Pre-emption—Exercise of right, mode of—

SHEO DUTT v. BISHUNNATH SINGH.

Conveyance by vendee in favour of pre-emptor, effect of—Arbitration, reference to, whether defeats rival pre-emptor—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 20.

A pre-emptor who purchases the property sold, privately from the vendee not only asserts his pre-emptive right but asserts it in so efficacious a form as to be entitled to have the bargain secured to him against every one not having a superior right of pre-emption. [p. 208, col. 1.]

Mahtabuddin v. Karam Ellahi, 73 P. R. 1898, referred to.

But in order to put himself in this position a pre-emptor must do one of two things within limitation, either he must institute a suit for pre-emption or he must obtain a conveyance from the vendee. If he does neither of these things, the mere fact that he has stated that he possesses the right, that he has approached the vendee, or that they have referred their matter to arbitration will not prevent his being barred by limitation. [p. 208, col. 2.]

A pre-emptor who refers his claim to arbitration out of Court and then makes an application under paragraph 20 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code for filing the award made by the arbitrator, must be deemed to be enforcing his claim by suit, and unless the application under paragraph 20 is made within the limitation provided for a suit for limitation, it will be no answer to a claim for pre-emption by a rival pre-emptor. [p. 208, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 29th November 1921, reversing the order of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated 31st May 1921.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haider Hussain, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This is a pre-emption suit. The dispute is between two rival pre-emptors. It is a second appeal where the facts have all been decided. The sale-deed was executed on 8th January 1920 and registered on 13th January 1920. The plaintiff-appellant instituted a suit on the last day of limitation, 12th January 1921, making the vendor and the vendee defendants. On 11th February 1921 the vendee put in a written statement in which he said that Gokul Prasad ought to be a party. Accordingly, Gokul Prasad was made defendant No. 3 and he and the vendee set up a common defence. They said that on 24th December 1920 Gokul Prasad and the vendee had entered into an agreement to refer to arbitration Gokul Prasad's claim to pre-empt, that the arbitrators made their award on 4th February 1921 and that Gokul Prasad had applied under paragraph 20 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, on 5th February 1921 to have the award filed in Court.

This was the state of things when the written statement was put in. I may add, to make the statement complete, that on 16th March 1921 judgment and decree were given for Gokul Prasad in accordance with the award.

The learned Munsif framed five issues. The first was: Has the plaintiff got a preferential right to pre-empt as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 3? He found that the plaintiff had bought certain plots from the same vendor, defendant No. 2, prior to the execution of the sale-deed and that this made the plaintiff a co-sharer of the Sub-Division with a preferential right against the defendant No. 1, the vendee who appears to have been only a co-sharer in the village. He found, however, that the defendant No. 3, in addition to being a co-sharer of the Sub-Division, was also a blood relation of the vendor. Consequently, defendant No. 3 has a preferential right against the plaintiff.

There were two issues about the price, but on this point no evidence was given and the price of Rs. 300 entered in the sale-deed stood.

The last issue was in two parts:—

(a) What is the effect of the arbitration proceedings? and (b) Were those proceedings fraudulent and collusive?

The learned Munsif found that the proceedings were fraudulent and collusive that in fact the agreement to arbitrate was executed after the institution of the present suit, and, therefore, after Gokul Prasad, defendant No. 3, the original pre-emptor had become barred by limitation. Accordingly, he gave the plaintiff a decree. Gokul Prasad, defendant No. 3, appealed.

The learned Subordinate Judge came to a finding of fact that the reference to arbitration did take place on 24th December 1920. Accordingly, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff comes into this Court on second appeal. He cannot, of course, dispute the findings of fact that the defendant No. 3 is a blood relation and that the reference to arbitration took place before the institution of the suit. The appellants, argument is based upon the Statute, sections 6 to 15 of the Oudh Laws Act. His main contention is that the right of pre-emption must be exercised only in the ways expressly mentioned in the Statute.

SHEO DUTT v. BISHUNNATH SINGH.

I cannot accede to this contention. The right of pre-emption is defined in section 6 of the Oudh Laws Act as being a right "to acquire immoveable property on preference to all other persons." Section 11 lays down the procedure where the sale-deed has not been executed yet. The pre-emptor must tender the price to the vendor. The section does not say so, but it is clear from the Transfer of Property Act that the vendor must then execute a sale-deed in favour of the pre-emptor which will have to be registered. If the sale-deed has been executed in favour of the vendee it is clear that the pre-emptor must obtain his conveyance from the vendee. But if he does so he has exercised his right of pre-emption. I see no reason for holding that he is confined to the remedy of a suit in Court. There is direct authority to the contrary: Mahtab-ud Din v. Karam Illahi (1). That was a case in which, before the institution of a suit by one pre-emptor, another pre-emptor had obtained a deed of sale from the vendee. It was held that the pre-emptor who had purchased it privately from the vendee had not only asserted his pre-emptive title but asserted it in so efficacious a form as to be entitled to have the bargain secured to him against every one not having a superior right. But this consideration will not dispose of the present appeal because the respondent, Gokul Prasad, defendant No. 3, did not obtain a conveyance from the vendee. He used a different procedure. The problem can best be solved by approaching it from the point of view of the plaintiff and considering the paintiff's rights at two stages of the proceedings, namely, at the time of institution, and at the time when the Munsif granted him a decree. At the time of the institution of the rival pre-emptor, who had a superior right, had entered into an agreement to refer his claim to arbitration. This was no bar to the institution of the plaintiff's suit, nor, in my opinion, would it be any answer to the plaintiff's suit. It is idle for a pre-emptor to negotiate with the vendee. He must do one of two things within limitation, either he must institute a suit for pre-emption, or he must obtain a conveyance from the vendee. If he has done neither of these things, the mere fact that he has stated that he possesses the right, that he has approached the vendee, or that they have referred their matter to arbitration, will not prevent his being barred by limitation.

The second point of time is 31st May 1921 when the Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree. By that time the rival pre-emptor had himself obtained a decree but he had not completed his title by depositing the money. His decree was not valid against the plaintiff. Paragraph 20 of Schdule II, Civil Procedure Code, provides that where any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to the Court to have the award filed. It provides, in the second clause of the same paragraph, that the application shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants. I hold, therefore, that a pre-emptor who refers his matter to arbitration out of Court and then makes an application under paragraph 20 is proceeding by suit and not by private conveyance and that his suit must be within time. Now this suit was beyond time. It does not follow that the Court committed any error in granting a decree. The Court is bound to grant a decree in accordance with an award and it is very questionable whether the decree could be refused on the ground of limitation. Probably a decree passed under paragraph 21 will hold good even if the application was beyond time. But it holds good only between parties. It is still open to the plaintiff, who was no party to that decree, to show that the suit was barred by limitation. I conceive the position then to be the same as if Gokul Prasad, respondent-defendant No. 3, had instituted a suit by filing a plaint on 5th February 1921. It is plain, therefore, that these proceedings being beyond time were not a sufficient reason for refusing to give the plaintiff a decree. It is to be noted that the second reason did not exist. There had been no complete conveyance of any kind in favour of Gokul Prasad.

There is an unreported case of this Court, which was followed by the lower Appellate Court, Maula Bakhsh v. Becahen Khan (F. A. No. 60 of 1914), decided by a Single Judge. But there is a very important distinction between that case and this one, namely, that at the time when the plaintiff was asking for a decree there had been complete conveyance to the rival pre-emptor. On the other points the facts were very much the same. The sale-deed was dated 20th September 1911 and was registered on 13th December 1911. The agreement to refer to arbitration was entered into on 12th July 1912. I am unable to discover from the record when the suit was instituted but it was some months later than the agreement to refer to arbitration and it was earlier than the award. The award was dated 30th January 1913 and the decree which followed on the award was dated 27th February 1913. A deposit was made in pursuance of that decree on 25th July 1913, while it was not till 12th February 1914 that the suit was dismissed. In that case plaintiff never got a decree at all and, as I have said, the rival pre-emptor completed his title by paying the money. But in the present, case at the time the plaintiff got his decree, the rival pre-emptor had not done enough to prevent the plaintiff getting a decree. He had neither instituted a suit within time, nor had he obtained a complete conveyance of the property. I find, therefore, that the Munsif was right in giving the plaintiff a decree in spite of the finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court that the agreement to refer was earlier than the institution of the suit.

For these reasons I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Munsif. The plaintiff will get his costs in all Courts from defendants Nos. 1 and 3.

Vendor and purchaser—Vendee undertaking to discharge mortgage on property—Contract of indemnity—Cause of action—Constructive trust—Pecuniary advantage gained by fiduciary—Restoration—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 88.

A had created two mortgages on a house and some land in favour of B and C. D a friend of A made a suggestion according to which the land was sold to D for Rs. 5,000 and the house mortgaged to him for Rs. 1,000 and the sums were left with him to pay off the mortgages in favour of B and C so that A would have his house unencumbered except for the newly created mortgage in favour of D. D paid off the mortgage in favour of B but started a dispute with C as to the amount due under his mortgage. C claimed Rs. 4,938 while D tendered a payment of Rs. 4,800, which amount was not accepted by C. A had no knowledge of, and did not concern himself with, the dispute, treating it a matter between C and D. Some years afterwards, C. brought a suit on his mortgage against A and D. A relying on D did not appear in the suit and the defence was managed by D. Eventually a decree for Rs. 10,000 was passed for the mortgage amount and interest. In due course C took proceedings to bring the mortgaged properties to sale. D now paid a sum of Rs. 4,000 and freed the land, of the equity of redemption of which he was the owner, but the house was sold for Rs. 5,500 and A ejected therefrom. A alleging that the house had been purchased benami by D sued him for various reliefs:

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The first question to be determined in this case is, what was the contract between the parties. The first plaintiff and his father owned some property in Madras consisting of a house and some lands. The father in 1907 was an old man and the first plaintiff a young man about 21. Their affairs were somewhat involved and they had borrowed money on mortgage from two persons, Veerabadra Ayyar and Appadurai Nayakan. The mortgages covered both the house and the lands. The first defendant, a Barrister's clerk and an old pupil of the first plaintiff's father, offered to get their affairs into order and he propounded what seemed to be, and I think, was, an excellent scheme. Certain lands, the subject of these mortgages, were to be sold to the first defendant or, purchasers found by him for a fixed sum of Rs. 5,000 and by means of that money, and other moneys I shall refer to hereafter, the then existing mortgages were to be paid off. As far as the mortgage of Appadurai Nayakan was concerned, this was done and the mortgagee disappears from this case except that there is a matter which is the subject of issue VI about which there is still some dispute which I do not think has been disposed of. The facts seem to be, that the first defendant, got a judgment in the Small Cause Court in Suit No. 3938 of 1910 against the first plaintiff and his father. It seems to be clear from Exhibit S that this amount was not due. There was a promissory-note given mainly as security for the handing over of certain title-deeds to Appadurai Nayakan which were duly handed over. With full knowledge of this, the first defendant took an endorsement of the promissory-note and then sued on it and got a judgment. Whether this transaction is fraudulent, and how he came to get this judgment, has not been investigated. I gather the judgment has not been executed. The whole matter requires looking into. On the face of it, there seems to be something very suspicious about it and I propose to refer this matter for the consideration of the learned Judge. The rest of the scheme was, that the first defendant should retain the Rs. 5,000 purchase-money and should advance up to a further thousand rupees on a mortgage of the house, and that he should apply the total to pay off the existing mortgages, the first plaintiff and his father finding any samll balance that there might be. In February 1907 Veerabadra Iyer stated the sum due to him to be Rs. 4,862 and by March 1917 this had gone up to Rs. 4,939. Money was found by the first plaintiff and his father to make up this mortgage-amount and matters were left in the first defendant's hands, the essence of the scheme being that the Rs. 5,000, purchase-money, and Rs. 1,000, advanced by the first defendant on the mortgage of the house, and the small balance found by the first plaintiff and his father should be paid into or retained in the first defendant's hands and that he should use it for getting rid of Veerabadra Iyer altogether so that the plaintiff would have his house unencumbered except for the newly created mortgage of Rs. 1,000, in the first defendant's favour. The terms of this arrangement were reduced to writing by a document Exhibit A. The original has been lost or, at any rate, has not been produced and Exhibit A is a copy produced by the plaintiffs. It is quite clear that in that copy there is missing a sentence at the foot of the first page, after the words "must be." The words, no doubt, are to the effect that the balance not exceeding Rs. 1,000 must be advanced by the first defendant on a mortgage of the house and that the transfer of the property and the mortgage of the house should be completed within one month and also providing that any balance required above the Rs. 1,000 was to be provided by the first plaintiff and his father. The first defendant undertook to discharge Veerabadra Iyer's mortgage. It is stipulated that the failure on either side to finish the transaction in time is to make the party in default liable for any damages suffered. That the missing line or lines is, or are, to be supplied in the manner I suggest is strongly evidenced by the recitals in a subsequent mortgage of August 8th 1907, by the first plaintiff to Veerabadra Iyer, which is Exhibit F in Original Side Appeal No. 52 of 1916 and the terms of which, I have no doubt, were well known to the first defendant. The learned Judge has held, in the events that happened, that plaintiff's claim which would otherwise be a good one, is barred by limitation. He interprets, the agreement to mean that the first defendant undertook to discharge Veebadra's mortgage in a month from February 7th, 1907, and holds that his failure to do so was a breach of that contract and that the time under the Statute began to run from March 9th, 1907. I do not agree with this interpretation, because, in the first place, I can find no time limited for the payment of the mortgage-money and indeed it is pretty clear from what happened afterwards that neither party contemplated payment in a month unless Veerabadra Iyer agreed to diminish his claim within that period. I think that no time was fixed and I do not think there was any breach by the first defendant, until he had communicated to the first plaintiff, or till he had done some act showing to the first plaintiff, that he was not going to carry out his contract. What he did I shall refer to later. Further, if the non-payment within a month to Veerabadra Iyer was a breach of the contract by the first defendant it was not a breach which was accepted by the first plaintiff as a breach of the contract and, indeed, the contract between the parties was treated by both parties as being open and remaining open until the events which culminated in the sale in 1919. Further, in my view, the first defendant undertook a liability to indemnify the first plaintiff against any claim by Veerabadra Iyer and the cause of action under that contract of indemnity did not arise until the plaintiffs suffered a loss by being ejected from the property. The first defendant was a purchaser of certain lands for Rs. 5,000 part of which he re-sold to others. I do not propose to consider whether they were benami to him or not as it is wholly immaterial, and these lands were subject to Veerabadra Iyer's mortgage, and as a purchaser he impliedly undertook to indemnify the first plaintiff against any claim by the mortgagee or any loss incurred through the action of the mortgagee: See the judgment of the Privy Council in Izzatunnisa Begam v. Perlab Singh (1). It is true that in this case the house was also subject to the same mortgage and, in the absence of an agreement, there would probably have to be pro rata apportionment for this purpose of the mortgage, between the house and the lands, but here, by the agreement of February 7th, all difficulty of this kind is removed because the plaintiff agreed to provide the first defendant with the money necessary to pay off this mortgage so that both the house and the lands might be unencumbered, and in fact the plaintiffs supplied all the necessary money. In my judgment, there is a necessary implication in the sale of the land to the first defendant, coupled with the agreement of February 7th, that the first defendant will indemnify the first plaintiff and his father from all claims, or loss in respect of Veerabadra's mortgage. Without such an implication the whole scheme would be nugatory, for it would be open to the first defendant not to settle with Veerabadra and to leave the house charged with the mortgage, while the scheme was intended primarily to free that house from the mortgage.

What happened afterwards may be stated shortly. The first defendant chose to try and fight Veerabadra as to the amount due. He had a contention that a small part of the money, something like Rs. 140, owing by the plaintiff, while purporting to be charged on the land, was not properly so charged as it was otherwise secured and that the adding of it to the mortgage-money was clogging the equity of redemption as it prevented the property being redeemed by payment by sums only which were originally advanced on the mortgage security. At least, I think, that that was his point, and it was an interesting point. It was a purely academical one because the plaintiffs undoubtedly owned the money. Whether charged on the land or not and they had provided moneys to the first defendant, which were enough to pay not only the sums originally charged on the property but also this Rs. 140. The total amount due to Veerabadra in March 1907 was Rs. 4,938-8-0. The first defendant chose to tender a payment and paid into Court Rs. 4,300, which was subsequently increased to Rs. 4,800 and odd. Veerabadra Iyer would not accept this amount. Thereupon the first defendant took the money out of Court and did nothing. Tthis is the money of the plaintiffs but the first defendant was entitled to retain it for the purpose of paying off Veerabadra and for other prupose. He says he distributed amongst the purchasers—I confess I do not believe it—and even though he did, he had no sort of right to do anything of the kind as he had no right to it at all. He was, as I have stated, entitled to do one thing only and that is to pay to Veerabadra and discharge his mortgage. Time went on and compound interest on the mortgage piled up. The first plaintiff was living in the mortgaged house and I am convinced he had no knowledge of and did not concern himself with what was happening as to the mortgage, treating it, as indeed it was, as a matter between the first defendant and Veerabadra Iyer with which he was not concerned. That this is the fact is borne out by Exhibits R, S and T which show that after the money had been obtained back by the first defendant both he and the plaintiff were treating the contract of February 1907 as still alive and were assuming that the first defendant had carried out, or was willing to carry out his part of the bargain, for the first defendant was claiming to enforce the mortgage for Rs. 1,000 on the mortgage of the house, and that Rs. 100 was only to be advanced by the first defendant to be used in paying off Veerabadra Iyer and in fact has not been advanced at all. The inference I draw from these documents is, that the first defendant was deliberately concealing from the first plaintiff that he had not paid oft Veerabadra Iyer and had in fact misappropriated the Rs. 5,000 the purchase-money of the lands. Further, in 1910, the first defendant purports to sell the house under the mortgage for Rs. 1,000 again showing that he was treating the contract of 1907 either as being still alive or as having been performed by him.

The first defendant, no doubt, still relying on his point as to clogging the equity did nothing till 1915 when Veerabadra Iyer brought a suit against the first plaintiff and the first defendant. The defence was managed by the first defendant. He set up that he had tendered in March 1917, and had always been ready and willing to pay the right amount, thus showing that as between himself and the plaintiffs he had carried out the bargain of February 1907 and kept them indemnified and that he still had the money which he had received under that contract, had always been and was still ready and willing to complete his duties by paying the proper amount to Veerabadra Iyer. The Judge who tried the case found that the first defendant was wrong and he gave a decree for Rs. 6,896. Veerabadra was not satisfied and went to the Court of Appeal. The first plaintiff still relying on the first defendant and treating it as a matter not concerning him, did not trouble to appear in appeal. The first defendant agreed to the decree being increased to something over Rs. 10,000 and in his absence, the decree against the plaintiff was, by order of the Court, similarly increased. In due course, Veerabardra took proceedings to execute his decree by bringing the mortgaged property to sale by Court-auction. Then the first defendat took a course which, to my mind, was impertinent as it was dishonest. He paid Rs. 4,000 to Veerabadra to free the lands, he being the owner of the equity of redemption of the mortgage, and so prevent them being sold. Be it remembered that he had not in fact paid for those lands except perhaps the small amount that he had got from some sub-purchaser and that he had, throughout, nearly Rs. 5,000 of the plaintiff's money in his hands. He then misapplies the money which was to free the house and lands, to free the lands only and leaves the house to be sold for the balance of the mortgage-debt. In due course, this was done and on July 14, 1919, the house was sold for Rs. 5,500 and the first plantiff was ejected and they at once bring the suit. The house is said to have been worth about Rs. 8,000 or Rs. 9,000 at that time. The purchaser at the Court-sale was the 11th defendant, who is stated to be the concubine of the first defendant and is alleged to have been acting for him in this transaction.

If this be true, in my judgment, on the authority of Nugent v. Nugent (2) and Nugent v. Nugent (3) many other English cases and Ramasamy Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (4) and Deonandan Prasad v. Janki Singh (5). Such a transaction cannot be allowed to stand, as the first defendant was, in my judgment, throughout in a fiduciary relationship to the first plaintiff, in the first place, as an agent and, in the second place, as his accepted legal adviser. Whether the 11th defendant was or was not benami for the first defendant is a question that, on the view the learned Judge took, did not arise and this case must go back to him to hear and determine that point. If the house is, by this benami transaction, in the first defendant's possession, he must restore it. The terms would ordinarily be that he would be entitled to a charge on it for the Rs. 5,500 purchase-money but on the facts of the case, he is not so entitled for he had, throughout, in his possession money of the plaintiffs sufficient to redeem the house from mortgage, some of which in fact he had applied for the purpose of redeeming his land, and the plaintiffs are entitled to have that house unencumbered except by a mortgage of Rs. 1,000 in favour of the first defendant, and that mortgage must date for the purpose of interest from the date when it became effective, that is, the date when the plaintiff in fact advanced Rs. 1,000 towards paying off Veerabadra. That date is the date of the Court-sale. From that date the mortgage will bear simple interest at the agreed rate of 10½ per cent. The plaintiffs, having been ejected at that date, will be entitled to mesne profits until re-conveyance. The Trial Judge will, of course, ascertain the amount of mesne profits on the house. If it is found that the sale was not benami, then the the plaintiffs would only be able to get damages and they are entitled to be put by the damages in the same position as if the first defendant had carried out the contract, that is, they will get the actual value of the house they have lost as on the date of ejectment, being Rs. 1,000 and by way of further damages, interest on that amount at 9 per cent. per annum since the date of ejectment of that decree. One of the questions to be decided by the Trial Judge will, in this event, be the value of the house. The plaintiffs are also entitled, in any event, as damages to all costs to which they have been put in the proceedings by Veerabadra Iyer to which they were praties. Further, they are entitled to a declaration that they are entitled to be indemnified by the first defendant against all claims by purchasers of the lands in question in respect of liabilities which they have incurred by reason of Veerabadra Iyer's mortgage. We are told that two of the purchasers had had to pay Rs. 1,300 balance to Veerabadra Iyer. How the matter stands as between them and the first defendant we do not know, and we are expressing no opinion on it, but if plaintiffs have to pay any damage, in my judgment, they are entitled to claim them under their right of indemnity against the first defendant

There is the matter also of a later mortgage, as Exhibit E8 in Original Side Appeal No. 52 of 1916, in respect of which it is stated that the plaintiffs are liable and not the first defendant. It may be that the first defendant has discharged that mortgage, and whether he is entitled to any and what charge on the property in respect of any payment made in relation to that mortgage is one of the matters which will be open for discussion before the Trial Judge. The sixth issue will also then be heard and determined if plaintiffs so desire. The first defendant must pay to the plaintiffs their costs here and below. The liability as to costs as between the plaintiffs and the 11th defendant in the Court below will be decided on remand by the learned Judge. The 11th defendant will not in any event be entitled to any costs of this appeal because in this appeal plaintiffs have succeeded in getting a new trial as between them and the 11th defendant. Plaintiff will pay the costs of the 14th defendant which will be fixed at Rs. 150. In the Court below there will be one set of costs for the seventh defendant (sixth respondent) and the 13th and 14th defendants, and another set for defendants Nos. 2, 3, 8 and 10 payable by the plaintiffs.

Walace, J.—I entirely agree. I have really nothing to say which has not already been fully said by the learned Chief Justice and I have to add nothing to what he has said.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, O. XLV, r. 2, O. XLVII, rr. 4, 8, scope of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council—Extension of time—Sufficient cause—Estoppel—Failure to object to value of suit, effect of.

The provisions contained in rules 4 and 8 of O. XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code make it clear that the granting of an application for review merely amounts to a decision to re-hear the case in which the decree or order in respect of which a review is claimed was passed. The Judge hearing the review is not entitled to do anything in the first stage beyond passing an order granting the review and giving his reasons for so doing. If the review is granted, the Judge who has allowed the review becomes vested with jurisdiction to pass any order which the original Judge could have passed. It may be sufficient for him merely to alter the order of the original Judge, or it may be necessary for him to take some intermediate step such as an order in remand, or referring an issue. [p. 215, col. 2.]

Once an application for review is granted it cannot subsequently be dismissed. [p. 215, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act are applicable to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 216, col. 1.]

A review application was granted by a Judge and an issue was referred to the lower Court. On receipt of the finding the Judge came to the conclusion that the judgment of which review had been granted was correct, but instead of passing an order in the same terms himself he dismissed the application for review. The unsuccessful party applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council but meanwhile the time for making the application had elapsed:

Held, (1) that the original judgment of which review had been obtained had not been affected by anything which had subsequently taken place; [p. 215, col. 2.]

(2) that, therefore, the application for leave to appeal must be considered with reference to that order; [p. 216, col. 1.]

(3) that although the application was barred by time, yet having regard to the fact that this was due to the erroneous procedure adopted by the Judge granting the review who had wrongly dismissed the application for review after granting it, the applicant was entitled to the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 216, col. 1.]

The value of property which is the subject-matter of a suit is a question of fact which may be concluded against a party by his admission. [p. 217, col 1.]

A party cannot by admitting a lower valuation of a suit suffer an appeal to be heard by a Single Judge of a supreme Court and then claim a higher valuation for the purpose of obtaining leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 217, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under O. XLV, r. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure for leave to appeal against an order to which three separate dates are assigned in the application for leave to appeal. These dates are 16th April 1919, 19th October 1921 and 10th April 1922. It appears that on 19th October 1921 Mr. Dalal, then Second Additional Judicial Commissioner, passed an order setting aside the decree of the lower Court in favour of the defendants and decreeing the plaintiffs' suit. An application for review of this judgment of Mr. Dalal was made and entertained by Mr. Lyle, First Additional Judicial Commissioner, after Mr. Dalal had left the Court. The application was entertained in view of the fact that Mr. Dalal had overlooked the allegation by the defendants of a certain ground for impugning the Will on which the plaintiffs based their claim, a ground on which an issue had been struck by the Court of first hearing but on which no decision had been passed by that Court in view of its dismissal of the claim on other grounds. On the 12th January 1922 Mr. Lyle passed the following order:—

"I allow this application in review and return the case to the Court of first instance with directions that it record a finding on Issue No. 11 and submit that finding to this Court within one month."

The Court of first hearing submitted its finding which was in favour of the plaintiffs. Mr. Lyle accordingly saw no reason to interfere with the order of Mr. Dalal allowing the plaintiffs' claim, but instead of himself passing an order to the same effect as the one that Mr. Dalal had passed he merely by an order dated the 10th April 1922 dismissed the application for review with costs.

The first question that has to be decided in this application for leave to appeal is whether the application is within time. That depends on whether the order appealed against should be regarded as Mr. Dalal's order of 19th October 1921 or Mr. Lyle's order of the 10th April 1922.

In discussing this question it appears desirable to quote the first part of rule 4 of O. XLVII (which is the Review Chapter) and the whole of rule 8 of that Order:

"4 (1). Where it appears to the Court that there is no sufficient ground for a review, it shall reject the application.

"(2) Where a Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it shall grant the same:

"Provided that

These provisions appear to us to make it quite clear that the granting of an application for review merely amounts to a decision to re-hear the case in which the decree or order (in respect of which a review is claimed) was passed. The Judge hearing the review is not entitled to do anything in the first stage beyond passing an order granting the review and giving his reasons for so doing. If the review is granted the Judge who has allowed the review becomes vested with jurisdiction to pass any order which the original Judge could have passed. It may be sufficient for him merely to alter the order of the original Judge or it may be necessary for him to take some intermediate step such as an order in remand or referring an issue. In the persent case Mr. Lyle adopted the second step. When the case came back from the lower Court with a finding on the issue his proper course would have been to allow the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' claim. This is what he obviously intended to do. But instead of doing so he wrongly passed an order dismissing the application for review which he had already granted.

Adopting, then this view the present position is that no order justifying a decree in favour of the plaintiffs was passed by Mr. Lyle. Whether that passed by Mr. Dalal will stand good notwithstanding the granting of the review will depend on whether Mr. Lyle was justified in dismissing the application for review after he had granted it and, secondly, supposing that he was not, whether this Bench has any power to ignore his second order. Both questions must be answered in the negative. The first we have in substance already decided and as to the second an appeal in this Court does not lie from a decision, however wrong and without jurisdiction, of a Single Judge.

The consequence is that Mr. Dalal's order of the 19th October 1921 remains unaffected by anything that happened subsequently. It is against this order that the applicants are appealing to the Privy Council as may be seen from their grounds of appeal. Such appeal is admittedly time-barred. The applicants cannot, moreover, apply for a review of Mr. Lyle's order of the 10th April 1922 as they are barred from doing so under O. XLVII, r. 9.

Although, however, the application is beyond time the applicants desire us to invoke section 5 of the Limitation Act and to admit the application after time. It is urged that the fact that Mr. Lyle merely dismissed the application before him for review instead of, as we hold that he should have done, passing himself an order in appeal dismising the appeal, is a sufficient cause for the application not being made within time. We have no doubt that under section 5 we are entitled to admit the application after time. If any authority is needed for this we would refer to Jyotindra Nath Sarkar v. Lodna Colliery Co. (1), where a Full Bench of the Patna High Court held that section 5 was applicable to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The only question is whether the cause for not filing it within time is sufficient. We have already expressed the opinion that the application for review was granted on the 12th January 1922 and that from this date Mr. Lyle had jurisdiction in the case as if the appeal had been heard by him ab initio. From this date, therefore, the applicants were not in a position to file an appeal from Mr. Dalal's order of the 19th October 1921. When on the 10th April 1922 Mr. Lyle passed the order dismissing the application for review this order revived the right of the applicants to appeal from Mr. Dalal's order but limitation had by then expired. It is obvious, therefore, that according to our view the applicants were prevented from lodging the appeal within time by a mistake of Mr. Lyle. We, therefore, admit the application for leave to appeal and proceed to deal with it on its merits.

The next question is whether the valuation of the property in suit amounts to Rs. 10,000. The property in suit is revenue-paying land, being a 1-anna 4-pies fraction of the whole mahal. Court-fee was paid at five times the land-revenue as required by section 7 (v) of the Indian Court-Fees Act. For purposes of jurisdiction the property was stated in the plaint to be worth Rs. 6,000 and in the written statement the applicants-defendants stated that they took no objection to this valuation. The Court of Trial dismissed the suit. In an appeal to this Court the property was again stated to be worth Rs. 6,000 for purposes of appeal. Had it been valued at Rs. 10,000 or over it would have been heard by a Bench of two Judges. As it was, it was heard by a Single Judge. The appeal was accepted and the plaintiffs obtained a decree.

The applicants-defendants base their right to appeal to the Privy Council first on the ground that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance amounted to Rs. 10,000 and that the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is of the same sum and, alternatively, that even if the value of the subject-matter in dispute did not amount to Rs. 10,000 yet the decree in favour of the plaintiffs involved indirectly a claim or question respecting property of Rs. 10,000.

The first question for this Court to decide is whether the applicants are estopped from pleading that the value of the subject-matter of the suit is Rs. 10,000 by reason of their raising no objection to this valuation in the Court of first hearing or at the time when the plaintiffs appealed. It is to be noticed that in the Court of first hearing it made no difference what the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction was stated to be as the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction up to an unlimited amount. In the appeal, however, the same valuation for purposes of jurisdiction was placed on the suit by the plaintiffs without objection from the present applicants and the result of this was that the appeal was heard by a Single Judge instead of by two Judges as it would have been if the valuation had been held to be Rs. 10,000. So the failure of the applicants to object to the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction in the Appellate Court was not without effect. In the case Jagannath Bakhsh v. Mendana (2) it was held by a Bench of two Judges of this Court, in circumstances which we cannot distinguish from the present case, that defendants who had accepted the value of property for purposes of jurisdiction could not be heard to question that value subsequently. Several rulings have been quoted to us that the arbitrary valuation prescribed for the purposes of stamp-duty will not preclude a party maintaining a higher sum as the real value of the subject-matter in dispute, but these rulings have no bearing on this case where a different valuation was asserted for purposes of jurisdiction. The ratio decidendi adopted in the ruling quoted was that the value of the property is a question of fact and that that question had been settled by the defendants on their own admissions. It is clear that if the defendants had objected to the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction an issue would have been framed and the matter settled in an early stage of the litigation. We are, therefore, disposed to agree with this ruling that there is in substance a finding of fact of the two lower Courts that the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is as stated in the plaint. The Privy Council will not without very strong reason allow a question of fact decided concurrently by two lower Courts to be re-opened. Apart from this, it appears to us that it is not proper for a party by an admission as to a lower valuation to suffer an appeal to be heard by a Single Judge and then to claim a higher valuation for the purpose of obtaining an appeal to the Privy Council. Accordingly, we see no reason to depart from the ruling of the Bench of this Court and decide that the value of the subject-matter of the suit is less than Rs. 10,000.

(2) 30 Ind. Cas. 204; 2 O. L. J. 208 at p. 211.

It is, however, pleaded in the alternative that the decree in favour of the plaintiffs involved indirectly a claim or question respecting property of Rs. 10,000 inasmuch as the sale-deed of 1833 on which the claim was based comprised double the amount of property now in suit. The question we have, therefore, to decide is whether the decree of this Court that the sale-deed relied on was a forgery would operate to the detriment of any party who might seek relief on the basis of the sale-deed in respect of the other half of the property thereby transferred. The present suit is concerned with half of the property. The original owner of the whole of the property was Fateh Singh. There is a sale-deed executed by Fateh Singh in favour of Gopal Singh and Sanoman Singh. It is dated 1833 but the finding of Mr. Dalal is that this document was really written in 1870 and that it was never intended to operate. If this sale-deed were held to be genuine and operative then Fateh Singh was divested of the whole of the property in 1833 and no subsequent disposition by him had any force. Fateh Singh executed two Wills. The first was in 1865 and it was in favour of his wife and of Chandrabali Singh in equal shares. Chandrabali Singh is the present defendant and it was on the basis of this Will that he subsequently obtained a decree giving him possession of the half of the property which he now holds. But he is also the son of Gopal Singh who was one of the vendees under the sale-deed of 1833. The second Will was executed in 1867 and was in favour of the wife with remainder to the daughter. Fateh Singh died in 1876. In 1878 Chandrabali Singh obtained his decree against the wife for half of the property, the second Will somehow being held inoperative against the first Will. In 1879 the wife and daughter together executed a deed of gift in favour of Chandika Singh. The plaintiffs brought their suit on foot of this deed of gift as the representatives-in-title of Chandika Singh. In 1880 Sanoman Singh, one of the two vendees under the sale-deed, died and in 1882 his son Jagat Bali obtained a decree on foot of the sale-deed of 1883 against both the vendors and the donee Chandika Singh for cancellation of the deed of gift of 1879 and for possession of half of the property. In 1916 the wife died. In 1917 the plaintiffs brought the present suit. They could not ask for possession of Jagat Bali's moiety of the property because they were barred by res judicata, the donee under the deed of gift having been a party to Jagat Bali's decree of 1882. But they could and did claim possession of Chandrabali's half. Chandrabali's decree was good against the wife only. Up to the time of the wife's death this decree was also good against her donees; but when she died the gift by her daughter became operative and plaintiffs brought their suit. Chandrabali could not maintain the earlier Will against the later Will, but he set up the sale-deed. Obviously, if Fateh Singh had divested himself of the property in 1883 the Will of 1867 was invalid and the gift was equally invalid and the plaintiffs' suit must fail. By the decision of Mr. Dalal plaintiffs succeed. If Mr. Dalal's decision should be set aside, the decision would effect only one-half of the property. It will not effect Jagat Bali's half even indirectly. The plaintiffs cannot attack Jagat Bali because the decree of 1882 is res judicata against the plaintiffs. If any third party were to attack Jagat Bali the present decision would not be res judicata in the case. It is true that the reasoning in the present judgment might be held valid if this supposed claimant were to set up the sale-deed of 1883 but, where a judgment or order can have no effect on subsequent litigation apart from the reasons given for it, such judgment or order cannot be said even indirectly to involve a question respecting the subject-matter of the litigation. So we hold that the decree in question has not involved even indirectly a question respecting property of Rs. 10,000.

For the above reasons we hold that no appeal to the Privy Council lies and dismiss the application for leave to appeal with costs.

Appeal against an order, dated the 21st February 1922, of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 361 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Yellamanachalli, in Original Suit No. 384 of 1918.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, dated the 21st February 1922, in Appeal Suit No. 361 of 1921.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order appealed against is one of remand. The question was whether, as the eleventh defendant alleged, a previous decree was invalid, because it had been obtained owing to the negligence of her then guardian. The first objection to this order of remand is that the plea of negligence was untenable inasmuch as, if the eleventh defendant wished to plead that she was not bound by the previous judgment she should have brought a regular suit to have it set aside. That does not appear to be in accordance with section 44 of the Indian Evidence Act or the construction of that provision in Rajib Panda v. Lakhan Sendh Mahapatra (1). It is urged that section 44 is not applicable when the previous judgment has been obtained owing to gross negligence; and it is true that only fraud or collusion and not gross negligence is mentioned in it. We do not, however, think that the principle involved is inapplicable to cases of gross negligence. It may be observed that such cases were referred to as on the same footing with cases of fraud in Jogeshwar Narain Singh v. Roy Radha Raman (2), and we can see no reason on principle why any distinction should be made between the one class of cases and the other.

On the merits, we think that the lower Appellate Court has stated its reasons very badly for conclusions which are correct. The first question was whether the District Munsif was right in not coming to a conclusion on the plea of gross negligence. There is no doubt that this plea was not taken by the eleventh defendant in any distinct language in her written statement. The written statements were exceedingly general, the injunction of the Code that allegations of fraud and the like should be made specific, if they are made at all, being entirely neglected. On these pleadings, however, two very general issues were framed, one of which, the fourth, was quite wide enough to cover the plea of gross negligence; and, a most important consideration, there is no doubt that the parties had in mind the plea of gross negligence at the trial and that the eleventh defendant was attempting to produce evidence in support of it, which was rejected not because the matter was not agitated in the suit, but because the District Munsif did not think that that evidence was of any value. In these circumstances, we hold that the case of gross negligence was open and that the Munsif should have found definitely on it. The lower Appellate Court's order, therefore, remanding the suit for re-trial on that point must be supported. It had already directed the Munsif to take an additional written statement from the eleventh defendant. We supplement that direction by saying that the negligence relied on should be described in as definite a manner as possible and that a definite issue as to the gross negligence should be framed before the re-trial begins.

The lower Appellate Court's order is next that in the re-trial certain documents shall be admitted in evidence and considered. It is not clear on what grounds exactly it founded that direction; for it has not gone into the question whether those documents were rejected on any legal ground by the Munsif. We have done so with the result that we are not able to find any objection valid under the Evidence Act to the admission of those documents established. They were apparently produced before the District Munsif, but he dismissed them with the remark that they were prior to the date of a certain compromise and that the father of the alleged adopted son, one Sanyasi Naidu, could not have known of them, and elsewhere commented on the absence of documents to show that Sanyasi recognised his alleged adopted son as his son. We are told that the District Munsif was inaccurate in this and that among the documents there are some which would support this part of the case. In any event, however, the documents, as the Munsif himself says, would show that Chellamal, the widow of Sanyasi, after his death recognised the alleged adopted son. That, in our opinion, would certainly be a relevant fact and it would, of course, be for the Trial Court to estimate its importance. The District Munsif throughout has not shown that there is any provision of the Evidence Act under which he was justified in excluding these documents. He was not justified in excluding them, because they would not prove a particular part of the case, when they were relevant to establish another part. This being so, this portion also of the lower Appellate Court's order was correct.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs of the eleventh defendant (the first respondent). The civil revision petition is dismissed. No order as to costs.

Appeal and petition dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 95 (a), 167—Suit for declaration of occupancy rights against Zemindar and co-tenant—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court.

Having regard to the provisions of section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act, a suit by a tenant under section 95 (a) of that Act against the landlord and a co-tenant, for a declaration of occupancy rights is cognisable by a Revenue Court, and not by a Civil Court.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 16th of November 1921.

Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Bhagwati Shankar and Durga Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Shansi was the occupancy tenant of the land in dispute. He died leaving four sons, Sher Khan, Zainuddin, Baz Khan and Khairuddin. The plaintiffs are Khairuddin and the four sons of Zainuddin, who is dead, and the three sons of Baz Khan, who is also dead. These plaintiffs brought this suit in the Revenue Court at Moradabad against Sher Khan and the zemindar. The suit purported to be one under section 95 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act. In their plaint, after reciting the above facts, they stated that on the death of Shansi his four sons jointly cultivated the land but the name of Sher Khan alone was entered in the revenue papers because he was the eldest son and was the head of the family. The plaintiffs assert that they are in possession of the land as heirs of Shansi but that, inasmuch as the zemindar does not admit that they are tenants the suit was brought for a declaration under section 95 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act. The Assistant Collector before whom the case came held that the suit was triable by a Civil Court and dismissed it. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Moradabad has upheld this view. The plaintiffs come here in second appeal and the only point taken is, that the suit was one exclusively triable by the Revenue Court, and my attention has been drawn to the cases of Ram Charitar Rai v. Jiani (1), Baljit v. Mahipat (2) and Jagannath v. Balwant Singh (3). It seems to me, from a perusal of the plaint itself, tha tthe real object of this suit was to have a declaration against both the zemindar and Sher Khan that the plaintiffs were the occupancy tenants of the holding. Such a suit, it seems to me, can only be brought in a Court of Revenue having regard to section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaint be returned through the learned District Judge to the Trial Court to restore to its original number and to dispose of it according to law. Costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale will abide the result.

AKKUBAI Kom RAYAGOUDA BIRADAR PATIL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS Nos. 2, 3 AND 6—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Bombay School—Joint family—Adoption—Adoptive father reserving free power of management, effect of—Alienation by manager, validity of.

Plaintiff was adopted under a deed of adoption which contained the following clause:—

"You have acquired whatever rights and authorities a natural son should have acquired had I got any, and you have from to-day become the owner of the property moveable and immoveable. You should stay with us and take care of us as long as we, i. e., my wife and I, live. After our death you are the sole owner and should thereafter make Vahiwat as owner. In whatsoever manner the estate, moveable or immoveable is managed (Vyavastha), as long as I live it is to be taken that you approve of it. You have no authority to object to it. On this condition I have taken you in adoption of my free will on your and your father's consenting to it:"

Held, that the clause conferred on the adoptive father power of management of the family property free from any interference on the part of the adopted son, but it did not give him an unrestricted power of alienation. [p. 223, col. 1.]

A member of a joint family in Bombay can alienate his undivided share in the family property without the consent of his co-owners. [p. 223, col. 1.]

Therefore, an alienation of the whole interest in a portion of the family property by the manager is good at least to the extent of his own share in the property alienated. [p. 223, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 172 of 1920.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, with him Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.—The lower Courts have really misread and misunderstood the adoption deed, Exhibit 50, in this suit. The word used for management in the original is "Vyavastha." The word, as interpreted by Molesworth and Wilson, means "settlement, arrangement, just disposition, establishment in suitable connection or order or separating, setting apart, settlement, arrangement." The word by itself has no distinct meaning. The word must be construed so as to be consistent with the context, especially with the sentence "you have acquired whatever rights and authorities a natural son should have acquired." The word does not override the natural legal rights of the adopted son. At the most, it confers upon the father the management of the family property as manager, free from the interference on the part of the son. It does not invest the father with unrestricted power of disposal. If it were so, in case the father and the son were to fall out, it would arm the father with a good weapon to deprive him of all the family property. Your Lordships will note that in this case the old father has recently married and has fallen out with his son. He has tried to deprive the son of his share by attempting to alienate almost all the exclusive property either by way of gift, sale or mortgage, without any necessity whatsoever. There are over a dozen suits of a similar nature pending in the lower Courts. If the deed be widely construed as empowering the father to alienate the property without any restrictions whatsoever, it would entail hardship by defeating the natural rights of the son.

No doubt, the major son can consent to his father's alienations without legal necessity, but he cannot be said to consent to all the future alienations which the father as a manager is not competent to do.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Respondents.—The word Vyavastha connotes unlimited power of alienation, and as such the alienation is binding on the son. The plaintiff was a major at the time the adoption deed was passed and there was nothing wrong in his voluntarily consenting to the condition in the deed The son is not to object to any sort of alienation by the father. The consent of the plaintiff was quite natural as he had a tempting bait of a very extensive fortune. Had he not consented, the father might not have adopted the plaintiff.

Secondly, it is a recognised principle of Hindu Law that the manager of the joint family can alienate the family property, though without any necessity, with the consent of the other co-parceners. The plaintiff had consented to his father getting unlimited power of disposal. It can be, therefore, said that he had consented to the alienation at issue. Your Lordships may not take into consideration other alienations, the learned Counsel has just referred to, as they are not before the Court.

If your Lordships then are against me on this point, my next point will be that the alienation is good to the extent of a moiety, the share of the father. Defendant No. 1 alienated the suit property for a valuable consideration which he is entitled to do under the law. I admit there is no legal necessity proved; but a co-parcener can under the Mitakshara prevailing in the Bombay Presidency alienate his share in the family estate for a valuable consideration. The alienation then is good to the extent of the father's share. I rely upon remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kasam v. Jorawar Singh (1).

Mr. Coyajee, in reply.—It is so my Lords, we have an alternative prayer in the plaint for the recovery of the moiety on partition.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the sale-deed passed by deceased defendant No. 1 who was the adoptive father of the plaintiff in favour of the defendant No. 2 was void, and to recover possession of the property in suit. In the alternative the plaintiff sued for possession of half the suit property on partition. The suit has been dismissed in both the Courts.

The plaintiff was adopted by Ghenappa, the first defendant, on the 30th November 1903, at which time the plaintiff was a major. Exhibit 50 is the adoption deed, and it is on the interpretation of a particular passage in that deed that the decision in this suit depends.

For the plaintiff it was contended that the material portion of the deed ran as follows :—

"You have acquired whatever rights and authorities a natural son should have acquired had I got any, and you have from to-day become the owner of the property moveable and immoveable. You should stay with us and take care of us as long as we, that is, I and my wife, live. After our death you are the sole owner and should thereafter make Vahiwat as owner. In whatsoever manner the estate, moveable or immoveable, is managed, as long as I live it is to be taken that you approve of it. You have no authority to object to it. On this condition I have taken you in adoption of my free will on your and your father's consenting to it."

The word used in the original is Vyavastha and the learned Appellate Judge at page 3 has quoted the various meanings assigned to that word in Molesworth's Marathi English Dictionery and Wilson's Glossary of Judicial and Legal terms. It would appear that the word itself has no distinct and separate meaning. It may either mean settlement, arrangement, just disposition ; establishment in suitable connection, or order or seperating, setting apart, settlement, arrangement.

The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the word "Vyavastha" in the context in which it was used could mean only settlement, disposition, and that the adoptive father had thus reserved to himself unlimited powers of disposal over the property both moveabe and immoveable.

The learned Appellate Judge held that the word "Vyavastha" connotes just disposition as manager of the family. There is further an ingenious argument raised that because a manager of a joint Hindu family can alienate the family estate with the consent of the other members of the family, the plaintiff consented, prior to his adoption, to his adoptive father's management, and, therefore, it must be taken that he consented to any alienation which might be made in future by the adoptive father as manager. There is, an obvious fallacy in that argument, because, ordinarily, a general consent given to a manager of a joint Hindu family would not include a consent to alienations for value which are not within his province as manager, so that, for other alienations express consent would be necessary. Therefore, the consent given to a manager by other members of the family does not necessarily inlcude consent to future alienations. It would only mean, as in this case, that the family would not interfere in any way with the ordinary management of the family property.

But it has been contended for the respondent that the word "Vyavastha" connotes unlimited powers of alienation. It seems to us that when we have to interpret a word of this indeterminate character, we must read it strictly with th context in the adoption deed, and although it would be very natural for a son if he is major to consent, and if he is a minor, then for those who are acting on his behalf to consent, to the adoptive father's acting as manager of the family property, yet it would be extremely unlikely that there should be a consent given to the adoptive father having unrestricted powers of alienation which might result, as it did in this case, in the father's dissipating the whole of the family property or the best part of it before the adopted son, could succeed. That being the case, in our opinion, we should interpret this adoption deed as conferring on the father powers of management free from any interference on the part of the adopted son, and as such a provision might naturally have been made in the deed although the adopted son at that time was a major, it is by no means necessary or even natural that we should interpret the clause as giving to the adoptive father an unrestricted power of alienation. We think, therefore, that the learned Appellate Judge was wrong in dismissing the paintiff's suit.

We think that the alienation in this suit was not competent with regard to the plaintiff's share. It is a question on which apparently there is some conflict of authorities whether an unauthorised alienation by the manager of a Hindu joint family is altogether void or whether it would be held good to the extent of the share of the person making the alienation. In Kasam v. Jorawar Singh (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee accepted the view that the Mitakshara is to be interpreted in Berar in the same manner as in Bombay, and that accordingly a member of a joint family in Berar could sell his undivided share without the consent of his co-owners. If, therefore, the plaintiff's father had power to alienate his own share without the consent of the plaintiff, it is difficult to say why in the case of an alienation for value as in this case of the whole interest of the family property it could not remain good with regard to the plaintiff's father's share.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that he is the owner of half the suit property and that the suit should be ref rred to the Collector for partition of the suit property in equal moieties between the plaintiff and the second defendant.

There should be usual enquiry as to mesne profits from the date of suit. The plaintiff should pay Court-fees to the extent of mesne profits to which he has succeeded.

The plaintiff is entitled to half his costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 1 OF 1921.

A preliminary point is taken in this second appeal under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground that this was a suit which could be brought in the Provincial Small Cause Court being for an amount under Rs. 500. The suit was rather a curious one. It was an action by a person who had bought the right to collect tolls on certain roads from the District Board. He had to comply, according to his contract, with the orders given by the President of the District Board. A large quantity of fodder being required for Army purposes in this District, the Forest Officers hired carts and sent them along the road on which the Toll-bar in question was. The respondent tried to collect tolls on these carts and he received an order from the appellant, President of the District Board, forbidding him to collect tolls, he basing his prohibition on his interpretation of the Army Act under which he decided that no toll was payable in respect of carts carrying supplies for the Army. The respondent complied with the order which the appellant had issued, and in due course brought a suit for damages claiming that this order forbidding him to collect these tolls was illegal and alleging that he had suffered damages by reason of that order.

The District Munsif and on appeal the Subordinate Judge so found, and awarded him damages, for Rs. 214. No second appeal lies against that decision the amount being under Rs. 500 unless this is one of the suits set out in the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887. The Article of the Schedule relied on is Art. 19 "a suit for a declaratory decree not being a suit instituted under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code." I agree that if the case is really a case for a declaration, the Court would be entitled to hold that the Small Cause Court's jurisdiction was excluded. If the case was really a case for damages, as in our judgment this was, the Small Cause Court would have jurisdiction though in arriving at its decision, it would have to come to a conclusion, as to whether this prohibition was rightly or wrongly imposed. The other Articles relied upon are Arts. 1 and 3 which except from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court suits concerning acts and orders purporting to be done by the Governor General in Council or by a Local Government or by a Member of Council and suits concerning acts and orders purporting to be done by any other officer of the Government in his official capacity. If the President of the District Board is an officer of the Government within the meaning of these Articles, this suit would be excepted. But in our judgment he is not. Local Boards and Corporations are what may be called quasi-Government bodies but by the very scheme of the Acts under which they are created they are not servants of the Government. Their representatives in some cases are nominated but generally elected by the people and they have their official capacity as such and not as officials of the Government. It is true that they are under Government in the sense that under the Statute they have to account to the Government and are under certain disciplinary powers of the Government. The Government has a duty cast upon it to see that these ministerial bodies carry out their functions lawfully. But in our judgment none of the officials of these Municipalities and District Boards are officers of the Government coming within Arts. 1 and 3.

It follows that this preliminary point succeeds and that this second appeal does not lie and must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 2 OF 1921.

Schwabe, C. J.—The Civil Revision Petition is on the same matter just disposed of—(Second Appeal No. 73 of 1921). It is suggested that the Court that had heard the case had no jurisdiction by reason of section 6 of the Tolls (Army) Act II of 1901. By that section provisions are made for compensation to certain persons who sustain loss by reason of the Act. It is argued that loss had been sustained by the present respondent by reason of that Act. It is not at all so. Even if it were so, that section does not, in my judgment, exclude the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to hear cases such as this.

It is further suggested that this action did not lie because it was against the President and not against the District Board itself. That is not a question, as I understand it, going to the jurisdiction and I see no ground for interfering in this case on revision.

This Civil Revision Petition will be dismissed. There will be no costs.

A custom must be ancient. [p. 237, col. 1.]

It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends. [p. 237, col. 1.]

(Case-Law discussed.)

Usage should never be used as a synonym for custom. It has two distinct legitimate meanings but neither of them should be confused with custom. It is used to denote what is done by people uniformly and consistently. Used in this sense usage has not the force of law. It would only obtain the force of law when it is proved to be reasonable, invariable, ancient, etc., in which case it becomes what is known as custom. It is also used to denote what is done uniformly and consistently and has been so done in a certain locality or by a certain trade or profession, etc., for a period sufficient to make it probable that people in their contracts and in their contractual relationships adopt it as an implied term or condition. Where this is the case a Court which has to put a construction upon a contract imports into the terms of the contract the trade or local usage. Here, again, usage has not the force of law nor will it be sanctioned by the Courts if contrary to positive law. The parties could enter into a contract in contravention of the usage but if they enter into a contract which neither affirms nor denies the usage, the usage may be proved in order to ascertain what was in their minds when they wrote the contract. [p. 238, cols. 1 & 2.]

Then, again, there is the case where usage has some legal effect not per se but as prima facie evidence of a custom. Where a well-established recent usage is proved and the proof is carried back for a period which may be regarded as covering the period of living memory, a presumption is thereby raised that this usage is in reality the exercise of an ancient and valid custom. If there is no rebutting evidence a decision in favour of the custom may be based on this evidence alone. If the presumption raised by recent usage is rebutted by proof that an ancient custom could not have come into existence, then the usage fails to possess any legal effect. [p. 238, col. 2; p. 239, col 1.]

Co-parceners in a Hindu joint family are entitled to claim partition of property even though they are excluded from possession. [p. 240, col. 2.]

Exclusion by a co-owner of other co-owners will not become adverse to the latter until they become aware of it, but nonetheless there may be exclusion in fact. It is, however, open to a co-owner to prove that exclusion of the other co-owners took place at one time and the bringing of the fact to their knowledge at another time. [p. 240, col. 2.]

In exclusion there is a mental as well as a physical element. Legal or juridical exclusion from an estate by one co-owner of his co-owners is consistent with their physical admission to it. For such mere physical admission to put an end to exclusion it must be possible to infer that it was accompanied by an intention to abandon the position of a right to exclude. Such intention will be inferrred where no legal title to exclude is proved to have been set up and maintained, because there is always a presumption in favour of rightful entry and retention. Such a presumption is, however, rebuttable. [p. 243, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 6th July 1920.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree:—

The appellants, therefore, are the descendants of Lal Bahadur Singh. The respondents are Lal Bahadur Singh's two brothers and their sons. The suit was one for partition of joint family property, plaintiffs alleging that the family was still joint and that they were still in joint possession of the joint family property.

Defendant No. 1 set up a family custom of impartibility and primogeniture and he was supported by the other appellants. The other defendants sided with the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit on a finding that the custom alleged by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was not proved. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have appealed. The four plaintiffs and the remaining defendants are arrayed as respondents.

There are two main questions for decision in appeal. The first is, whether the custom is proved and the second is, whether, if it is found that the custom is not proved, the plaintiffs are nevertheless barred by limitation.

Our finding is that the custom is not proved, but that the plaintiffs are barred by limitation. The decision of the question of limitation, however, itself turns to no small extent on a finding that a recent usage, not amounting to an enforcible custom, does exist in this estate.

The first question for decision is whether the custom has been proved. We are disposed to allow a considerable amount of latitude to the appellants in the way of permitting them to prove a custom different from the custom they pleaded. All that it was necessary for them to plead or prove was the existence of a valid family custom whereby the Bahrampur estate is impartible and descends by primogeniture. Appellants were ill-advised in taking upon themselves a greater burden than this. They analysed, if we may so put it, this pleading into two pleadings neither of which they could possibly prove.

One of these was that there was a family custom of impartibility not relating to any particular estate; that is to say, that any member of the extensive clan of Raekwar Thakurs could walk about India acquiring land and impressing upon each estate as he acquired it his own custom of impartibility. We do not say that such a state of things was impossible, but we do say that we know of nothing similar. The rule of impartibility, so far as we know, never attaches itself to small estates; and it is difficult to imagine how it could survive as a family custom independently of some particular estate. It is not necessary to go into details as to the ancient history of the family. The learned Subordinate Judge has treated this part of the case elaborately and we agree with his reasoning and conclusions. It is sufficient to say here, briefly, that the parties belong to the clan of Raekwar Thakurs. There are other branches of this family who are in possession of taluqas, which are entered in list II of Act I of 1869. By section 10 this is conclusive that a family custom of impartibility governs them. But as regards the Bahrampur branch of the family, their ancestor was Kishan Das (see Exhibit 57, page 57 of Part III of the record) and there is no record of any custom of impartibility among any of his descendants with the possible exception of this estate of Bahrampur which we are considering. Partitions took place freely among the descendants of Kishan Das and in the direct line of descent of the parties. (See the judgment of the lower Court at pages 455 & 456 of Part I of the record). The idea, therefore, of an ancient family custom, which was already binding upon the parties before they acquired Bahrampur estate, is clearly disproved.

The second pleading was that impartibility actually runs with the land in the case of Bahrampur, that even if the Raekwars were to sell it to outsiders they would be obliged to take it as an impartible estate. Such a contention is equally improbable and has now been abandoned.

But in a recent decision of the Privy Council, Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (1), their Lordships said:—

"It is urged against the appellant that he alleged the custom on which his case depends in three different forms: first, in the plaint filed on the 12th July 1907 in which he asserted his rights as arising from current and immemorial custom of the dynasty of the parties; secondly, in an affidavit sworn by him on the 10th July 1907, where he said that the custom was 'that a woman after her arriage loses all interest and right of inheritance in the property left by her relations (on the father's side)'; and, finally, in the plaint in the present proceedings, where the custom is asserted in these terms:—'But according to the custom regulating the inheritance by famales in the family of the parties and amongst the respectable Baluchis and Sardars, which is ancient and which is invariable, and has been acted upon from time immemorial, and which has obtained amongst Sunnis or Shias alike, a woman is entitled to her proper dowry according to the rank or status of the family, and she has no other rights of inheritance to the property of her paternal relations.'

"There certainly is a marked difference between these different customs but their Lordships are not prepared to give this fact such weight as to crush the appellant's case, and they will assume that the custom upon which he relies is a custom by which, in the event of intestacy, daughters of the deceased are excluded in favour of their brothers, and sisters in favour of male paternal collaterals, and the question is, was such a custom proved?".

We infer from those remarks that the custom must be sufficiently defined for its application to the facts of the case to be clear and undoubted, but that the strict English rules of pleading are not to be applied. We are prepared, therefore, to allow the appellants to succeed provided they can prove the existence of a family custom relating to the Bahrampur estate and to treat their wider pleadings as surplusage.

This brings us to the question whether such a custom is proved. It is necessary to consider in some detail the actual formation of the Bahrampur estate. It is stated in the pleadings that the first member of the family to acquire lands in Bahrampur was Surat Singh (see pedigree in the written statement, page 29 of Part I). In the wajib-ul-arz of what may be called the parent village of Bahrampur (see Exhibit No. 31, page 18, and Exhibit A1 at page 50 of Part III of the record), there is a statement "Surat Singh took on this side of the river a portion of village Bahrampur and village Athaisa by mortgage about 50 years ago." But there is no other evidence that Surat Singh acquired any land in Bahrampur or in any part of the present estate, and there is little doubt that the statement in the wajib-ul-arz is incorrect. The date given of "50 years ago" is out of the question. The mortgage obtained by his sons is dated 1709 (Exhibit A5, page 162) and his own acquisition of certain ferry rights is dated as far back as 1663. This document is Exhibit A3 on page 160. By it Surat Singh acquired by purchase the toll on the ferry of Bahrampur. There is no evidence that he acquired anything else. The mortgage obtained by his son, Achal Singh, is dated 1709. It is of 1/5th of Bahrampur. At that time all mortgages were possessory. It adds "and the right of passage in the said village." The word translated "the right of passage" is "guzar" which is said to be the Persian for "ferry." Presumably, Achal Singh had inherited this from his father Surat Singh but thought it advisable to have it mentioned in his deed (Exhibit A5, page 162). Four years later, in 1713, he obtained a mortgage of 2/5ths share in the same village. Two years later, in 1715, he obtained a third mortgage (Exhibit A6, page 182) either on another 2/5ths share of the same village or as an additional charge on the same 2/5ths

Putting the facts at their highest for the appellants, Achal Singh was now mortgagee in possession of the whole of the village of Bahrampur.

The wajib-ul-arz of Bahrampur (Exhibit A1 at page 50 of Part III) states that Surat Singh himself acquired a portion of village Bahrampur and village Athaisa by mortgage about 50 years ago. As we have said above, this is not correct. The wajib-ul-arz of Athaisa (Exhibit 82, page 47, Part III) states that it was Mahpal Singh who obtained the lambardari of the said village by means of mortgage. We do not possess the original document; but Mahpal Singh is the son of Achal Singh; so it is probable that Athaisa was acquired somewhat later.

It is stated in the wajib-ul-arz of Sabza (Exhibit 81, page 45) that there are two pattis in the village and that patti No. 1 was included in the ilaqa of Bahrampur in 1181 Fasli. This will correspond to 1762, so if it is correct Sabza would be either the second or the third village to be acquired.

The wajib ul-arz of Zumerpur is the plaintiffs' Exhibit 83, page 48, Part III. It is stated that the share No. 2 was mortgaged in 1817 to Mahpal Singh and Jang Bahadur Singh. They are described as ancestors of Lalta Singh, but as a matter of fact only Mahpal Singh was Lalta Singh's ancestor. Jang Bahadur is his brother, and the fact, if it be a fact, that the mortgage stood in both names, goes against the appellants' case that the estate was then impartible. Share No. 3 has also come to be included in the Bahrampur estate but the wajib-ul-arz says that it is not known how this came about. It is known to have been in other hands in 1829 and after that date there were at least two devolutions which presumably took some time. So the acquisition of this village must be fairly late. Admittedly, these 4 villages form the original estate.

It is admitted by the respondents that these four villages were included in the kabuliyat of Gur Prasad Singh, the fourth in descent of Surat Singh. It is difficult to see how any custom of impartibility could have existed earlier than Gur Prasad Singh. Wherever the origin of the title can be traced it is a mortgage. Now under the Muhammadan Law there was no period of limitation for the redemption of a mortgage. (See Tagore Law Lectures, 1882, Mitra on Limitation, Vol. I, page 16). This continued to be the law on annexation. Bengal Regulation No. II of 1805, section 3, clause 4, provides that "no length of time shall.....bar the congizance of a suit for recovery of a property in cases of mortgage." The Limitation Act of 1859 provided for the first time for a limitation (Mitra's Limitation Act, page 56.) The limitation was 60 years (section 1, clause 51.) Oudh was exempted from this provision for at least two years (section 24), but in 1860 a Circular No. 190/2917, dated 13th August 1860, applied the same period of 60 years to Oudh. Therefore, the family did not possess an absolute title to these lands until the year 1860. It was remarked by the Privy Council in Rama Kanta Das Mahapatra v. Shamanand Das Mahapatra (2).—"It is hard to see how a family custom of succession to an estate not absolutely owned by the family could ever have existed." The facts of that case were different. The estate was attached to a certain office which could be granted or withdrawn at the pleasure of Government. But we are of opinion that the principle applies to an estate held merely with the rights of a mortgagee. In this case, as in that, the title was defeasible at any moment and it is this which makes the difficulty of a custom attaching to the estate.

Looking at the pedigree on page 29 of Part I, it will be seen that Surat Singh never owned any part of this estate and that his son, Achal Singh, was acquiring portions by mortgage. Achal Singh had two sons, Mahpal Singh and Jang Bahadur Singh. We find some evidence that a mortgage was made in the names of both, but it must be admitted in favour of the appellants that there is no other record of Jang Bahadur or his descendants owning any part of the property. This, however, is not conclusive because according to the same pedigree the line of Jang Bahadur Singh died out in the fourth generation corresponding in number of descents with Adhar Singh who died some 60 or 70 years before institution. So Jang Bahadur counts for very little one way or the other. There seems no reason to suppose that the estate was regarded as impartible in the time of Mahpal Singh.

Of Sardar Singh, son of Mahpal Singh, we know still less. We find some descendants of Meharban Singh, brother of Sardar Singh, raising a claim to the estate as late as in the time of Lalta Singh who did not die till 1882, but their claim was unsuccessful. Sardar Singh had 3 sons Gur Prasad, Sheo Ghulam and Dina Singh. If the estate was impartible Gur Prasad Singh was entitled to get it and it is strongly in the appellants' favour that the whole estate is now in the hands of his descendants. We know nothing of Sheo Ghulam Singh except that his son Bishun Singh was tenant of 19 bighas of land in Bahrampur at a rent of Rs. 25. This may have been the arrangement made for his maintenance and will point to the estate being impartible at that time; but of course it is far from being conclusive.

Dina Singh is an important person. We find a mortgage dated 1806 for a period of 10 years executed in favour of Dina Singh who is described in it as "Zemindar and proprietor of Bahrampur etc." And in the wajib-ul-arz of village Athaisa (Exhibit 82, page 47, of Part III), the successive holdings of the kabuliyat are given as follows:—

Fasli	A. D.
1224 to 1228	1817 to 1821	Gur Prasad Singh.
1229 to 1247	1822 to 1840	Dina Singh.
1248	1841	Adhar Singh son of Gur Prasad Singh.
1249	1842
1250	1843	Direct management.
1251	1844
1252	1845	Dina Singh.
1253 to 1255	1846 to 1848	Direct management.
1256 to 1260	1849 to 1853	Baryar Singh, son of Dina Singh.
1261 1262	1854 1855	Lalta Singh, son of Adhar Singh.
1263	1856	Ganga Singh.
1264	1857	Settlement made with Lalta Singh.
1266	1859	do do do.

The kabuliyat was a document which was executed by a person who thereby undertook to be responsible to Government for the payment of the land revenue. He was not necessarily the proprietor, but naturally such engagements were as a rule entered into either by the proprietor himself or by some great taluqdar who made himself responsible for collecting and paying in the revenue of some smaller Zemindar who thereby became to some extent his vassal. The granting of the kabuliyat to Dina Singh, Ganga Singh and Baryar Singh is pro tanto evidence that the estate was not at that time impartible, otherwise the kabuliyat would only have been granted to the sole owner, not to any other member of the family. It is perhaps stronger evidence against primogeniture.

There is thus very little evidence that a custom existed at the time of the annexation. There is no doubt some. There had been, so far, no partition. But this fact is not such strong evidence as it would otherwise be owing to the state of affairs in Oudh before annexation. In Sleeman's Journey through Oudh at page 169 of the original edition it is said:—

"In Oudh the law of primogeniture prevails among all the talukdars, or principal landholders; and, to a certain extent, among the middle class of landholders, of the Rajput or any other military class. If one co-sharer of this has several sons, his eldest often inherits all the share he leaves, with all the obligations incident upon it, of maintaining the rest of the family."

"This rule of primogeniture is, however, often broken through during the lifetime of the father, who, having more of natural affection than family pride, divides the lands between his sons. After his death they submit to this division, and take their respective shares, to descend to their children, by the law of primogeniture, or to be again sub-divided as may seem to them best, or they fight it out among themselves, till the strongest gets all."

In this state of things the fact that strict Hindu Law was not always followed can be explained on other grounds than the existence of a custom valid by law. It is quite probable that the family was showing a tendency to adopt the prevalent fashion of primogeniture. It is quite impossible that a custom sufficiently ancient to merit recognition as law could have been in existence.

This brings us to the evidence of recent usage which is strong. The most important parts of it are certain proceedings in the Settlement Courts about the time of the First Regular Settlement.

On the general question of the evidential value of decisions by Courts on questions of custom, it is not necessary to say much in view of the recent judgment of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ibrahim Rowther v. Shaikh Ibrahim Rowther (3). In that case their Lordships considered a succession of judgments, treating the decisions as valuable evidence: for instance, in dealing with a decree of the Madras High Court in which Innes, J., decided in favour of the usage, it was said: "There was, however, an appeal from his decree which ended in a compromise — a circumstance which deprives his decision of much of its evidentiary value." In the well-known Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court, Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall (4), where the reverse was held, the question was not one of a custom but merely of a right to immoveable property.

In the present case there are several decisions which, taken together, show that a custom of impartibility was recognised by the Courts at the time of Settlement and continuously to the present day. The date of institution is 6th July 1917. Impartibility has been the usage of the estate at least since 29th May 1868 when the estate was settled with Lalta Singh alone but that is a period of 49 years only and a usage of such recent date cannot be regarded as a custom. On this point of the existence of a usage from the year 1868, we differ from the Court of Trial and it is necessary, therefore, to give our reasons in some detail.

We depend mainly on the proceedings in Court. But we also attach some weight to plaintiffs' oral evidence. We are unable to agree with the adverse criticisms passed on that evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The earliest document is A17 on page 195 of Part III. It is a copy of certain questions and answers put to Sital Singh, the son of Dina Singh, who is mentioned above, together with a judgment. It states that Sital Singh claimed that he also had a zemindari in this estate and that his name be recorded amongst the proprietors or that the khewat be prepared in his name. It is stated in the judgment that during the Mutiny Sital Singh had dispossessed Lalta Singh but at the time of recent Settlement he did not put forward any claim, rather he never put in an appearance. The recent Settlement referred to is called the Settlement of, 64, that is 1264 Fasli, and means the Settlement of 1857 which followed the annexation and preceded the Mutiny. Sital Singh's claim was dismissed and it was said: "As Sital Singh's uncle is Lalta Singh and it is the custom of the pargana, so Lalta Singh be directed to give food and raiment to him."

Next, there is Exhibit A188, page 197, in which the Commissioner decides a claim by Sital Singh to receive Rs. 325 a year from Lalta Singh as allowance. The order says: "Lalta Singh now says that he is ready to pay the stipend promised from 69 Fasli. This arrangement can stand therefore, meantime, the whole question being open to reconsideration at the Regular Settlement." The first part of this order might point to a withdrawal of his claim to the estate by Sital Singh, but the second part shows that nothing was settled at that time.

When the Regular Settlement came Sital Singh brought a suit. It is to be remembered that all actions relating to land were decided at that time by the Settlement Officers, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was barred. The judgment of the Settlement Officer is Exhibit A21 to be found at page 229. Sital Singh in this litigation admitted that the estate was impartible. What he set up was that it did not descend by primogeniture but to the eldest. I may add that in the present case respondent is prepared to admit primogeniture, if impartibility is proved. The reason of this is that the ordinary Hindu rule as applied to impartible estates would not give the estate to the plaintiff. In the present suit, therefore, we are concerned only with an allegation of impartibility plus primogeniture by the appellants and a denial of impartibility by the respondents. The Settlement Officer had to decide whether there was primogeniture. He decided that there was, and he dismissed the claim of Sital Singh and others. It is a little difficult to see how there came to be six plaintiffs, all claiming an impartible estate. But presumably the explanation is to be found in the fact that members of a joint family have a right to maintenance out of an impartible estate belonging to the joint family and have also a hope of succession thereto. In this judgment the learned Settlement Officer dealt with the kabuliyats held by Dina Singh and Baryar Singh. He says: "it is very clear that Adhar Singh, Sheo Bakhsh Singh and Lalta Singh were the actual proprietors." This Sheo Bakhsh will be seen in the pedigree at page 29 of Part I. He was the eldest son of Adhar Singh and it appears that he succeeded to the estate. He died childless and his brother, Lalta Singh, succeeded. There was a doubtful adoption by Sheo Bakhsh's widow to which I shall come later, but it is of little importance because the boy adopted was Lal Bahadur Singh, the son of Lalta Singh who ultimately succeeded to the property on the death of his father, and who never showed any disposition to push his claims, during his father's lifetime. Whether the learned Settlement Officer was right or not, there is perhaps scarcely sufficient evidence on the record to show. His order was appealed to the Commissioner whose judgment begins with Exhibit A 203 at page 243 of Part III. The Commissioner made the following remarks on page 244:—"The parties are all descended from one Sardar Singh. It seems satisfactorily proved that the custom of the family was that one person, i.e., the eldest son, should be kabuliyatdar and that no partition ever took place. But it is not impossible that the reason of this was not so much that there was any well-defined usage barring partition as that the members of the family being on good terms, partition was not desired. It is, however, certainly in favour of respondent that it is admitted that some descendants of the original purchasers have long lived quite separately and apparently never claimed any share. There seems no doubt that both Dina, uncle, and Baryar, first cousin, of Adhar Singh, were kabuliyatdars as was also Ganga Singh, son of Dina. When the relationship is so close it is not easy to determine the nature of the respective positions of persons living together as an undivided Hindu family. Ganga Singh certainly did not hold as karinda and it seems necessary that some further enquiry should be made though the Court agrees in the Assistant Settlement Officer's opinion that Lalta Singh, respondent, is the head of the family and ought to be sole lambardar of all the ancestral villages: certainly the further enquiry might be postponed to khewat but it is for some reason desirable that it should be made at once."

The same order is continued in Exhibit 68 on page 246. The learned Commissioner remanded certain issues. The first issue was: Were appellants and respondents or the persons through whom they claim living together as an undivided Hindu family up to any time within limitation? It was said that if this issue was found in favour of the respondent

(i. e., in the negative) no further inquiry was necessary, but if it was found that there had been a separation within limitation a second issue was to be decided.—When and why did separation take place and had appellants or their ancestors at any time a fair claim to partition or to hold shares under the respondent, he being sadar malguzar according to the custom of the pargana and clan? And, if so, what shares? Two other issues were remanded with which we are not concerned. The importance of this remand is that it definitely raised the question of partibility which had not been in issue between the parties in the original litigation. The Commissioner, rightly or wrongly, made a new case for the appellants. The findings on these issues are not forthcoming. It is understood that the record has been destroyed. But we possess the orders of the Commissioner when he got the finding (Exhibit A 185 at page 240). He said: "The appellants have not improved their case. They failed to prove that as members of an undivided family they could claim shares." Certain other points are dealt with, and then the Court affirms the Assistant Settlement Officer's order with regard to all the villages except Niamatpur. This is a very important litigation. The branch of Dina Singh, which would have been entitled to a share amounting to half the estate if the estate was partible, brought their claims to the test of a legal decision. It is true that they themselves alleged impartibility but the reason of this may well have been that they believed the estate to be impartible. The Appellate Court demanded a decision on the question of (or at least of a subsisting claim to) partibility and decided that they had failed to prove it. It might of course be argued that this decision loses its force because Sital Singh had not set up partibility, but after the decision he did so. Exhibit A30 at page 270 shows that the same parties put in a claim for half of the village of Bahrampur but the Settlement Officer considered that the question was res judicata in virtue of the Commissioner's decision and the suit was dismissed. This second decision fills up any deficiency that may have been in the first, and the two taken together amount to a clear legal decision based on the existence of a custom of impartibility and primogeniture that Dina Singh's branch of the family was entitled to no share in the estate. The Commissioner's judgment is dated 13th April 1868. The attempt by Sital Singh to revive his claim to a share (Exhibit A28, page 252) is dated 2nd July 1868. It was disposed of by the Settlement Officer on 18th May 1869.

In the meantime, two other proceedings in Court had run their course. If the pedigree at page 29, Part I, is looked at, it will be seen that Lalta Singh was the second of three brothers. His eldest brother, Sheo Bakhsh Singh, held the kabuliyat for three years from 1844 as appears from the translation of that document (Exhibit A 13 at page 192 of Part III). On his death Lalta Singh seems to have obtained possession, but the third brother, Debi Bakhsh Singh, put in a petition (Exhibit A 48, page 202) in which he claimed to have his name entered in the column of proprietors. This was not the first time that he made such a claim. Exhibit A47 shows a demand for a one-third share by Debi Bakhsh Singh as far back as 9th December 1865. It does not appear what orders were passed on that application. Probably, it was held over until the Regular Settlement. Lalta Singh's reply is Exhibit 13 on page 204. He sets up primogeniture. This document by the way contains some interesting information as regards the formation of the estate. This claim by Debi Bakhsh Singh is of course evidence that the estate was partible, but it is rebutted by his withdrawal of the claim. (Exhibit A49, page 207). In this Debi Bakhsh Singh said:—"The rule of division is not in our family from six generations and this suit was brought on account of ill-feeling amongst the brothers." Accordingly the application (Exhibit A50, page 208, Part III) was dismissed on 12th May 1869.

On the same day another application was dealt with. It is of no real importance. Sheo Bakhsh Singh had left a widow Musammat Phul Kuar and she made an application (Exhibit A44 at page 258). It was not in any way opposed to impartibility and primogeniture. What it set up was an adoption by herself of Lal Bahadur, the eldest son of Lalta Singh. As Lal Bahadur Singh would succeed his father in any case, this application was described by the Settlement Officer as a frivolous redundancy. The lady herself withdrew it. The final order is dated 10th May 1869 just two days before Debi Bakhsh's application was dismissed.

The next application was filed by Sarabjit Singh. He will be found on the pedigree as one of the descendants of Meharban Singh which carries us back a long way, for the common ancester is Mahpal Singh, one of the two sons of Achal Singh. His application is Exhibit A51, at page 260. He withdrew his claim altogether, agreeing to pay rent for such lands as he held apparently at the same rate that he was already paying. This appears from a comparison of Exhibit A83 with Exhibit 47, at page 262. This application is interesting as showing that even Meharban Singh's branch thought it worth while putting in some claim at the time of the Regular Settlement, but evidently did not consider their claim worth very much, as they withdrew it immediately. Orders were passed in that case on 2nd May 1869.

Before final orders had been passed in any of these three cases, Lalta Singh had applied for a primogeniture sanad. This was on the 20th April 1869. His application is Exhibit A38, page 190. He alleges an old family custom, and claims to be entered in List II of section 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, which is a list of taluqas which, according to the custom of the family on or before the 13th day of February 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. The Settlement Officer passed orders on 18th May 1869. He recommended that Lalta Singh should get a sanad and undoubtedly he based his recommendation on a finding of impartibility and primogeniture, but the evidentiary value of this recommendation is weakened by certain errors contained in it. The judgment says that "impartibility and primogeniture appear to have been the practice for the last four generations at least, and not unlikely for the four ones when some of the villages were first acquired by Surat Singh." There have not been eight generations even counting Surat Singh himself, but if we reckon the devolution from Sheo Bakhsh Singh to his brother Lalta Singh as a generation, the four generations would take us back to Gur Prasad Singh, and four more to Surat Singh. As we have already found Surat Singh did not acquire any of the villages. The judgment goes on to say: "Primogeniture may be accepted to have been the rule regarding the management and visible ownership of the estate." This might mean merely that the eldest son of the eldest son was manager on behalf of the whole joint family. But apparently what it does mean is that this management and visible ownership is to be regarded as evidence of proprietary right. The judgment then says: "No division too seems to have taken place, and thus whatever might have been the supposed custom it never appears to have been put into practice." This remark contains an error of law. Division is the ordinary Hindu Law. It is impartibility which is the special custom. The judgment then refers to the recent claims for shares saying that all but one have been dismissed and that that one is going to be dismissed. It says: "The result of this will be that plaintiff will have been secured by decrees in our Court in the position of an independent and sole owner of the estate he now has had settled with him. On this ground then he might be said to be entitled to a sanad." It goes on to say: "Plaintiff's documentary proofs do not establish his assertion that his estate was recognised in the Nawabi to be a taluqa, and it may be fairly considered as a fact that this estate was not a taluqa in the ordinary acceptation of the meaning of that word. The jama also is a small one, being only Rs. 3,619, and this too is the revised jama (mal)". In the other paragraphs the learned Settlement Officer repeats himself several times, and ends by recommending a sanad. This order is dated 18th May 1869. Four days later the Settlement Officer withdrew his recommendation. This is Exhibit A43, page 268. He says that it has come to his knowledge that Lalta Singh had received one year's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 in connection with murder of certain Europeans during the Mutiny, and for this reason he withdraws his recommendation. The learned Commissioner refused the sanad in the following short order:—"Independent of the fact of Lalta Singh's bad conduct as explained at page 17 of Settlement Officer's notes I do not consider that a case has been made out for granting a sanad." This is Exhibit 9, page 276. The sanad proceedings are evidence that the authorities regarded Lalta Singh as being the sole owner of an impartible estate which, however, was not entitled to rank as a taluqa.

Lastly, there were the proceedings at Regular Settlement. This Settlement was a very important one because by the Proclamation of the 15th March 1858 the proprietary right in the soil of the Province of Oudh was declared confiscated to the British Government "which will dispose of it in such manner as to it may deem fit." Therefore, the title to the estate of Bahrampur must be in some form or other a grant from the British Government. There were two forms in which Government conferred titles. The first is by sanad, but, as we have seen, a sanad was refused in the case of Bahrampur. The other was by establishment of what would, but for the confiscation, have been a title to proprietary rights at the Regular Settlement. (See the First Schedule of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869). The object of Government was by no means to deprive the old proprietors of their rights provided they acknowledged the authority of Government and were ready to enter into an engagement to pay revenue. Accordingly, Settlement Courts were directed to inquire into the titles as they had existed before confiscation and to give decrees to the persons who had possessed rights before annexation. So this last proceeding is in the form of a suit by Lalta Singh against Government. The judgment of the Settlement Officer is Exhibit A37, page 250. It is based upon the previous litigation between Lalta Singh and Sital Singh. The judgment begins: "Vide the long proceedings between Lalta Singh plaintiff and Sital Singh his relation. From a perusal of those proceedings it is clear that the plaintiff's title to all these villages is good against the Government. The claim (obviously a slip for Court), therefore, decrees to Lalta Singh the proprietary right in the villages of which a list follows." This is dated 29th May 1868. It thus followed closely upon the decision of the original suit of Sital Singh where the Commissioner's order was dated 13th April 1868. It is considerably earlier than the rejection of Sital Singh's second application which was not disposed of till 18th May 1869. It is also earlier than the other three proceedings, namely, Debi Bakhsh Singh's application, Musammat Phul Kuar's application and the sanad proceedings. None of these began until late in 1868 and the latest which was the sanad was disposed of on 1st June 1869. The decree, therefore, is to be looked at in the light of the first litigation of Sital Singh, but not in the light of any of the other proceedings, which had not been begun at that time. It has been contended for the appellants that this decree itself conferred upon Lalta Singh a title to hold the estate as an impartible estate passing by primogeniture. We do not think that this is so. It certainly conferred upon Lalta Singh an estate as proprietor. It is a complete answer to any claimant who cannot claim through Lalta Singh. If any one else had any rights in the Bahrampur estate these rights were confiscated by the Proclamation and have not been restored. But the Settlement Officer was not deciding the question whether the estate was impartible or not. He had only to decide whether Lalta Singh, as he puts it, had a title good against the Government. The decree given was for the proprietary right. We do not think it is permissible to import into the decree everything that was decided in the litigation of Sital Singh. But Lalta Singh had got rid of all his rivals. It is surprising that Debi Bakhsh Singh and Sarabjit Singh were allowed to raise their claim at all. One would have supposed that they could be completely answered by saying Lalta Singh has already got his decree. But an equally effective course was taken by the withdrawal of their claim. And Lalta Singh stood forth as sole owner.

He died in 1882. Mutation proceedings then began. The details here are of more importance with regard to the plea of limitation than for that of custom. It is sufficient to say here that Lal Bahadur Singh claimed mutation on the ground of impartibility and primogeniture and that his claim was not opposed by any one. His brothers, Sher Bahadur Singh, who is the present defendant No. 5 and Nirman Singh, the present plaintiff No. 1, were minors at the time. Neither they nor their mother raised any objection. In spite of this, however, the learned Extra Assistant Commissioner considered that it was proper to follow the general law of inheritance and he entered the names of the younger sons as the co-sharers. Against this order Lal Bahadur Singh appealed. The Deputy Commissioner's order is Exhibit A64, page 303.

"Thakur Lal Bahadur Singh appellant versus Nirman Singh, Sher Bahadur Singh and wife of Lalta Singh respondents.

"Claim: dakhil kharij of mehal Byrampur.

"Extra Assistant Commissioner Munshi Janki Prasad had ordered dakhil kharij to take place, in the estate of the late Lalta Singh of Byrampur in the name of his eldest son Lal Bahadur Singh, but has directed that the names of the two younger sons be added as being also in possession.

"Lal Bahadur has appealed from this and relies on the numerous decisions by the Settlement Courts showing that the estate is indivisible, the brothers only getting maintenance.

"On consulting the haqiyat misl of Mauza Bharampur I find this to be correct and prima facie the Extra Assistant Commissioner's order seems incorrect as the only person who could be in possession as proprietor is Lal Bahadur. Latter's brothers admitted to Extra Assistant Commissioner that they had no objection to Lal Bahadur being recorded as malik. Also the mother said the same, the two younger sons being minors.

"The case seems pretty clear, but respondents should be summoned before passing final orders. Case for 20th instant.

8th July 1882. (Sd.) M. L. FERRAR,
Deputy Commissioner.

"21st—No time yesterday. To-day present applicant and the two minors. Their mother and guardian is not present. Sher Bahadur and Nirman Singh, aged 16 and 15, appear with an application from their mother excusing her appearance at such a distance (35 miles) in this weather, she being a pardanashin. She says in it that the estate has never been divided and that she has no objection to dakhil kharij, in the eldest boy's name Lal Bahadur's.

"Sher Bahadur, aged 16, declares that the signature to this is his mother's and was written by her in his presence.

(Sd.) FERRAR,
Deputy Commissioner.

"Order.

"Such being the facts of the case I accept the appeal from the order of Extra Assistant Commissioner and cancel so much of his order as not registers (sic) Sher Bahadur and Nirman Singh in the Tahsil Books as proprietors in possession. This order will not of course debar them from claiming, should at any time such a course appear to either of them advisable, their share in the Estate. No costs."

The custom was thus asserted and enforced.

Lal Bahadur Singh held possession till his death in 1916. The mutation proceedings that followed on his death are recent. The present suit was instituted on 6th July 1917. It will suffice to say that the Deputy Commissioner came to a finding that the estate was partible. This is Exhibit 15, at page 627. The Commissioner, however, reversed this finding. (Exhibit A47, page 687) and the Board upheld the Commissioner (Exhibit A75, page 675). So defendant No. 1, Rudra Pratap Narain Singh, is at present entered in the khewat as sole proprietor of the estate.

The state of things during the reign of Lal Bahadur Singh will have to be discussed in detail in deciding the question of limitation. It is sufficient to say here that these proceedings in Court are supported by the testimony of a large number of witnesses, members of the family, patwaris, family priests and so forth who assert the custom, and that the evidence to the contrary does not appear to us to possess any value. We find, therefore, that there was an established usage of impartibility which carries us back as far as 1868, that is to say, 49 years earlier than the institution of this suit.

Now a custom must be ancient. It was said in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (5):—"Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India, but it is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends." This dictum was quoted with approval in a recent case, Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero (1).

That the custom must be ancient is clear from the authorities and it is admitted by the appellants' Counsel. We have been pressed with a decision of a Bench of this Court in Yasin Ali Khan v. Murtuza Husain Khan (6). It was said on page 299: A local custom and a family usage of impartibility or primogeniture do not stand on the same footing. "A local custom carries with it an idea of great antiquity, and derives its origin and force from its observance by successive generations of men belonging to different families, castes and tribes, resident within a specified local area. No such antiquity is necessary to prove a family usage of impartibility or primogeniture. There is some affinity between it and a usage of trade, for the essential condition in regard to each is that it must have 'fructuated into maturity' and that it must not be growing. 'A usage,' says Roy, 'may grow up within a very short period, but a custom must have a halo of ages and centuries' uniformity and consistency attached to it in order to be recognised as such. Usage may be defined to be a uniform practice among a people or class with respect to certain matters or things'. (Roy's Tagore Law Lectures, 1908, page 6).

"In Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (7), their Lordships of the Privy Council, in dealing with the question of mercantile usage to charge interest upon contracts observed: 'To support such a ground, there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which in respect of all these becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appear to be so well known and acquiesced in, that it may be reasonably presumed to have been an ingredient tacitly imported by the parties into their contracts.' The same kind of evidence, which is needed to establish a local custom or an ordinary family usage, unconnected with the ownership of large compact estates, principalities or raj, is not required to establish a family usage governing the devolution of such compact estates, principalities or raj; for the principality or raj may have come into existence within a few generations in the same way as a new trade with certain mercantile usages attached to it might grow up within a few decades. To insist on evidence to prove an immemorial user in those cases would, therefore, be incompatible with the history of the acquisition of those estates, or the growth of such trade. Circumstances may prevent the formation of certain property, held by a family, into compact estate for a long time, and yet when an estate becomes compact and falls under the control of one man, usages may grow up in connection with it in the course of a few generations, which might be recognised as valid and binding on the subsequent holders of the property. The custom of impartibility and primogeniture has grown up round many estates in like manner, and it would be obviously futile to expect evidence of the existence of such a custom before the estates became compact or while it was undergoing the process of mutilation, extension or enlargement by the vicissitudes of time." The decision in that case was upheld by the Privy Council in appeal. Their Lordships' judgment is reported in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (8); but the question of antiquity was not discussed by their Lordships. They decided the case on other grounds. To a certain extent the principles of law enunciated in this judgment have been abandoned by the appellants' Counsel who concedes that he must prove his custom to be ancient, but these remarks would still possess some weight in considering the degree of antiquity which must attach to a family custom for it to be held valid in law. With great respect, we venture to dissent from the view of our learned colleague. Usage should never be used as a synonym for custom. It has two distinct legitimate meanings but neither of them should be confused with custom. It is used to denote what is done by people uniformly and consistently. Used in this sense usage has not the force of law. It would only obtain the force of law when it is proved to be reasonable, invariable, ancient, etc., in which case it becomes what is known as custom. It is also used to denote what is done uniformly and consistently and has been so done in a certain locality or by a certain trade or profession, etc., for a period sufficient to make it probable that people in their contracts and in their contractual relationships adopt it as an implied term or condition. Where this is the case a Court which has to put a construction upon a contract imports into the terms of the contract the trade or local usage. Here, again, usage has not the force of law nor will it be sanctioned by the Courts if contrary to positive law. The parties could eneter into a contract in contravention of the usage but if they enter into a contract which neither affirms nor denies the usage, the usage may be proved in order to ascertain what was in their minds when they wrote the contract. See Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 10, page 221. It was in this latter sense that the usage was given effect to in the case of Edward Dalgliesh v. Sheikh Gozaffar Hossein (9) where Rampini and Henderson, JJ., observed.

"It may be perfectly correct that a long period of time must elapse, before a custom in respect of their transferability, of an occupancy tenure can grow up; but it does not appear to us that this is necessarily the case with regard to the growth of a 'usage' or local 'usage' in respect of this matter."

This passage is quoted in Yasin Ali Khan v. Murtuza Husain Khan (6), as authority for the distinction drawn between a local custom and a family custom. But with all respect we submit that it will not bear this interpretation. The Calcutta case itself related to a local usage and not to a family custom. A distinction was drawn between custom and usage and the usage was enforced not on the ground that it was enforceable as a custom but solely on the ground that section 183 of the Bengal Tenancy Act made an express saving that the Act should not affect either custom or usage. Usage in this case was invoked as interpreting a contractual relationship.

Then, again, there is the case where usage has some legal effect not per se but as prima facie evidence of a custom. Where a well-established recent usage is proved and the proof is carried back, as it is in the present case, for a period which may be regarded as covering the period of living memory, a presumption is thereby raised that this usage is in reality the exercise of an ancient and valid custom. If there is no rebutting evidence a decision in favour of the custom may be based on this evidence alone. If the presumption raised by recent usage is rebutted, as we hold that it is in this case, by proof that an ancient custom could not have come into existence, then the usage fails to possess any legal effect.

This use of usage as prima facie evidence of custom must be distinguished from a position which is sometimes taken up, and we think wrongly, that there is any such analogy between a custom in India and a trade or local usage as to justify it being held that custom in India need not be ancient. No doubt, a local or trade usage need not be ancient and no doubt again a custom in India need not, as it must in England, be proved to have existed from time immemorial. For this distinction between English and Indian law there is an obvious reason. English law knows nothing of family custom. A family custom by its very nature cannot be immemorial in the sense that the beginning of it is lost in antiquity. The very expression postulates the possibility of tracing back the family to its separation from the tribe. Nor, again, is a family custom like to be as ancient as the Hindu or Muhammadan Law it supersedes. If, therefore, custom in India is to include family custom it follows that it is impossible to require that it be proved to have existed from time immemorial. In this one particular, custom in India resembles a local or trade usage but in this particular alone. There is no sound authority for holding that custom in India need not be proved to be ancient.

In the present case the custom cannot be regarded as ancient. It is carried back clearly enough to the year 1868, which is 49 years from institution, and in that year competent Courts decided that it was a valid custom. In our opinion their decisions were wrong though we are prepared to admit that there was in 1868 a strong idea, not unsupported by facts, that impartibility and primogeniture was the custom of the Bahrampur estate. We find, however, that it is impossible that the custom, as a certain and invariable thing, could have existed much earlier than 1868. The estate in the hands of Gur Prasad Singh comprised only four villages and his brother, Dina Singh, was successfully asserting a right of management and even of ownership. It is true that in the preceding generation Sardar Singh had succeeded and excluded his brother Meharban Singh from his estate, but it is by no means clear that Meharban Singh did not obtain compensation from other lands belonging to the family. In the words of the Privy Council, it is essential that special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession should be established by clear and unambiguous evidence to be ancient and invariable. The clear and unambiguous evidence here does not carry us back much more than 50 years and the evidence against the possibility of a custom comes down almost to the same date. Defendant No 1 has failed to prove the necessary antiquity of this custom.

The next question with which we deal is the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the parties to the suit on both sides constitute a joint Hindu family. It is maintained that about 1890 when the mother died the two younger brothers of Lal Bahadur Singh separated from him. What would be gained by the appellants if this were proved, is not very clear. Even if separation took place the plaintiffs could (apart from the question of limitation) claim partition of the estate on the ground that it had not been partitioned up to date. The Subordinate Judge has given convincing reasons for holding that there was never any separation on the mother's death. The facts that the minor sons might live separately in a house built by their mother would not constitute separation. There are admissions by Lal Bahadur Singh of jointness of the family subsequent to this date We accept the finding that the family is still joint.

The next question is that of limitation. Three issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, namely, 10, 11, and 12, but they were decided together and the 12th issue alone need be considered. It runs thus:—

If the property in suit be found to be joint family property, then have the plaintiffs been excluded within their knowledge from the enjoyment of it more than twelve years before suit?

It will be observed that in the plaint the plaintiffs maintain that they are still in possession. They admit in paragaph 7 of the plaint that on the death of Lal Bahadur Singh defendants Nos. 1 to 4, that is, the three sons and grandson of Lal Bahadur Singh, raised all sorts of disputes from the 24th of August 1916. Lal Bahadur Singh died on the 2nd June 1916. The defendant No. 1, Rudra Pratap Narain, reported his succession under section 34 of the Land Revenue Act. See Exhibit A65, page 608, Part III, and the following Exhibits. The Tahsildar made a report. Some evidence was taken before the Tahsildar and the matter went up to the Assistant Collector. He took the evidence of the defendant No. 1. See plaintiffs' Exhibit 70, page 630 of Part III. Defendant No. 1 unequivocally claimed that the property was indivisible and that he alone was entitled to mutation. The Assistant Collector granted his claim and ordered mutation in his name alone. See Exhibit A76, page 637 of Part III. On appeal to the Deputy Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner reversed the order of the Assistant Collector and directed mutation equally in the names of all the parties. On appeal to the Commissioner the Assistant Collector's order was restored and the Commissioner's order was again upheld on further appeal to the Board of Revenue. See Exhibit A75, page 675 of Part III. The entry in the khewat was in the name of defendant No. 1 alone. In the circumstances, it appears to us impossible to hold that the plaintiffs were in possession at the date of the suit. It is clear that defendant No. 1 never assumed possession on their behalf after the death of Lal Bahadur Singh (if he got possession immediately on such death which is improbable). He has been in possession from the date of mutation under a clear claim to possession on behalf of himself as the person entitled to an indivisible estate.

The fact, however, that the plaintiffs were not in possession at the date of institution of the suit, will not prove fatal to their claim if they were co-parceners with Lal Bahadur Singh. Co-parceners are entitled to claim partition of property even though they are excluded from possession. A claim for partition is one of the modes of enforcing a right to share in joint family property, Article 127 of the Litmitation Act is the Article applicable. It may be that a right to a share is not the same thing as a right to share but, that a claim to partition is one of the means of enforcing a right to share, seems well establised by authority. See Kali Kishore Roy v. Dhununjoy Roy (10). What we have, therefore, to decide in this case is, first, when the plaintiffs were excluded from enjoyment in the estate and, secondly, when the exclusion became known to them.

The Subordinate Judge appears to us to have misdirected himself in considering these two questions. He has fixed a single issue, whether the plaintiffs have been excluded within their knowledge from the enjoyment of the property, and proceeded to hold that at no point of time were the plaintiffs excluded within their knowledge. It was, however, open to the defendants to prove that exclusion took place at one time and the bringing of the fact to the knowledge of the plaintiffs at a subsequent time. It was not necessary to prove exclusion and knowledge of exclusion at one and the same moment. Much superfluous argument on behalf of the respondents in this appeal has resulted from their adopting this method of the Subordinate Court. No doubt, exclusion by a co-owner will not become adverse to those other co-owners until they become aware of it but nonetheless there may be exclusion in fact. There can be little doubt that the plaintiffs were excluded in fact in the year 1882 when Lal Bahadur Singh obtained mutation in his favour. The documentary evidence of the proceedings that took place then consists of Exhibits A55 to A64 and Exhibits A96 to A106. These are all documents relied on by the defendants. Exhibit 32 is a document relied on by the plaintiffs. Briefly speaking what took place was as follows. Lal Bahadur Singh put in a claim for mutation (Exhibit A55, page 295 of Part III) to be entered in the place of his father as he had performed the funeral rites. Evidence was adduced to support the fact that the eldest son became sole owner of the estate. Amongst the witnesses called was the widow of Lalta Singh and mother of himself and his two brothers. She clearly stated in her evidence (Exhibit A58) that there was a custom among them that the immoveable property became the property of the eldest son. There were other wirnesses to the same effect. The Tahsildar reported in favour of such family custom. The Assistant Collector, notwithstanding this evidence, directed that the names of the younger sons also should be entered as co-sharers. Lal Bahadur Singh appealed (Exhibit A62, page 301, Part III) and clearly claimed a right of sole ownership on the basis of the custom. This memorandum of appeal is important as it has been argued that his original application for mutation did not unequivocally set up his right to sole ownership. His appeal was successful. We find the Deputy Commissioner's order in Exhibit A64, page 303 of Part III. This order shows that the mother was treated as guardian and her admission was treated as conclusive against the two brothers of Lal Bahadur Singh. The Deputy Commissioner decided that Lal Bahadur Singh was alone entitled on the evidence to have his name entered though he added that his order would not debar the brothers from bringing a suit to establish their claim at any time. It appears to us that these proceedings are clear evidence that on the death of Lalta Singh, Lal Bahadur Singh took possession of the estate as property to which he was entitled to exclusive ownership and not on behalf of his younger brothers. There can be no doubt that he had sole physical possession, in the sense that he was able to deal with the property and to exclude others, and there can be no doubt that he showed determination to exercise that physical power on his own behalf. He, had, therefore, legal sole possession.

It has, however, been argued that Lal Bahadur Singh and not the mother was really the guardian of the younger brothers and that where a guardian takes possession of property owned or partly owned by his wards his possession must be deemed to have been on behalf of the wards. This does not appear to us to be a correct statement of the law. No doubt a very strong presumption arises that possession in such a case is taken on behalf of the wards but it is not an irrebuttable presumption. We may refer to two cases relied upon by the respondents. One is Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna (11). In this case, where the owner of property died leaving a mistress and she took possession of his property, it was held that, even though she was not guardian, she should be held to have taken possession on behalf of the minor sons of the man whose mistress she had been. This case is to be distinguished from the present case because there was no proof of clear assumption by the woman on her own behalf. The other case is the Privy Council case, Corea v. Appuhamy (12). Great reliance is placed on the statement in this judgment by Lord Macnaghten that the principle recognised by Wood, V. C., in Thomas v. Thomas (13) holds good: "Possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title." In this case the property had belonged to one Elias. He left a son Iseris and three sisters. The title was common to all four. At the time of the death of Elias, Iseris was in jail and the property was in the hands of the authorities. On coming out of jail he got possession from the authorities. Lord Macnaghten held that there was nothing to show any intention on his part to enter as a plunderer. He had a lawful title to enter as co-owner and must be presumed to have entered under the lawful title. He could not divest himself of lawful title by pretending that he had no title at all. This case is to be distinguished from the present case by the fact that Lal Bahadur

Singh did at the time of entry set up his edverse title in clear terms before the Revenue Authorities and they accepted his claim.

Having, therefore, decided that Lal Bahadur Singh in 1882 entered into possession to the exclusion of the plaintiffs, it is necessary to decide when that exclusion became known to the plaintiffs.

It is strongly contended by the defendant that it became known to Lal Bahadur Singh's two brothers the very day when it commenced. It is pointed out that in the mutation proceedings the sons were 16 and 15 years of age and of an age to understand what was going on. The report of the Tahsildar actually stated that these two younger sons had given assent to the mutation in favour of the eldest brother. It is pointed out again, that when the case came up finally before the Deputy Commissioner he recorded a note showing that both the boys were present and that the eldest boy verified the signature on a letter from the mother excusing her inattendance. We do not feel that it would be safe to hold that these two boys of 16 and 15 at the time were fully aware of the nature of the claim to the estate made by Lal Bahadur Singh. At the same time, it appears to us that the facts in this case necessitate an irresistible inference that the two brothers of Lal Bahadur Singh knew of his claim to hold the estate as an indivisible estate from the time that they came of age. The chief fact on which we base this inference is the fact held proved earlier in this judgment that there had been long usage of impartibility. This long usage rules out entirely the possibility of Lal Bahadur Singh having obtained possession of the property under any secret intention to hold it as his own. Another fact is that, admittedly, the brothers were living for several years after 1882 jointly with Lal Bahadur Singh and their mother. Lal Bahadur Singh could not possibly have failed to disclose to them as soon as they were of the intelligence to understand the fact that he held the estate as an indivisible estate. The mother of the boys, who, as we have seen, during the mutation proceedings in 1882, supported Lal Bahadur Singh's claim, must have informed them of the same fact. It has been objected that the evidence of the mother in these mutation proceedings (Exhibit A58, page 291, Part III) was not admitted in evidence by the Subordinate Judge. It was admitted by him on the 10th January 1918 but a year and a half later, that is, on the 15th September 1919, he has made a note: "On a further consideration presumption of thirty years does not apply to this document." We understand that this last remark arose from the fact that the lady had not signed the document but only made a mark which purported to have been attested by an identifying witness. That this evidence was duly taken must be presumed because both the Tahsildar and the Commissioner referred to the statements in it. We think that it should have been presumed genuine. Even if it were not, we could fall back on the statements of the Tahsildar and the Commissioner that the widow had admitted the claim of Lal Bahadur Singh. These statements are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act inasmuch as they form part of the record. The relation to whom the boys would go if they had any doubts in the matter must have informed them of the same fact. The defendants' oral evidence has received insufficient respect from the Subordinate Judge. That evidence is at least weighty evidence to show what was the opinion in the neighbourhood and among the relations. They held that the estate was indivisible and their opinion could not have failed to come to the knowledge of the boys if they consulted them. In this connection we would advert to the fact that the defendant No. 1's two brothers, who are arrayed as defendants Nos. 2 and 3, have admitted the plea of indivisibility to their own disadvantage. It is extremely improbable that, when the boys came of age, they would not have been put to enquiry as to their right to share in the profits of the property. Two witnesses for the defendant No. 1 depose that they never received anything except small sums given to them solely as guzara. The Subordinate Judge has wrongly objected to this evidence on the ground that the witnesses of the defendant do not depose to any amounts being actually paid in their presence. He must have forgotten the evidence. Defence witness No. 6 clearly states that guzara amount was paid in his presence. So also D. W. No. 11. So also D. W. No. 16. These witnesses have all stated unequivocally that money was paid to the boys as mere guzara. Indeed, the plaintiffs' witness No. 12 has admitted the fact that money was paid merely as guzara. It is true that there is no clear evidence that whatever was paid to them was accepted by them as persons only entitled to guzara but the evidence is sufficient to show that they were put to enquiry as to why they received only the small amounts that they did receive. Reliance has been placed also on a set of twelve letters. Exhibits A109 to A120. We cannot find that Exhibit A109 has been printed. None of these letters, however, were written until 1906. At the most, they only prove that at that date the brothers of Lal Bahadur Singh were very dissatisfied with the sums allowed to them. They are of some value as they show that the brothers of Lal Bahadur Singh must, by this date, have accepted the position that the estate was indivisible, otherwise they would not have acquiesced in the small sums allowed. In particular we would refer to Exhibit A111 printed on page 10 of Appendix 2 which purports to be a letter dated 14th March 1906 by Nirman Singh, plaintiff, to his brother Lal Bahadur Singh. In this he expresses great bitterness at his hard lot and begs his brother for sufficient amount to purchase a conveyance without which he thought that he could not continue to hold a small appointment under the Court of Wards. This document was at first admitted in evidence by the Subordinate Judge but on further consideration he doubted its genuiness. It appears that he doubted the capacity of the witnesses called to prove that it was in the handwriting of Nirman Singh, plaintiff. The letter bears every internal sign of being genuine. It would have been an extraordinary forgery. We consider, that, in the absence of clear rebutting evidence that it was not in Nirman Singh's handwriting, there was sufficient evidence that it was.

It is, however, strenuously argued that the fact that his brothers got maintenance and actually held some lands is conclusive proof that they were not in point of fact excluded from the estate by Lal Bahadur Singh. This argument requires us to construe the word "exclusion" as it occurs in Art. 127 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. No doubt, if exclusion there means mere physical exclusion the receipt of maintenance and holding of land out of the estate must prevent its being held that there was exclusion. But we are of the opinion that in "exclusion" just as in "possession" there is a mental as well as a physical element. We must look not only to the physical act but also to the intention accompanying that act. Legal possession is not defeated by the person in such possession putting another person in physical possession (i.e., in detention) as his servant or tenant, because such physical possession in one person is consistent with legal possession in another. In the same way, legal or juridical exclusion from an estate by one co-owner of his co-owners is consistent with their physical admission to it. For such, mere physical admission to put an end to exclusion it must be possible to infer that it was accompanied by an intention to abandon the position of a right to exclude. No doubt, such intention will be inferred where no legal title to exclude is proved to have been set up and maintained, because there is always a presumption in favour of rightful entry and retention. Such presumption is, however, rebuttable. Here the facts are these. Lal Bahadur Singh was, as we have found, a co-sharer in point of law. But he was holding under an express assertion of his title to hold as sole proprietor. He gave money and lands to his brothers in the way a sole proprietor would do. Such gifts do not save his brothers from exclusion. The cases cited to us appear to us no authority for the contrary.

In order to rebut the plea of exclusion the appellants have produced evidence that on the 16th November 1882 a suit was instituted on a mortgage (see Exhibit 20) against Lal Bahadur Singh and his brothers. No defence was set up by Lal Bahadur Singh that he was the sole exclusive owner of the property and a decree was passed against the mortgaged property. The Subordinate Judge thinks that if the younger brothers were not in possession of the mortgaged property through Lal Bahadur Singh, Lal Bahadur Singh should have raised the objection that he alone was the owner of the property. In filing an appeal against the decree passed on the mortgage Lal Bahadur Singh filed the appeal on behalf of his brothers as next friend,—see Exhibit 22. The judgment, Exhibit 23, shows that no plea of Lal Bahadur Singh being exclusive owner was raised. In our opinion as Lal Bahadur Singh resisted the claim on its merits, no useful purpose would have been served by his resisting it on the claim of improper joinder of his brothers as defendants. It might have greatly protracted the hearing of the case without any benefit to Lal Bahadur Singh. In the circumstances, the evidential value of these proceedings is insignificant.

Lastly, it is proved that his two brothers lived with Lal Bahadur Singh for some years after 1882 and it is said that their living joint in residence and mess with their brother was inconsistent with the claim of Lal Bahadur Singh to hold the estate in his exclusive right. He claimed that the estate was impartible and an impartible estate in Hindu Law is not only consistent with but postulates that the family to which it belongs is joint. No presumption against indivisibility of possession or title can arise by reason of joint living.

We, therefore, hold that about three years after 1882, when the youngest brother of Lal Bahadur Singh namely, Nirman Singh, attained his majority, that is, in 1885, the two brothers must have become aware of their ouster from the estate and that three years from this date, namely, about 1888 Lal Bahadur Singh's title by adverse possession became absolute against them. The suit of the plaintiff No. 1 is, therefore, barred by limitation. Limitation began to run against the other three plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, and 4, his sons, from the dates of their births, which, according to the plaint, occurred in 1887, 1893, and 1897, respectively. But under sections 6 and 8 of the Limitation Act, read with section 3 of the Indian Majority Act of 1875, they had a right to sue at any time within 21 years of these dates. The only one, therefore, whose suit for partition would now be within time would be the youngest Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. It is clear, however, that this suit not being one by the plaintiffs for partition of their individual shares but for partition of their united fractional share from the whole estate, must fail on proof that any one of the plaintiffs is barred by limitation. It was no doubt for this reason that no proof of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh's age was produced in the lower Court and no argument has been addressed to us in this Court that a decree could be given in his favour. Any claim now by him to have his share partitioned off will obviously be time-barred.

Accordingly, we allow this appeal. The appellants will get their costs in both Courts.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPLICATION IN ORIGINAL CIVIL.

July 12, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Greaves.

In re HARI NARAIN DAS (AN INFANT) APPLICANT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Minor co-parcener—Guardian of property, appointment of—Principles applicable.

It is not the practice of the Bombay High Court to appoint a guardian of the property of a minor member of a Hindu joint Mitakshara family owning no separate property. But when the person applying to be appointed guardian is the manager of the family, an order appointing him guardian may, under proper circumstances, be made, as in such a case there is no introduction of any element of possible disturbance in the family.

A father and an only minor son formed a Hindu joint Mitakshara family. There was a mortgage on certain property belonging to the family. They received an offer for purchase of the property considerably above its real value, but the purchaser insisted that an order of the Court sanctioning the sale should first be obtained. Upon this, the father, who was the manager of the family, applied to be appointed guardian of the property of his minor son:

HARI NARAIN DAS, In re.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the manager may be appointed guardian on the condition that after the mortgage was discharged and the different costs and charges in respect of the property paid, he should invest one-half of the sale-proceeds for the benefit of the minor.

Mr. T. Chatterjee, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one Laluram Das, the father of the infant Hari Narain Das, that he may be appointed guardian of the person and property of Hari Narain Das and that he may be given liberty to sell and convey the undivided half share of No. 16, Cowie Lane, for the purpose of paying off the moneys due under the mortgage now subsisting on the property.

The infant is governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law. He is the only child of his father and he has no separate property of his own. There is a mortgage on 16, Cowie Lane, of Rs. 5,000 or thereabouts and certain costs have, I understand, also to be paid. An offer has been made to purchase the property for a sum of Rs. 16,650 and I am told and it so appears in the petition that this is considerably above the real value of the property, the real value it is said being something in the neighbourhood of Rs. 10,000. The purchaser insists that an order of the Court should be obtained sanctioning the sale before he completes the purchase and I understand that he is not prepared to complete the purchase unless such order is made.

It is not the practice of this Court, where persons are governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, to make orders of this nature and in Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda Sahoy (1) Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, sitting on the Appellate Side of this Court, refused to make an order under the Guardians and Wards Act appointing a guardian of the property of a minor who was a member of a joint Mitakshara family owning no separate estate. The person who was in that case sought to be appointed guardian was not the karta of the family and clearly he could not have taken possession of any of the property of the minor, and it was not suggested by the applicant that he could do so but it was suggested that he might be appointed in order to watch the interest of the minor. In these circumstances, as I have already stated, the application was refused but I am asked to make the order on the authority of In re Manilal Hurgovan (2). The Bombay Court in that case held that, under its general jurisdiction and apart from the Guardians and Wards Act, the Court had power to appoint a guardian of the property of a minor who was a member of a joint Hindu family and where the minor's property was an undivided share in the family property but the order was only made in the special circumstances of the case and Sir Lawrence Jenkins in delivering the judgment of the Court stated at page 357:

"We make appointment in this case because the person applying to be appointed the guardian is also the manager of the family to which the minor belongs and thus we do not introduce into the family any element of possible disturbance. I can hardly imagine a case in which it would be right to grant such an application unless the appelicant were the manager and it is expressly upon this ground that we make the appointment in this case." Sir Lawrence Jenkins points out also in his judgment that the Bombay Court in numerous cases had made such appiontments. The facts in the case before me are practically identical with those that arose in the Bombay case to which I have just referred; the father there, as here, was the karta: there, as here, was an only child: there, as here, the ground of the application was that a far better price could be obtained if the leave of the Court had been obtained than if the karta sold merely as manager of the joint family. In the circumstances, and for the reasons stated in the case to which I have referred, I am prepared to make the order here but I make it only on the condition that after the mortgage is discharged and the different costs and charges in respect of the property are also paid, one-half of the sale proceeds is invested by the guardian for the benefit of the infant. Accordingly, I appoint the applicant the guradian of the prerson and property of Hari Narain Das and give him liberty to sell and convey the undivided share of 16,

(1) 19 C. 301 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 646.

(2) 25 B. 353; 3 Bom. L. R. 411.

Cowie Lane, which constitutes the only immoveable property belonging to the estate of the infant. Out of the minor's half share of the sale-proceeds he will discharge a moiety of the mortgage and pay a moiety of the costs referred to in the petition and a moiety of the costs of the sale and, after deducting the costs of this application, he will invest the balance of the share accruing to the minor in trust securities for the minor's benefit and in his name. The guardian undertakes that after the mortgage is discharged and the costs and charges in respect of the property are paid, one half of the sale-proceeds will be invested by him for the benefit of the minor Hari Narain Das and in the minor's name and he must report to the Court that this has been done and give security for one year's income of the investment.

The costs of this application will be as between attorney and client and will come out of the share.

Certified for Counsel.

A compromise decree was passed in a redemption suit under which the plaintiff was to pay the defendant a certain sum within a fixed time with interest at a certain rate from the date of the compromise. In case of failure of plaintiff to pay the entire decretal amount within the time fixed, the defendant was to realise the 'entire decretal amount' by sale of the mortgaged property with future interest at a different rate from the date of default to the date of realisation. There was a default and the defendant applied for a decree for sale:

Held, that the defendant was entitled to future interest on the entire amount due on the date of default, comprising the amount decreed under the compromise, as well as the interest on it up to that date, and not simply on the amount due under the decree.

A tender to be valid must be of the whole amount due and not of a part only. [p. 247, col. 2.]

Section 38 of the Contract Act requires an offer to be of the whole of what the promisor is bound by his promise to do, and the same rule applies as to the tender of a sum decreed in respect of a mortgage. [p. 247, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 28th January 1921.

Mr. Niamat-Ullah, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Tara Shankar Sharma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant brought a suit for redemption of a mortgage. He then entered into a compromise with the respondents on the following terms:—

(1) that a decree for redemption be passed subject to the payment of Rs. 39,907-10-0 with further interest from the date of the compromise, namely, 3rd Janauary 1920, to 3rd July 1920, at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent per month;

(2) that the plaintiff shall pay the entire decretal amount to the defendants within 3rd July 1920 and in case of non-payment defendants shall be entitled to get the mortgaged property sold and to realise their entire decretal amount with future interest from 3rd July 1920 up to the date of realisation at Re. 1 per cent per month. A decree was passed in terms of this compromise.

The appellant transferred the property to one Kaniz Abbas and he left with her Rs. 44,200 as the amount due under the decree. Accordingly, this amount was tendered on 8th September 1920; but by that time the amount due was Rs. 44,441-9-11. Defendants accordingly refused to accept this sum, and on 17th November 1920 an additional sum of Rs. 1,150 was deposited with a prayer that so much as was due to the defendants might be given them and the rest returned to Kaniz Abbas. But by this time the amount due was Rs. 45,441-13-1.

On 16th December 1920 the defendants applied for a decree for sale for Rs. 45,906-4-3. The plaintiffs objected :—

(1) that interest at Re. 1 per cent. per month should be calculated on Rs. 39,907-10-0 being the principal amount due under the decree and not on Rs. 44,499-5-0 being the amount due on 3rd July 1920;

(2) that interest should cease on Rs. 44,200 from 14th September 1920 and on Rs. 1,150 from 18th Nobvember 1920;

That his transferee Musammat Kaniz Abbas should be made a party.

All these objections were overruled and a final decree for sale was passed for Rs. 45,906-4-3. The plaintiff has appealed.

His first point is that interest should be charged on Rs. 39,907-10-0. But the words "realise their entire decretal amount with future interest" would naturally mean future interest on the entire decretal amount. It is also settled law that when, under a decree, the contractual rate of interest ceases to be payable at a given date and the Court rate is substituted for it therefrom up to the date of realisation, the Court rate will be chargeable on the whole amount due with interest at the contractual rate up to that given date: Venkatachalapathi Aiyar v. Thavasi Servai (1), Maharaja of Bharatpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (2) and Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (3). So, there is no reason to suppose that the parties meant in the compromise anything different from what the learned Subordinate Judge has found them to mean.

The second point is that the payments, even if they were insufficient, ought to have been allowed to count for stopping interest. But this is not so. A tender to be a valid tender must be a tender of the whole amount due and not of a part only. Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) requires an offer to be of the whole of what the promisor is bound by his promise to do. See Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on Indian Contract Act, 4th Edition, p. 267, and the ruling Chunder Caunt Mookerjee v. Jodoonath Khan (4). There is nothing to prevent this general law as to tenders applying to payments decreed in respect of a mortgage. See Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 234. One ruling relied upon by the appellant is Haji Abdul Rahman v. Haji Noor Mahomed (5) where it was stated that the rule laid down in Dixon v. Clark (6), that the tender of only a part of debt must be treated as if it had never been made, applies only where the party making the tender admits more to be due than is tendered. This was merely an obiter dictum and we cannot accept it as sound law. Both the commentaries just mentioned express the opinion that it was based on a misunderstanding of Dixon v. Clark (6). Another ruling relied upon is Digambar Das v. Harendra Narain Pandey (7). The head-note* to this ruling is misleading. It states that an unconditional tender of a sum which turns out in the end to be less than what is really due may be valid pro tanto if there is a dispute as to the amount due though a tender, of a part of what was admittedly due is of no avail. But in that case the tender was of the whole sum found due under a subsisting decree. That decree was set aside in appeal and a larger sum found due. It follows that the tender was a tender of the entire amount that could be considered due at the time. The fact that the Appellate Court increased the decretal amount on appeal could be deemed to alter the fact that the amount tendered was the full amount due at the date of tender. The case is clearly to be distinguished. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 149—Railway Company—Delivery of goods.

Plaintiff brought a package to a Railway Station for despatch to another place. The Loading Clerk filled up a number in the forwarding note presented by the plaintiff and returned the same back to him with a request to call the next day and have the package marked with the number assigned and obtain a Railway Receipt. The plaintiff without waiting for the next day got the number assigned put on the package and left it in a shed within the premises of the Railway Station meant for the deposit of goods prior to their acceptance by the Railway. During the night the package was stolen. The plaintiff sued the Railway Company for damages:

Held, that the suit of the plaintiff must fail as there had been no delivery of the package to the Railway Company within the meaning of s. 149 of the Contract Act. The mere filling up of the forwarding note could not amount to such delivery.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 2nd of August 1921, confirming a decree of the Munsif, Hathras, dated the 6th of May 1921.

Maulvi Iqbal Ahmad and Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

Pandit Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for the recovery of damages, on the allegation that they had made over certain goods for despatch to the respondent Company and that by the neglect of the latter the goods had been lost.

One of the objections taken to the suit was that no delivery of the alleged lost goods had been made to the respondent Company.

Both parties gave evidence. The Court of first instance was of opinion that the goods had not been delivered to the Railway Company, and, therefore, no claim for damages could be maintained against them. The claim was accordingly dismissed.

On appeal the decree of the First Court was affirmed.

The plaintiffs came up in second appeal to this Court and the case was heard first by a Bench of this Court on the 19th of July 1922. On that date an argument was advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that some important evidence in the possession of the respondent Company, though required by the plaintiffs-appellants and summoned at their instance, had not been produced and tendered by the respondent Company. By an order dated the 19th of July 1922 the Bench hearing the appeal adjourned the case with a direction to the respondent Company to produce certain documents. One of the Railway clerks has been produced to-day with two documents and has been examined. The documents that he has produced are called the tally book and the reciept register, which is really a file of receipts.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is that they sent one large package containing cloth to the Railway Station at Hathras for despatch to Farrukhabad on the 23rd of December 1919. One Maharaj Kishore, a servant of the broker, approached the Goods office clerk of the Hathras Railway Station with a request that the said package be accepted for despatch to Farrukhabad. Brij Bihari Lal, the loading clerk, filled up a number in the forwarding note presented by Maharaj Kishore. The number was 675. The forwarding note was returned to Maharaj Kishore with a request to call the next day and have the package marked with the number entered in the forwarding note, and obtain a Railway Receipt. The package in question, it seems, was not brought to the Railway Station by Maharaj Kishore but sent there by the plaintiffs and deposited in a tin-shed within the premises of the Railway Station. According to Maharaj Kishore, those goods which the Railway Authorities do not accept are deposited in a tin-shed within the premises of the Railway Station and are watched by a man appointed by the owner of the goods. Maharaj Kishore, without waiting till the next day, got the contractor's man to put the number 675 on the package. During the night of the 23rd of December 1919, the package in question was stolen. The next morning a formal report was made to the Railway Police who took up the investigation at once. Twelve pieces of cloth and the covering, commonly known as "bardana," were discovered by the wire fencing of the Station compound. The other pieces were never traced. According to the Sub-Inspector, the "bardana" bore the number 675. The position taken up by the plaintiffs-appellants is that the giving of the number 675 by the loading clerk was sufficient to amount to the registration of the goods offered and to the delivery of the goods. We think that on the evidence of Maharaj Kishore the plaintiffs-appellants have no case. The mere fact that the loading clerk filled up what is called the serial number in the forwarding note, without doing anything further, would not amount to the delivery of goods to the Railway by the consignor. Section 149 of the Contract Act defines delivery of goods in the case of bailees. It is as follows:— "The delivery to the bailee may be made by doing anything which has the effect of putting the goods in the possession of the intended bailee or of any person auhtorized to hold them on his behalf."

On the evidence in the present case we are unable to find that anything was done by the plaintiffs consignors which would amount to putting the goods in question in the possession of the Railway or any person authorized on behalf of the Railway. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 24, 115—Transfer of case—Notice to opposite party, absence of—Irregularity — Revision.

In a matter coming before the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is open to the Court to refuse to interfere with any irregularity unless it considers that the irregularity is one of which the applicant in revision has real cause to complain. [p. 249, col. 2; p. 250, col, 1.]

A transfer of a case by a District Judge from one Court to another, on the application of a party, without giving notice to the opposite party, is an irregularity, but the irregularity will be treated as material only if it has made a difference to the party affected by it. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 11th July 1922.

Mr. Ali Muhammad, for the Applicants.

Mr. Har Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision is made in respect of an order of the District Judge of Lucknow, directing the transfer of a certain case pending in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Lucknow to the Court of the Munsif (North) of Lucknow. The order directing transfer was made on an application by the defendant for the transfer. The reason alleged for the transfer was that the Munsif had heard the evidence for three continuous days while he was acting as Additional Munsif and that the case should go along with him on his transfer to another Court. There can be no question that the District Judge should have given notice to the other side as he was dealing with a transfer case on the application of one of the parties and not suo motu. His failure to do so was certainly an irregularity. It was held in Zuool Qadar Jang Bahadur v. T. B. W. Bishop Manager Nanpara Estate (1), that such an irregularity was a material irregularity. No reason was given in this case for calling the irregularity material and it would appear to me that it would only be material if it made a difference to the party affected by the irregularity. In an Allahabad case, Fatima Begam v. Imdad Ali (2), a Judge of the Allahabad High Court went further and called the irregularity action without jurisdiction. Having regard to the fact that a Judge is not debarred from ordering, in certain circumstances, a transfer without notice to the parties I consider that to call his order in any case as without jurisdiction is an abuse of the term jurisdiction. In a matter coming before this Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, it is open to this Court to refuse to interfere with any irregularity unless it considers that the irregularity was one of which the applicant in revision has real cause to complain. Before me the applicants have set forth their reasons on the one side for objecting to the transfer and the opposite party on the other side for wishing it. The reason of the applicants' Counsel in revision for objecting is stated as follows. His clients had a right to choose a forum and that right should not be taken away except by lawful proceeding and on good grounds. He also added that the Additional Munsif before whom the case would be heard but for transfer was an officer of more experience than the Munsif to whom the District Judge had ordered the transfer. On the other side it is stated, as before the District Judge, that the Munsif had actually spent three days on recording the evidence and would be in a better position to judge the value of it. It appears to me that, allowing that the order of the District Judge was irregular, it was not an order with which the present applicants in revision have any sufficient reason to be dissatisfied. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that it is better for a case to be decided by the Judge who has actually heard the evidence or a great part of it if this is possible without dislocation of work. Although, therefore, I agree, that the District Judge's order was irregular, I am not disposed in revision to interfere with it. The application is, therefore, dismissed. I, however, direct that the parties bear their own costs in this appeal and for the following reason. The opposite party should certainly have drawn the District Judge's attention to the necessity of issuing notice to the other side.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 17, 44—Decree nisi—Death of petitioner—Confirmation of decree—High Court, jurisdiction of—Order for custody of children.

Where, after obtaining a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, and an order for the custody of the children of the marriage, the petitioner dies, the High Court has no jurisdiction to confirm the decree, or to make an order in the proceedings for the custody of the children. [p. 251, col. 2.]

Stanhope v. Stanhope, (1886) 11 P. D. 103; 55 L. J. P. 36; 54 L. T. 906; 34 W. R. 646; 50 J. P. 276, followed.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a case which was referred to us by the District Judge in which he made a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion by the respondent. The petitioner was the wife. The learned District Judge further made an order that, pending the final disposal of the case by the High Court, the petitioner would have the custody of the three children of the marriage. The respondent was directed to pay a sum of Rs. 150 a month towards the maintenance of the three children from the date of the decree to the date of final disposal of the case. The decree came before this Court for confirmation and it was necessary, in our judgment, to remand the case to the lower Court for further findings, but, unfortunately, before the findings could be considered by this Court, the petitioner had died on the 6th August 1921. The question, therefore, arises what course this Court is to adopt. In my judgment, in consequence of the death of the petitioner, this Court in these proceedings has no jurisdiction to make any order. A similar position was under consideration by the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Stanhope v. Stanhope (1). The head-note runs thus:—"A husband who had obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of his marriage died before the time for making it absolute had arrived," and it was held "that the legal personal representative of the husband could not revive the suit for the purpose of applying to make the decree absolute." Lord Justice Bowen in giving the judgment said that " a man can no more be divorced after his death than he can after his death be married or sentenced to death. Marriage is a union of husband and wife for their joint lives unless it be dissolved sooner and the Court cannot dissolve a union which has already been determined." Lord Justice Fry said: "The only decree that could be asked for would be that the marriage should be dissolved or that it should be deemed to have been dissolved from the date of the decree nisi. Neither alternative is possible. As regards the first, no power can dissolve a marriage which has been already dissolved by the act of God. As regards the second, the Court cannot pronounce a decree declaring that the marriage was dissolved at an earlier date, because the Statute gives it no such power, but only authorises it to pronounce a decree 'declaring such marriage to be dissolved." The result is that, in my judgment, we have no jurisdiction to confirm this decree for dissolution of the marriage.

With regard to the order which was made in respect of the custody of the children, it seems to me that section 44 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) is applicable. That provides that "the High Court, after a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage or a decree of nullity of marriage and the District Court, after a decree for dissolution of marriage or of nullity of marriage has been confirmed, may, upon application by petition for the purpose, make from time to time all such orders and provision with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of the minor children, the marriage of whose parents was the subject of the decree, or for placing such children under the protection of the said Court, as might have been made by such decree absolute or decree (as the case may be) or by such interim orders as aforesaid." It appears, therefore, that, inasmuch as we have no jurisdiction to make the decree absolute for dissolution of marriage, we have no jurisdiction in these proceedings to make any order as regards the custody of the children.

Woodroffe, J.—I agree.

Richardson, J.—I agree.

however, that some ten years before suit the Board made it pucca. The Trial Court decreed the suit but on appeal the Board raised the plea that even if the possession of the Board was not found to be adverse, it was entitled to the benefit of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. Notice of this plea being raised was given to the plaintiff who took no objection to it. In second appeal before the High Court it was urged that this plea ought not to have been allowed to be raised:

Held,(1) that as the issue was raised with notice to, and consent of, the plaintiff it could have been entertained by the Appellate Court; [p. 253, col. 1.]

(2) that until the land was made pucca the acts alleged on the part of the Municipal Board were not sufficient to amount to dispossession of the plaintiff or to constitute adverse possession. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, dated the 25th June 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to a small plot of land in the City of Bareilly. The plaintiffs claimed as owners of the land alleging that they had been dispossessed by the first defendant, Hafiz Ahmad Husain, who had built a shop on the plot. They accordingly asked for restoration of possession with demolition of the shop as well as for damages and mesne profits. The Municipal Board of Bareilly applied to be and was made a defendant during the progress of the suit. The defendants denied the plaintiff's ownership and pleaded adverse possession and limitation. The Trial Court decreed the suit and two appeals were preferred to the lower Appellate Court by Hafiz Ahmed Husain and the Municipal Board respectively.

The learned Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the title in one-third of the land was with the plaintiffs. He found that the plot had been for many years lying unoccupied and that the Municipal Board had been using it for the deposit of refuse. He found, however, that this use of the land by the Municipal Board did not amount to adverse possession or to the dispossession of the plaintiffs. He found that the Municipal Board did in fact take adverse possession of the land some ten years before the suit when they made it pucca. This, however, was within limitation. In 1913 the Municipal Board sold the land to the defendant, Hafiz Ahmed Husain, who erected a shop upon it. An issue was argued before the learned Judge with reference to section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the respondent, Hafiz Ahmed Husain, being a transferee of the plot in suit, made the improvement upon it believing in good faith that he was absolutely entitled thereto. He, therefore, made an order under section 51 requiring the plaintiffs to transfer their share in the land to the defendant at the market-value which he decided to be Rs. 40.

Against this decree the plaintiffs appeal. They have not appealed against the appellate decree passed on the appeal by the Municipal Board, and the question was raised at the hearing, though not strongly pressed, as to whether this decree might not operate as res judicata. It appears to me that it cannot do so. The Municipal Board, if it ever had any interest in the land, has parted with that interest to the first respondent. The only relief granted to the plaintiffs or asked for by them was a relief against Hafiz Ahmed Husain. They complain that the relief given them is inadequate and hence their appeal. As they require no relief against the Municipal Board they had no occasion to appeal against the decree passed on the Board's appeal.

On the merits of the case the sole ground taken by the plaintiffs appellants is that the issue under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act was not raised in the Trial Court and that the defendant ought not to have been allowed to raise it in the Court below. It is found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the issue was not raised in the Trial Court and this I find to be correct. The defendant relies on paragraph 7 of his written statement in which he said that if for the sake of argument the plaintiffs be proved to have any right even then they were not entitled to have the shop demolished or to obtain possession after the shop had been erected at great expense by the defendant. This was really a plea of acquiescence and estoppel and the issue raised upon it by the Munsif was an issue of estoppel, namely:—

"Whether the suit is barred by section 115 of the Evidence Act."

It is not, however, true that the issue was raised for the first time at the hearing of the appeal. The case was not decided till 25th June 1921. On 9th November 1920, more than seven months earlier, Hafiz Ahmed Husain had put in an application urging that, even if the plaintiff's ownership were upheld and the possession of the Municipal Board found not to have been adverse, he was still entitled to the benefit of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. The application was considered in presence of the Pleaders of both parties and the plaintiffs' Pleader agreed to the land being valued by an Amin. Subsequently, on 7th December, the parties came to an agreement as to the value of the land. The appellants are quite correct in urging that this does not mean that they agreed that plea under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act was a good plea. On the contrary, they stoutly resisted it and the plea was strenuously contested before the learned Subordinate Judge. It does, however, mean that they had notice that the plea was going to be raised and that they took no objection to the plea being raised and heard in the Appellate Court. Under the circumstances, they cannot be heard to u ge now that the plea ought not to have been entertained by the learned Subordinate Judge.

A cross-objection is taken by the respondent that the finding of the Court below as to adverse possession is wrong and that the suit ought to have been dismissed as time-barred. The appellants have cited the ruling in Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (1) in support of the decision of the Court below and the circumstances are very similar. I agree with the view taken by the Court below that, until the land was made pucca, ten years before the suit the acts alleged on the part of the Municipal Board are not sufficient to amount to the dispossession of the plaintiffs or to constitute adverse possession.

(1) 16 B. 338; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 703.

For the reasons already given the appeal and the cross-objection are both dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

A suit was filed in the Civil Court. The Civil Court declined jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court. The Revenue Court held that it had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. Plaintiff went up on appeal to the Collector, but the latter upheld the order of the lower Court. Plaintiff then re-filed the plaint in the Civil Court, but that Court held that the matter was res judicata. Plaintiff then appealed to the District Judge against the first order of the Civil Court declining jurisdiction. The appeal was considerably beyond time:

Held, that the plaintiff having acted in good faith in prosecuting the suit in the Revenue Courts before he came back to the Civil Court and there having been no undue delay in the meanwhile in filing the appeal, he was entitled to the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 254, col. 2.]

A suit by a pattidar to recover from the sub-pattidars the amount of land revenue paid by him on their account is cognisable by a Civil Court and not by a Revenue Court, as the parties are not co-sharers within the meaning of section 108 clause (16) of the Oudh Rent Act. [p. 254, col. 1.]

Civil revisions against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 31st January 1922, confirming that of the Munsif, (North) Unao, dated the 9th August, 1920.

Mr. Parbhu Dayal Rastogi, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ali Muhammad, holding brief of Mr. Shahanshah Husain Rizwi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These applications in revision arise out of three suits which were instituted in the Court of the Munsif, (North) Unao, by a pattidar for the recovery of revenue paid by the plaintiffs on account of the defendants, who were their sub-pattidars. The Munsif before whom these suits were pending thought that they were excluded from the cognizance of the Civil Court by section 108, clause (16), of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). He returned the plaints for presentation to the proper Court. When the plaintiffs went with the plaints to the Revenue Court, the latter held that the suits were cognizable by the Civil Court. The order of the Revenue Court was upheld in appeal by the Deputy Commissioner. The plaintiffs then came back to the Civil Court and sought relief by filing the same plaints again in the Court of the Munsif, (North) Unao. The Munsif rightly held that the decision in the previous proceedings operated as res judicata.

The plaintiffs then filed two sets of appeals directed against the original order of the Munsif and against the subsequent order. The form r set of appeals was barred by time. The plaintiffs sought refuge under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), which the lower Appellate Court refused to grant. The other set of appeals was within time, but the lower Appellate Court upheld the order of the Munsif therein. By these applications the plaintiffs seek to challenge the propriety of the order of the lower Appellate Court, refus ng to extend the time under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The circumstances set forth above show that the plaintiffs were merely complying with the orders passed in each instance when they moved from Court to Court in order to seek relief. It was open to them to have filed an appeal in each case, when they were first directed to go to the Revenue Court, but they took the order of the Munsif as sufficient justification for losing no further time and seeking relief in the Court to which they were directed to go. As pointed out by the their Lordships of the Privy Counscil in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1), a mistake of law might be a sufficient reason for asking the Court to exercise its discretion under section 5, more so where the mistake is one in which the Court which was seized of the suits shared. The real question for consideration in such cases is whether the plaintiffs had acted in good faith in prosecuting their suits in the Revenue Court before they came back to the Civil Court. If they did, the time spent in prosecuting those suits in the Revenue Court ought to be taken into account, and if there has been no undue delay meanwhile, the delay in filing the appeal from the original decree, by which the plaints were directed to be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court should be excused.

The plaintiffs are shown to have acted with due diligence throughtout these proceedings and they are entitled to the benefit of section 5. The Munsif was in error in holding that the suits were not cognizable by the Civil Court. The parties to the suits are not co-sharers. The defendants are described as sub-pattidars of the plaintiffs. They occupy a position similar to that of subordinate proprietors and, as held by this Court in Musammat Niaz Fatima v. Hakim Jawwad Husain, Rent Appeal No. 107 of 1900, decided on the 19th November 1901, the Civil Court ought to have entertained the suits.

The applications are, therefore, allowed and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court set aside, the result being that the suits will be remanded to the Court

Miscellaneous application against a decree of the First Additional Judicial Commissioner and Second Additional Judicial Commissioner, dated the 2nd March 1922, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 31st January 1920.

Dr. T. N. Misra and Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Raghubir Sahai and Bishambhar Nath Srivastava, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for review of a judgment passed by this Court on the 2nd of March 1922. That judgment was passed in Appeal No. 23 of 1920 between Kuar Nageshar Sahai and Shiam Bahadur and others and in the Cross-Appeal No. 25 of 1920. The Appeal No. 25 of 1920 of Shiam Bahadur and others against Nageshar Sahai was valued for Court-fees at Rs. 29,069 and the Court-fee of Rs. 975 was paid on that valuation and a fee of Rs. 10 for a declaratory relief. The applicant for review Kuar Nageshar Sahai has valued his application at Rs. 1,412, the actual value of the property in respect of which relief is sought in the application for review, and has paid a Court-fee of Rs. 50 thereon. The office has reported that this Court-fee is deficient by Rs. 442-8 in view of the provisions of Art. 5 of the First Schedule of the Court-Fees Act. We have heard the Counsel for both parties on the question of Court-fee and are constrained to hold that the report of the office is correct. Art. 5 of the First Schedule of the Court-Fees Act provides that the proper fee payable on an application for review of judgment, if presented before the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, is one-half of the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. The learned Counsel for the applicant would argue that had it been intended that one-half of the full fee paid on the memorandum of appeal should be payable on such an application for review the word used would have been "levied" and not "leviable" and would argue that the words "plaint or memorandum of appeal" should be construed as if they meant "plaint or memorandum of appeal asking for the same relief as that asked for in the application for review." This question has been before all the High Courts in India and while the Courts of Bombay and Madras incline to the view put forward by the learned Counsel for the applicant the Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore Courts have taken a contrary view and have held that the words "plaint or memorandum of appeal" mean the plaint or memorandum of appeal in which the judgment, review of which is asked for, was passed.

NAGESHAR SAHAI v. SHIAM BAHADUR.

In re Manohar Tambekar (1), Proceedings, 16th January 1872 (2), In the matter of Sheikh Ali Ahmad (3), Nobin Chundra Chuckerbutty v. Mohamed Uzir Ali (4) and Fakhur Ali v. Sahib Nur (5).

It is urged that the latter view might in many cases cause considerable hardship and that in a fiscal enactment where there is any doubt as to the correct interpretation of any provision a construction favourable to the subject should be placed on that provision. We do not think, however, that there can be any reasonable doubt as to the correct construction to be placed upon the words of the enactment. The words themselves are very clear and definite and we should not be justified in adding to them in order to avoid possible hardship. We note that, formerly, a fixed fee was chargeable on such applications and the Legislature has deliberately in the present Act provided for an ad valorem fee. We note, further, that in Art. 5 there is no entry in the second column of the Schedule. Had the Legislature intended that an ad valorem fee should be levied only on the value of the subject-matter in respect of which relief was sought by the application for review we think it would have said so in clear and definite terms. This change in the law was, no doubt, made to prevent frivolous applications for review and though in some cases the Court-fee leviable may be disproportionate to the relief asked for, yet if the application is successful the applicant can recover the greater portion of the fee paid by a certificate granted to him under section 15 of the Act. As has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Aikman in In the matter of Sheikh Ali Ahmad (3), the word "leviable" seems to have been used instead of the word "levied" in order to provide for an application for review by a defendant or respondent in the case of a suit or appeal in forma pauperis and the use of this word would not justify us in giving an interpretation to the Article which the plain words of the Article cannot bear. For these reasons, we hold that the Court-fee payable on the present application is one-half of the Court-fee which was paid on the memorandum of appeal and that, therefore, there is a deficiency of Rs. 442-8. We allow the applicant three weeks to make good the deficiency; and the case will be put up for orders on the 3rd of April.

At the same time, however, we find that there is an accidental omission in the judgment which can be corrected by us under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff has been given a decree for certain items of moveable property but we have omitted to state, as required by O. XX, r. 10 of the First Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had. No evidence was placed before us as to the value of these items and we must, therefore, accept the value as stated by the defendant in list J attached to his written statement. The amount of money which shall be paid as an alternative if delivery of each of the items mentioned in the decree cannot be had is given in the attached statement. In the last paragraph of the judgment after the words "will be given a decree for possession of those items" the following will be inserted "and if delivery cannot be had in respect of any such item the amount of money to be paid by defendant to the plaintiff is given in the statement attached to this judgment" and the statement attached to this order shall be attached to and form part of the judgment.

Note:—The rest of the judgment is not material for the purpose of report—[Ed.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300 (4), Ill. (c)—Quarrel and exchange of abuse—Death caused by single lathi blow—Intention—Knowledge that death would ensue—Offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439 —Revision—Alteration of charge—High Court, power of.

If a person, owing to a quarrel and exchange of abuse and without intending to kill, causes the death of another by delivering a single lathi blow on his head, he must be taken to have known when striking the blow that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death; and if he does the act without any excuse he is guilty of murder and his case comes under section 300, clause (4) Illustration (c) of the Penal Code.

A High Court has, when sitting as a Revision Court, power to alter a charge from that under a minor offence to one under a more serious one and enhance the sentence.

Criminal Revision from a Sessions Statement.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Upon reading the Sessions Statement in this case a Judge of this High Court directed notice to be served upon the accused to show cause why this Court should not either (a) order his re-trial on a charge framed under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, or (b) whilst maintaining the conviction enhance the sentence. The accused was charged with having caused the death of one Murari. There is really no difficulty about the facts, and we accept the facts which the learned Sessions Judge considered to be proved. On the occasion in question the accused struck one blow with a lathi which fell upon the head of Murari. This blow fractured Murari's skull and he died shortly after. There were no circumstances which brought this case within the exception of grave and sudden provocation. There was, however, evidence of the quarrel between the two men and there seems very little doubt that there was an exchange of abuse. In the result the learned Sessions Judge convicted the accused under section 304 and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment. As regards the length of the sentence we do not, on a review of the whole of the circumstances, disagree with the learned Sessions Judge but having regard to clause (4) of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code and Illustration (c), the question which we have to decide is, whether on the facts as proved the offence was not murder. We are of opinion that the accused when committing the act did know that it was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, and that he did commit that act without any excuse. Illustration (c) is clear in terms that a man is guilty of murder although not intending to cause murder if intentionally he gives to another a "club" wound sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. That is in fact what happened in this case, but it is to be observed that the accused struck one blow only, and if intention was an element we should come to the conclusion that he did not by that single blow intend to kill the deceased. That, therefore, is a circumstance of extenuation. The fact that there was a quarrel is another circumstance. Holding him guilty under section 302 we sitting in revision have power to alter the conviction from one under section 304 to one under section 302. Under that section this Court has power to pass one of two sentences, and we chose the lesser sentence for the reasons which we have given, and sentence the accused to transportation for life. At the same time, we desire to draw the attention of the Local Government to this case; and in accordance with the practice which this Court was invited to pursue recently, we intimate to the Local Government that we are of opinion that this is a case in which clemency may be shown to the accused. If the Local Government adopt our view we think the appropriate sentence would be the same sentence as that already passed on him by the Sessions Judge, namely, three years' rigorous imprisonment. We, therefore, alter the conviction under section 304 to one under section 302 and sentence the accused to transportation for life.

We direct that the record be submitted to the Local Government.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 146—Magistrate, duty of—Attachment of property, when permissible.

In cases under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code a easonable effort must be made to decide the question as to possession before there is jurisdiction to attack the subject-matter under section 146. [p. 259, col. 2.]

Sheobalak Rai v. Bhagwat Panday, 15 Ind. Cas. 486; 40 C. 105; 13 Cr. L. J. 486; 16 C. W. N. 1052, followed.

It is not a Magistrate's business to speculate whether his order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code will prejudice a future decision in a revenue proceeding. It is also not sound to check his hand because his decision is not final. [p. 259, col. 1.]

Application against an order, dated the 22nd February 1923, passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Nawadah.

Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. W. H. Akbari and Sultan-ud-din Hussain, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 107 of the Government of India Act. It is contended that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nawadah acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction in attaching, under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, forty-five plots of land which were the subject of a proceeding under section 145 of the Code between the present petitioners as first party and the present opposite party as second party.

The hearing of the section 145 case commenced on the 12th February. The first party examined six witnesses and tendered a considerable amount of documentary evidence, and the Magistrate, actuated by what later he considered undue tenderness for the second party, adjourned the cross-examination of these witnesses till the 16th February intimating that further delay would not be allowed. On the 16th February, however, the Pleader for the second party filed a petition praying for postponement to enable him to move for transfer of the case. No grounds were given in the petition nor were any stated verbally. It was obviously a move with the object of having the case tried by the successor of the Magistrate who was about to proceed on leave, and was in keeping with the obstructive tactics which had been adopted by the Pleader on the 12th and which had led to a reprimand from the Court. Eventually, the petition for postponement was refused and the case proceeded ex parte.

The Magistrate came to the conclusion that the first party was possessed of what appeared to be complete papers to substantiate his story; they also rebutted the presumption arising out of the entries in the Record of Rights which was the only evidence in favour of the se ond party, The evidence went to show that there had been an exchange of lands subsequent to a partition and that the second party had received other lands in exchange for the plots in dispute. He held that the second party was not in possession and proceeded as follows:—

"The case of the first party is no doubt more probable. The documentary evidence fully supports it. But as the case has not been contested on behalf of the second party, I cannot be sure of my finding. There is also one point more, namely, that this very controversy is the subject-matter of an issue in the commutation of rent cases. To decide the point here definitely when one party has not contested the case might prejudice the decision in the commutation case. The Court is mainly concerned with preventing a breach of the peace. My decision on possession cannot finally decide the issue. Therefore

I consider the best course would be to attach the lands as I cannot positively say who is in actual possession."

The inference to be drawn is that all the judicial considerations before him led the Magistrate, who had already found that the second party was not in possession, to the conclusion that the first party was in possession of the subject of dispute but that, influenced by extraneous or non-judicial considerations, he flinched from the apparently inevitable decision to that effect and the consequent order under sub-section (6). It is not the Magistrate's business to speculate whether his order under section 145 will prejudice a future decision, perhaps several years hence, in a revenue proceeding. It is also not sound to check his hand because his decision is not final. And, as has been aptly pointed out, the reason given for failure to give effect to the evidence of the first party, which he believed, would apply to all ex parte proceedings, and the best course for a party to a proceeding under section 145 who has no case but wishes to harass the other party, would be to evade a contest and perhaps also, as in this instance, be rude to the Court, whereupon the Magistrate would shrink from the responsibility of passing an order favourable to the contesting party. It is indeed true that an attachment under section 146 will as effectually prevent a breach of the peace as a decision in favour of a party under section 145, but a reasonable effort [Sheobalak Rai v. Bhagwat Panday (1), varying of course with the circumstances of each particular case, must be made to decide the question as to possession before there is jurisdiction to attach the subject-matter under section 146.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate must, therefore, be set aside. Petitioners desire that the case should be remanded for a fresh decision on the existing record. This suggestion fails to commend itself. The Trying Magistrate is no longer available. Moreover, the sugar-cane which was the standing crop on the disputed land has been removed and the Magistrate should be left free to take such action according to law as he deems to be required by the circumstances as they present themselves.

The application is allowed and the order of the 22nd February attaching the property in dispute is set aside.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 905 OF 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Heald.

NAGAPPAN MADALIAR—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 537—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182, offence under—Sanction to prosecute, absence of—Irregularity.

Although sanction to prosecute for an offence under section 182, Penal Code, is necessary, the absence of such sanction, unless a failure of justice is occasioned thereby, is a mere irregularity under section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and would not vitiate the prosecution.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Eastern Sub-Magistrate, Rangoon, passed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 433 of 1922.

ORDER.—On the 25th March last appellant laid an information to the Police alleging that one Kumaran Mudaliar had borrowed a necklace from him and refused to return it. The Police classified the offence charged as falling under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code and began an investigation.

Appellant apparently was dissatisfied with the enquiry made by the Police and on the 31st March he laid a complaint before the District Magistrate on the same allegation charging Kumaran Mudaliar with criminal breach of trust.

The Magistrate who dealt with the complaint came to the conclusion that the accusation was false and on the 17th of June discharged Kumaran and ordered appellant to pay him Rs. 50 as compensation for having made a vexatious charge against him.

As a result of the trial before the Magistrate the Police also classified appellant's information as false and on the 20th June the Commissioner of Police sanctioned his prosecution for giving false information.

Appellant was sent up by the Police for trial for an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, and has been convicted and sentenced to one-half month's rigorous imprisonment

He appeals mainly on the ground that the sanction of the Magistrate who dealt with the complaint, or of the District Magistrate was necessary in view of the fact that the proceedings before the Magistrate had followed the enquiry by the Police.

So far as the law is concerned, the case of Po Hlaing v. Ba E (1) leaves no doubt that his contention is correct, but under section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, the want of sanction is an irregularity which does not vitiate the proceedings unless it has occasioned a failure of justice.

I have read the Magistrate's records and I see no reason to believe that there has been any failure of justice. It appears that the parties are enemies, being members of rival gangs, whose accusations have brought them before the Courts on various occasions. Under these circumstances, it is unlikely that appellant would lend the ornament. The evidence which he called to prove the loan was discrepant and suspicious and was, in my opinion, entirely insufficient to establish the allegation.

I see no reason to doubt that appellant did give false information to the Police with intent to injure his enemy and he may consider himself lucky that he was not prosecuted on the more serious charge under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

False charges of this kind deserve serious punishment and, in spite of the fact that appellant has also had to pay Rs. 50 to Kunaran as compensation, I am of opinion that he has got off lightly.

The appeal is dismissed and appellant will be re-arrested and sent to Jail to serve the remainder of his sentence.

W. C. A. Appeal dismissed.

ALLU—ACCUSED

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 228—Threatening witness in Court—Offence.

An accused person who, during the hearing of a case, makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the box commits an offence under section 228 of the Penal Code.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Budaun.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision by Allu against his conviction, under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code. I accept the facts found by the Court below as correct, and were as follows:—Allu was on his trial before a Third Class Special Magistrate while Gendan Lal was being examined as a prosecution witness. Allu appears to have had reason to believe that the witness was turning so often towards the complainant possibly for some inspiration. Allu, at first, objected but when he found the witness repeating the same trick, Allu, addressing the witness, said that he (Allu) would pull his ears. This is all that happened and which is said to constitute the offence of the contempt of the Court. Even the Trial Court has found that there was no intention to insult the Presiding Officer, but inasmuch as this conduct of this accused had the effect of the Special Magistrate starting at once proceedings under section 228, that has been taken to amount to an interruption to that public servant while sitting as a Court. The facts speak for themselves and hardly need any comment. In my humble opinion, they do not constitute any interruption offered to the Special Magistrate himself. If upon this unusual expression used by the accused the Court considered himself called upon to take notice of it as a matter of his duty, it cannot be said that it amounted to an interruption by the accused himself. I, therefore, regret to have to note that, in spite of the fact that Allu expressed his regret and apologised to that Special Magistrate he was sent up, under custody and kept in havalat for some days, and, to cap it all, he has now been fined Rs. 5. I, therefore, beg to report this case to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that his conviction may be quashed. Any explanation which the Magistrate may deem proper to submit will be forwarded to the Hon'ble High Court.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Sessions Judge has misapprehended the scope of the section. An accused person who, during the hearing of a case, makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the box, has clearly committed an offence under section 228. I refuse to interfere and return the papers.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 172—Calcutta Suburban Police Act (III of 1888), s. 47 (A)—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 145—Police diary of case in suburban area, whether privileged—Right of accused to inspect diary.

In the suburban area covered by the Calcutta Suburban Police Act the Investigating Police Officer keeps his diary under section 47 A of that Act and not under s. 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code and no privilege attaches to such diary and the accused is entitled to see the statements of the witnesses recorded by the Investigating Police Officer who have been examined in Court and to use them to contradict the statements made by those witnesses under section 145 of the Evidence Act. [p. 262, col. 2.]

Mr. Monmotho Nath Mukherji, with him Babus Satindra Nath Mukherji and Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner,—The occurrence in this case took place at Bhawnipur in the suburbs of Calcutta. Sections 162, 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure do not apply to the Police in the Town of Calcutta. To determine what is the Town of Calcutta see Calcutta Police Act (IV B. C. of 1866), section 3, and Act II B. C. of 1866, section 1, and Notification in Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd September 1880 Part 1, page 851. Section 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code not applying, the examination of witnesses by the Investigating Police Officer, a member of the Calcutta Police Force, must be governed by section 47 A of the Calcutta Suburban Police Act (III B. C. of 1888) and no privilege could be claimed in respect of the statements recorded. The High Court should follow in this case the course laid down in Salt v. Emperor (1).

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.—I concede that sections 162, 172 Criminal Procedure Code do not apply to the case.

Mr. Mukherji.—The result is that the diary in the case is a piece of writing to which I am entitled to refer.

[Ghose, J.—Section 47 (A) of the Suburban Police Act is the section which applies].

Mr. Orr.—There is no procedure for the Calcutta Police keeping diaries but for the sake of convenience they do so.

[Cuming, J.—But having done that can a Police Officer claim privilege?]

Mr. Orr.—The witness is not bound to refresh his memory and unless he so refreshes the accused cannot have access to it, when the witness refuses to refresh his memory how would the diaries come in? The accused did not cause summons to be served on the Police Officer for the production of the document.

Mr. Mukherji.—The position is the same. The document is there and I want to see it.

[Ghose, J.—You mean to say that he has not taken the necessary steps to have it produced in Court by legal process].

Mr. Orr.—Yes; had he done it it could have gone in as his evidence.

[Ghose, J.—It is immaterial in a criminal case on whose behalf it is put in].

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 591 36 C. 560; 10 Cr. L. J. 3[illegible]

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—The facts of this case are as follows. The petitioner, Suresh Chandra Ghose, was on his trial on charges under sections 324 and 326. In the course of the trial an Investigating Police Officer was examined as a witness. The accused, for the purpose, apparently, of contradicting the witnesses for the prosecution, questioned the witness (Police Officer) with regard to certain statement made to him by the witnesses and on his stating he did not recollect asked him to refer to his diary to refresh his memory. The witness refused to do so on the ground that it was a special diary and had been recorded under section 172. Upon this the defence filed a petition asking the Court, in the interests of justice, to send for the diary of Panchanon Mukherji and to look at it and allow the defence Pleader to inspect the said diary on certain points which had been raised by the petitioner. The Magistrate made an order on the petition rejecting it on the ground that the petitioner was not, under the law, entitled to inspect the diary as it was a diary prepared under section 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Mr. Mukherji, who appeared for the petitioner, has contended that the diary in question comes neither under section 162 nor under section 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as it was not made under that Code. The diary, he contends, and this point has not been disputed by Mr. Orr who appeared for Crown, was prepared under section 47 (A) of the Calcutta Suburban Police Act (III of 1888)—the offence in question having been committed in Bhowanipur which falls within the area covered by the Suburban Police Act and that the diary in question being prepared under section 47(A) of the Suburban Police Act there is no question that a privilege attaches to it, that section 172 has no application and that, therefore, the accused person would be entitled to use those statements, recorded by the Police Officer, of witnesses who have been examined in the case, to contradict those witnesses who had given evidence before the Magistrate under section 145 of the Evidence Act. Mr. Orr contened that if the accused person desired to use the document to contradict the witnesses, he should have proceeded under section 94, Civil Procedure Code, and that he should have asked for a summons on the Police to produce the necessary document. No doubt that would have been a correct procedure but it is quite possible that the accused or his Counsel was misled by the procedure which is usually adopted in the matter of dealing with diaries of Police Officer under the Criminal Procedure Code. I think that the accused is entitled to see the statements of the witnesses recorded by the Investigating Police Officer who have been examined in Court and to use them to contradict the statements made by these witnesses under the provisions of section 145 of the Evidence Act. The findng and sentence must be set aside and the case be sent back to the learned Police Magistrate to pass orders after allowing the accused an opportunity of cross-examining and contradicting the statements of those witnesses by their statements made to the Police. The trial will be resumed from that point and the Magistrate will pass orders after allowing the accused this opportunity.

Pending the disposal of the case the accused will remain on the same bail as he is on now. The judgment in appeal is also necessarily set aside.

Ghose, J.—I agree.

S. C. M. Order accordingly.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 450 OF 1922.
October 14, 1922.
Present:—Mr. Justice Stuart.
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR
versus
J. JOHN—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 345—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 323, 504—Compounding offence—Document of compromise.

EMPEROR v. J. JOHN.

S., a Railway passenger, complained to the Police that he had been assaulted and abused by J., the Guard of the train in which he had travelled. Upon this J. was charged with the commission of offences under sections 323 and 504 of the Penal Code. At the trial, he produced a document alleged to have been written by S., which said: "Mr. J. has come to me and offered an unconditional apology. I beg to withdraw the case against him." S. admitted the agreement but said that it was 'given for office and not for Court' and that he wished the accused to be tried. The Magistrate held that the agreement was not a compromise but a withdrawal which could only be made by 'intimation to the Magistrate,' and finding the accused guilty sentenced him to a fine. On a reference of the case to the High Court:

Held, that the case had been compounded by S. and the conviction of J. was illegal.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Benares.

REFERRING ORDER.—The facts which give rise to this application are as follows:—

A student, named Sushil Chandra Chakraverti, was travelling by train from Benares to Ballia. At Benares City Station he asked the Gaurd of the trian, J. John, the time. The latter abused him and assaulted him with his flag. Sushil Chandra made a complaint to the Police which was recorded. On this complaint a case was instituted under section 120 of the Railways Act. Four days later, on the 17th July, John apologized to Sushil Chandra in the presence of Dr. Rai, Assistant Civil Surgeon. Sushil Chandra wrote out and gave to John a document which runs as follows:—'This is to say that Mr. John, Guard, B. N. W. Railway, came to me and offered an unconditional apology before Dr. L. N. Rai, Assistant Surgeon, Benares. I beg to withdraw the case against him.' This was signed, dated and given to the accused, who produced it in Court on the 19th of July.

The Magistrate took evidence. Sushil Chandra admitted the agreement of the 17th but said that it was 'given for office only and not for Court,' and that he wished the accused to be tried for having abused and beaten him. John at first made a statement minimizing the offence, but when charges were framed under section 120 of the Railways Act and sections 504 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code he pleaded guilty to all. The Magistrate acquitted him of the charge under section 120 of the Railways Act and found him guilty of offences under sections 504 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code and imposed a sentence of fine.

It is pleaded that the offence had been compromised, and that, therefore, a conviction was illegal. The Magistrate appears to think that the agreement was not a compromise. He says it was a withdrawal, which can only be made by "intimation to the Magistrate" but he is led astray because the word "withdraw" happens to be used in the agreement. It is not a withdrawal in the technical sense, as this can only be made by the prosecuting authority. Then he says that there is "no consideration." There is no provision of law which forbids the compounding of offences for an apology. In fact cases are constantly withdrawn when an apology is offered, in particular cases of defamation or abuse. In my opinion the document, Exhibit B, has only one meaning, namely, that Sushil Chandra had accepted an apology and did not wish any further proceeding to be taken. Technically speaking, he had at that time no case to withdraw, but it is an offence, not a case, which is compounded. Once an offence is compounded, no Court can take further action in the matter. In cases of a more serious nature the Court can refuse permission to compound an offence, but not an offence of this nature, which is merely the use of offensive language and a more or less technical assault with a guard's flag. When Sushil Chandra gave the document, Exhibit B, to John he compounded any offence which John had committed against him, and as far as their personal quarrel was concerned the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. He had still to go on with the case under section 120 of the Railways Act, which could not of course be compounded by Sushil Chandra, who was merely a witness. If the Magistrate had found that an offence under the Railways Act had been committed, he could have disregarded Exhibit B and sentenced the accused on his plea of guilty. For some not very clear reason, the Magistrate holds that section 120 does not apply to Railway servants. I do not agree with the Magistrate. There is nothing to limit the scope of section 120 to the general public, any more than section 119, which undoubtedly includes Railway servants. As the matter stands, however, the accused has been acquitted of the offence charged under section 120 of the Railways Act. Having acquitted the accused of the only offence for which there was a prosecuting authority, the Magistrate could not, in my opinion, legally charge the accused and convict him of offences under section 504 and section 323. The only person aggrieved, once the charge under section 120 of the Railways Act was dropped, was Sushil Chandra. He had, I consider, compounded the offence against him, and the Court was, therefore, without jurisdiction in convicting and sentencing the accused.

I have not seen any ruling of the Allahabad High Court defining the word "compound," but my view of the document filed in the present case appears to be in accordance with the rulings of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts; vide Mahomed Kanni Rowther v. Pattani Inayathulla Sahib (1) and Murray v. Queen-Empress (2).

As I consider that the conviction was illegal I refer the matter to the Hon'ble High Court for any orders that may be considered necessary. The Magistrate will be asked to submit any expanlation that he may wish forwarded within ten days.

Munshi Bhagwati Shankar, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Sanyal, for Sushi Chandra Chakraverti, states that his client does not oppose the application. His client accepted the applicant's apology, and had no intention of proceeding with the case. He did not prosecute. He withdrew. The Police, however, challaned under section 120, Railways Act, and he was called as a witness. The applicant was acquitted under that charge.

I accept the learned Sessions Judge's view. The case, in so far as the charges under sections 504 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code were concerned, was clearly compounded.

I set aside the convictions and sentences and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 24—"Person in authority"—Collecting and assistant panchayat—Confession to panchayat upon inducement, admissibility of—Subsequent statement to Magistrate —Confession retracted afterwards, effect of.

Where a collecting panchayat and an assistant panchayat take a prominent part in holding an inquiry into the circumstances of the commission of a murder, they must be taken to be "persons in authority" within the meaning of section 24 of the Evidence Act, and if the accused person is assured by the assistant panchayat that he would be let off if he disclosed everything, and in consequence of that assurance he makes a statement, that statement is inadmissible under the provisions of the section above quoted. A similar statement made subsequently to a Magistrate, and retracted afterwards, would be inadmissible in evidence, unless it could be shown that the impression which was made upon the accused's mind had been entirely removed therefrom. Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Faridpur in a case in which Ganesh Chandra Goldar was charged with murder and with conspiracy. There is no doubt that the deceased man, Kali Kumar Mozumdar, was murdered on his way home about the middle of the night after having attended an arbitration, and the case for the prosecution was that the accused person and others attacked him as he was passing a clump of trees and injured him severely. Although he was able to drag himself to the nearest house, which belonged to a man named Kailash Chandra Sarkar, he died very shortly afterwards without being able to give any indication as to the persons who had attacked him.

The case against the accused depends almost entirely upon certain confessions which the accused is alleged to have made. Certain of the neighbours assembled at the house of Kailash in answer to a summons from Kailash, including the two panchayats, Amrit Lal Basu, who was the collecting panchayat, and Mahadeo Biswas, who was the assistant panchayat, and a man called Dinabandhu Sarkar, who described himself as a cultivator, but who seems to be one of the men who took a lead in what took place subsequently and he described himself as a "Thakur". It was after these people had assembled that the accused person, who was known to have been animated by feelings of enmity against Kali Kumar Mozumdar, was summoned to the house. This was in the early morning after the night when the attack upon Kali Kumar Mozumdar was made, and the evidence is that he was brought into the presence of the corpse, that he was trembling and pale and could hardly speak or stand up. When asked to say what he knew about it, after some little time he is supposed to have said that he could not say anything. Eventually he asked to be taken aside and said that then he would state what he knew. Thereupon he was taken to another part of the compound, and in the presence of Banamali Biswas, Manikya Bala Dinabandhu Thakur, Mohendra Nath Biswas, Mahadeo Biswas, Amrita Lal Basu and perhaps one or two others he is alleged to have made a confession that he was concerned in the murder of the deceased man with others whose names he mentioned. This confession is spoken to by the witnesses to whose evidence the learned Judge has referred. The accused was detained by the villagers. The Sub-Inspector arrived on the next day and committed him to custody. On the following day he was taken before a Magistrate who, after warning him and after satisfying himself that the statement he was about to make was to be made voluntarily, recorded his confession, which amounted to a statement that he had been concerned with others in the murder of this deceased man. At the trial that confession was withdrawn, and the accused person said that he had never made the statement which was spoken to by the panchayat, the assistant panchayat and Dinabandhu and others shortly after the murder.

The Jury were unanimous in their verdict of acquittal and they added that they were not satisfied that the confessions of the accused were true or that they had any evidentiary value. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was no doubt that these confessions were proved, and there was a certain amount of corroboration and that he was convinced that the accused was guilty and clearly ought to be convicted.

There is one point in this case which does not seem to have been noticed by the learned Judge and that is that Amrita Lal Basu, when he was giving evidence before the Committing Magistrate, said as follows:—"He", that is to say, the accused, "was then taken in another part of the compound, and in the presence of Banamali Biswas, Manikya Bala, Dinabandhu Thakur, Mohendra Biswas and one or two other persons he stated that he was ready to speak out the truth if he was saved from the consequences. Dinabandhu and others told him that he would be let off if he disclosed everything." That evidence was given in February 1922. This witness while giving evidence at the trial said: "None of us told the accused that they would let him go if he spoke the truth. I did not say before the Committing Magistrate that Dinabandhu and others told him that he would be let off if he disclosed everything." Therefore he contradicted the statement which he had made before the Committing Magistrate. He went so far as to say that he did not say what appeared in his deposition. In my judgment, however, it must be taken for the purpose of this reference that he did say before the Committing Magistrate that which appears in his deposition, which I have read. It is significant that the statement was made in February and his renunciation of it was made in April. I do not know what influence may have been brought to bear upon him in the interval. Dinabandhu was cross-examined on behalf of the accused and he said, "We did not tell the accused that he need not be afraid and that no harm should come to him." That statement was made in April at the trial. For the purpose of my judgment, I propose to assume that that which appears at page 27 of the paper-book in the evidence of Amrita Lal Basu before the Committing Magistrate is true, that the accused did ask whether if he spoke out the truth he would be saved from the consequences, and that he was assured that he would be let off if he disclosed every thing, and that in consequence of that assurance he made the statement.

Now, the question is whether that statement is admissible in evidence; and that depends upon the provisions which are to be found in section 24 of the Evidence Act, which provides : "A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority, and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him." I have no doubt that the inducement was given to the accused. I have no doubt that it was sufficient to give the accused grounds which would appear to him reasonable in supposing that he would gain an advantage in reference to the proceedings; and the only question which causes any difficulty in my mind is whether the inducement was one which proceeded from a "person in authority." It has been suggested by the learned Vakil on behalf of the accused that the collecting panchayat and the assistant panchayat were both "persons in authority" within the meaning of the section. There is no definiton in the Indian Evidence Act of a "person in authority." The words have been construed in England , and the test which has been applied is this: Had the persons authority to interfere in the matter? As far as the accused is concerned, I have no doubt that he thought that the persons, or some of them, to whom he addressed the question whether he would be saved from the consequences if he spoke out the truth, were "persons in authority," but that would not be sufficient to justify us in holding that they were "persons in authority." In my judgment, having regard to the position of the collecting panchayat and the position of the assistant panchayat and the part which they were taking in holding the enquiry into the circumstances of the murder, it must be held, on the facts of this case, and I confine myself to the facts of this case, that they must be taken to have been "persons in authority."

Then the next question is : Did the inducement proceed from either of these two men whom I have held to be "persons in authority" on the facts of this case? There is no sufficient evidence in my judgment, to show that the inducement proceeded from the collecting panchayat, Amrita Lal Basu, but I think there is just sufficient evidence to justify us in holding that the inducement proceeded from Dinabandhu and others who would, in my opinion, include Mahadeo Biswas—the assistant panchayat. Consequently, I am prepared to hold that the inducement did proceed from the assistant panchayat and others and that, under the circumstances of this case, the assistant panchayat was a "person in authority". Consequently, in my judgment, the confession, which the accused is alleged to have made after he had been assured that he would be saved from the consequences, was not admissible by reason of the provisions of section 24 of the Evidence Act. If that be so, the real ground upon which the learned Judge referred this case to this Court disappears.

It is true there is the confession which the accused made before the Magistrate. That was a retracted confession, and it would not be admissible in evidence unless it were shown that the impression which was made upon the accused's mind by the inducement, which was held out to him in the way which I have described, had been entirely removed from his mind before he made his confession before the Magistrate. That matter has not been considered by the learned Judge, and there is no finding by the learned Judge upon this point. It is difficult for this Court to come to the conclusion that, if the accused was induced by the promise which was made to him by Dinabandhu and others to make the first confession, that inducement was not, to some extent, the cause of his making the confession before the Magistrate.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this Reference ought not to be accepted, and the accused should be discharged and released from custody.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee, (with him Babu Narendra Kumar Bose), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a Reference under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca in a case in which two persons, Manindra Kumar Sen and Profulla Kumar Mazumdar were charged with murder. The name of the man who is alleged to have been murdered was Mukunda Lal Goon, and I do not suppose that any one who has read the evidence in this case, has any doubt that Mukunda Lal Goon was, in fact, murdered. The Jury were unanimous in their verdict which runs as follows:—

"We think Manindra not guilty: but we think there is a doubt in the case of Profulla, and that he should get the benefit of the doubt."

The learned Judge accepted the unanimous verdict of the Jury that Manindra was not guilty: he found that this accused was not guilty and he directed him to be acquitted and released from custody.

With regard to Profulla, the learned Judge disagreed with the verdict of the Jury, and referred the case for the decision of the High Court under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Letter of Reference sets out the reasons which actuated the learned Judge to refer this matter to the High Court, and he stated the offence of which he considered Profulla to be guilty, viz., under section $\frac{302}{34}$, of the Indian Penal Code.

Mukunda was stabbed in the neck and when assistance came to him, he as asserted that he had been stabbed by two men, whom he pointed out, and who were at that time running away. The two men were pursued. One of them was caught and taken into custody. This was Profulla whose case is the subject of this Reference. The case of Manindra turned to a large extent upon the question of identification, and the learned Judge, in a charge which is conspicuous for its clearness and fairness, dealt with the evidence relating to this question, and I gather from his charge that the reason why he accepted the verdict of the Jury as to Manindra was that the learned Judge, having regard to the evidence as to the identification of Manindra, could not say that the verdict was unreasonable.

In his Letter of Reference the learned Judge dealt with the verdict of the Jury with regard to Profulla as follows:—"The Jury were unanimous that there is not sufficient evidence to find Profulla Kumar Mazumdar guilty under section 302 without the aid of section 34. This verdict too I accept, though I do not agree with it. But the Jury also found unanimously that there was a doubt that accused Profulla was guilty under section $\frac{302}{34}$. I am clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case. I have the honour to submit the records for the orders of the High Court under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code." A later passage in the Reference is as follows:—"Though, I personally am satisfied that Profulla, accused, struck the fatal blow, I can accept the Jury's verdict that there is a doubt on the matter." I understand the learned Judge to mean that, although he himself was satisfied that Profulla was the man who struck the blow, the Jury evidently had a doubt on the matter, and that he was not able to say that, that doubt was unreasonable; consequently, he could accept the verdict of the Jury as to that part of the case. He then went on to say, "But the Jury also held that there is a reasonable doubt that the two youths acted in furtherance of a common intention. This I consider perverse. To my mind the admitted circumstances are wholly inconsistent with the view that either of the two youths could be ignorant of his companion's intention." He then set out the reasons for that conclusion; and continued," I am of opinion that accused Profulla is clearly guilty under section $\frac{302}{34}$, of the Indian Penal Code, and the verdict of the Jury is perverse due to reluctance to find any one guilty of a capital crime."

The learned Counsel for the Crown contended that, having regard to the form in which the verdict regarding Profulla Kumar Mazumdar was given, and to the fact that the learned Judge recorded his disagreement with it and referred the case under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it was open to this Court to examine the evidence and to hold that it was Profulla Kumar Mazumdar who stabbed the deceased man. But we must have regard to the Letter of Reference, and it is clear therefrom that the learned Judge accepted the Jury's verdict as to this part of the case. That being so, in my judgment, we ought not to consider that question on this Reference. It is not necessary for me to decide the question whether upon this Reference we have jurisdiction under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to enter upon the enquiry as to whether the accused Profulla did strike the fatal blow, because, having regard to the terms of the Letter of Reference, I am clearly of opinion that we ought not to do so. The Jury found that there was a doubt whether Profulla struck the blow and the learned Judge has clearly accepted the verdict of the Jury on that part of the case. Consequently, in my judgment, this Court ought not to enter upon the consideration of the question involved in that part of the case.

The only question we have to decide on this Reference is whether the learned Judge was right in his conclusion that the admitted circumstances were wholly inconsistent with the view that either of the two youths could be ignorant of his companion's intention, and we have to consider that part of the case upon the assumption that one of the two men, who were present, struck the fatal blow, and on the further assumption that it is not proved which of the two men struck the fatal blow. The learned Judge with respect to this part of the case directed the Jury as follows:—"By section 34 of the Indian Penal Code when a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of the persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. If, therefore, the man who accompanied the stabber had a common intention with the stabber, viz., the causing the death of Mukunda, then such companion is liable for the stabbing as if he had actually stabbed," and he concluded his charge to the Jury as follows:—"If you are of opinion that the two men had a common object in view, viz., to cause the death of Mukunda, then both are equally guilty. If, however, you are of opinion from the evidence and circumstances that one of the two might reasonably have been ignorant of his companion's intent on then only the man who struck the fatal blow can be found guilty: and if supposing that you are of opinion that one of the two men only is guilty and you are unable to decide which of them struck the fatal blow, then it is your duty to find both not guilty."

Here, in my judgment, arises a difficulty. Assuming that this Court has to approach the case on the basis that it is not proved which of the two men stabbed the deceased man and that one of them only undoubtedly did, I have considerable doubt whether the provisions of section 34 are applicable. It must be remembered that section 34 does not create an offence. The provisions thereof merely lay down a rule of law. The meaning of that section was considered by Mr. Justice Stephen in the case of Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (1), and I need not do more than to refer, for my present purpose, to the decision of the learned Judge in that case. The deceased man was killed by one blow with the dagger, which was left sticking in his neck. The defence of the accused, Profulla Kumar Mazumdar, was that the fatal blow was struck by the man who was with him; it seems to me, therefore, that the charge which should have been preferred against the accused as an alternative to the main charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code was a charge under section 302 read with section 114 of the Penal Code.

The learned Vakil for the accused has argued that the accused was not charged under section 114 with abetment, and that he cannot now be convicted by this Court under section 114, inasmuch as the charge was not framed against him in the Trial Court. We are of opinion that we must accede to that argument. The result is that we accept the Reference to this extent that we direct that this case be remanded in order that the accused Profulla Kumar may further be placed upon his trial. We desire to make it clear, however, that, inasmuch as the Jury have given a verdict in his favour upon the question whether Profulla struck the fatal blow, and the learned Judge has clearly accepted that verdict, we do not consider it right that he should be put upon his trial in respect of that part of the case again. It may be said that, strictly speaking, inasmuch as the learned Judge has not registered an acquittal in respect of Profulla, he could be tried again on the basis that it was he who stabbed the deceased man. In our judgment, however, it would not be right, for the reasons already stated, to put Profulla Kumar Mazumdar on his trial again in respect of that matter. Consequently, we direct that the further trial be confined to a charge under section 302 combined with section 114 of the Indian Penal Code.

I conclude my judgment by saying that I do not feel that the course which we are directing is altogether a satisfactory one, but no other option is left to us by reason of the way in which the matter has been referred to us by the learned Judge. The learned Judge, apparently, was satisfied that Profulla had struck the fatal blow, and it might have been better if he had referred the whole case against Profulla to this Court, instead of dividing the verdict of the Jury in the manner in which he did, and accepting part and disagreeing with part. At the same time, we desire to express our recognition of the great care with which the learned Judge dealt with the case, which was by no means free from difficulty.

The result, therefore, is that the case must be sent down to the lower Court for re-trial in the limited way which I have indicated.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 369—Review—Revision—Order passed by one Judge, whether can be revised by another Judge.

A High Court Judge has no jurisdiction to revise an order passed by himself or by another Judge of the Court.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Meerut, on a motion made by the District Magistrate, Meerut.

FACTS appear from the following order of the Magistrate, Meerut:—

"I refer the case to you of one Kale alias Barati, Shaikh, who was convicted by Mr. Neave, Sessions Judge of Meerut, on the 18th of November 1921, under section 395, Indian Penal Code, and was sentenced to 10 year s rigorous imprisonment. I forward in original a lengthy and detailed report from the Superintendent of Police on the subject of this case. I also forward statements, which I have recorded, made by (1) Rafi and (2) Sub-Inspector Triloki Narayan who investigated the above dacoity case. I also forward the identification proceedings held in Agra Jail on the 18th of August 1922, which show that Rafi failed to identify the above Kale or Kale Khan alias Shubrati or Barati.

"The point of making this reference is that since the conviction of Kale alias Barati on the 18th of November 1921, one Rafi was arrested in Delhi. Rafi made a long detailed confession concerning a large number of dacoities committed in the Meerut District by himself and his associates. Amongst the dacoities mentioned by him was this identical dacoity for which Kale alias Barati was convicted. The confession of an admitted bad character may be worth much or little. In this instance the confession of Rafi has been tested in the most thorough, searching and satisfactory manner possible by the deputation of a DeputyMagistrate, Chowdhury Harpal Singh, to go round with the Police Inspector, M. Abdulla Khan, to the scenes of the various dacoities mentioned by the approver, and make notes of all he said and did. As a result of this searching test, the confession of Rafi has been proved true up to the hilt. He has been found wrong in practically nothing. With regard to this particular dacoity, he states definitely that Kale alias Barati was not one of the dacoits and he does not know him. He has failed to identify him at the Agra Jail. There is nothing to show collusion between the two, for Kale alias Barati was arrested and convicted some months before Rafi was arrested in Delhi in the month of March 1922.

"Supposing that the dacoity case in question was at the present moment under investigation with its identification evidence by three persons, Umrao, Constable, and the two other witnesses, and at the same time with the contradictory evidence of Rafi's statement, hitherto corroborated in all three cases, there can be no doubt that the Police would hesitate very greatly before sending the case up to Court and would almost certainly not chalan the case.

"Similarly, if Mr. Neave had had this additional evidence before him at the time he was writing his judgment, it is very probable, if not certain, that he would have modified the remark he made therein, viz., 'I am, therefore, disposed to accept the identification evidence as genuine.'

"It cannot, of course, be said even now that the identification was not genuine, but I think it is certain that most Courts would now, under the circumstances, decide at the very least to give the accused the benefit of the doubt.

"I, therefore, send the record of the case to you with the request that you will, after perusing the record of the case King Emperor v. Kale alias Barati alias Shubrati, forward it to the Honourable High Court with the recommendation, if you agree with me, that the sentence passed on Kale alias Barati should be reversed and that he should be forthwith set at liberty."

JUDMENNT.—This is an application from the Sessions Judge of Meerut requesting me to set aside a conviction passed by his predecessor and affirmed by Piggot, J. in appeal, on the ground that on certain materials that have since come to the knowledge of the District Magistrate there is a doubt of the convict's guilt.

This is not a matter which I can possibly take up in revision. Even if I myself had passed the order dismissing the appeal I could not revise it and I certainly cannot revise the order of another Judge of this Court. There can be no revison in the matter.

I return the record to the District Magistrate in order that he may refer the matter to the Local Government who have power under Chapter XXIX of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Petition under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 22nd December 1919, modifying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Gurgaon, dated the 6th October 1919.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang and Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Ganeshi Lal, has been convicted of having dishonestly received certain stolen articles namely, two big kettles belonging to one Wazir, six bags of chillies belonging to one Ghasi Ram, and brass vessels belonging to the firm of Manohar Lal-Mohar Singh. The properties belonging to Wazir and Ghasi Ram were found in a nohra situate at a village called Chhuriawas, and so also some of the vessels belonging to the aforesaid firm which the rest of the utensils belonging to that firm were found in a shop situate at Rewari.

Now, the petitioner resides at Rewari, and the nohra referred to above is situate in a village at a distance of about three miles from that town. This nohra, which is used for storing fodder and for trying agricultural cattle, was in charge of a servant called Phusa, who, as the judgment of the Sessions Judge shows, is a disreputable person and has been convicted of having kept some stolen articles in his own house. Ganeshi

GANESHI LAL v. EMPEROR.

Lal himself was not in charge of the nohra and visited it about three times in a month. It is true that he is a joint owner thereof, but so are the other members of the joint family, namely, his two elder brothers and possibly also a cousin.

Considering that Ganeshi Lal was not in charge of the nohra at the time of the discovery of the property, that Phusa, admittedly a receiver of stolen property, was in physical possession thereof, and that the petitioner is the youngest of the three brothers who are joint owners of the entire property belonging to the joint family, I am not prepared to attribute to him the possession of the goods recovered from the nohra. The learned Sessions Judge bases the conviction upon the solitary fact that the shop at Rewari was, as will be shown hereafter, in possession of the petitioner, and that it contained some of the articles stolen from the firm of Manohar Lal-Mohar Singh, while the rest of those articles were found in the nohra; and he accordingly concludes that the nohra, too, should be deemed to be in possession of the petitioner. Now, in the first place, I find that in the case relating to the recovery of the property belonging to Wazir, which has resulted in Criminal Revision No. 135 of 1920, there is not an iota of evidence to prove the fact relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge, and though there is evidence in support of it upon the record of the case, which has given rise to Criminal Revision No. 134 of 1920. I do not think that the learned Judge was justified in basing the conviction upon evidence which was recorded, not in the case with which he was dealing but in another separate case though tried at the same time. Further, I am not prepared to hold that the above evidence, even if legally admissible, would warrant the conclusion against the petitioner. The circumstance referred to above is in no way incompatible with theory that Phusa was really the receiver of all the stolen articles, and that he delivered some of them to the petitioner for sale, and that the latter kept them in the shop though he was aware of the fact or had reason to believe that they were stolen property. Accordingly, I hold that the petitioner cannot be convicted in respect of the articles recovered from the nohra.

As regards the brass and copper vessels found in the shop, the case, however, stands on a different footing. It is clear that the petitioner is not only a joint owner of the shop, but had the key by which the lock of the shop was opened on the day the property was recovered. He must, therefore, be regarded to be in possession of the goods found in the shop. There is ample evidence upon the record that these utensils were stolen from Manohar Lal-Mohar Singh, and the circumstances referred to by the Courts below point to the conclusion that the petitioner had the guilty knowledge as contemplated by section 411, Indian Penal Code.

The result is, that I accept Criminal Revision No. 135 of 1920, and quash the conviction and the sentence. The fine, if realised, shall be refunded. As regards Criminal Revision No. 134 of 1920 I set aside the conviction and the sentence in respect of the charge relating to the goods recovered from the nohra but maintaining the conviction in respect of the articles recovered from the shop, I reduce the sentence of imprisonment to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The order of the Sessions Judge inflicting a fine of Rs. 200 in respect of this charge and imprisonment in default of payment of fine must stand.

This application for revision is accepted pro tanto, and the order of the Sessions Judge modified accordingly.

Z. K. Revision partly accepted.

RAM GOPAL BOHITRAM—DEFENDANT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—"Principal contract"—Principal disclosed—Broker, liability of—Special custom—Arbitration.

"Principal contracts" as distinguished from "directcontracts" are a very well known feature in the Calcutta Hessian Market and to them is attached a custom, under which whether or not the names of the principals are disclosed, the brokers are liable to the buyers and the sellers for the due fulfilment of those contracts and are entitled likewise to enforce them as against the said buyers and sellers. Section 230 of the Contract Act does not in any way affect the position of these brokers. [p. 274, col. 2.]

The whole point of a "principal contract" is that the credit of the brokers is the main thing in the mind of the contracting parties. [p. 275, col. 2.]

Where there is a custom entitling the brokers to enforce a "principal contract" against the parties to it, an arbitration clause providing for settlement of disputes "between both parties" to such a contract, should be taken to include the brokers. [p. 276, col. 2.]

Obiter.—Wherever the "principal contract" form is employed, a custom obtains making the brokers and the contracting parties mutualiy liable to one another. [p. 275, col. 1.]

Messrs. H. D. Bose and S. Ghose, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of two suits which have been brought to set aside awards of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in respect of a contract made in the Jute Market in Calcutta. The type of contract in question is, I am satisfied by the evidence before me and by the reported cases, a well-known type. It is called by way of distinction a "principal contract." The contract with which I am concerned is dated the 19th August 1918 and it is evidenced by Bought and Sold Notes, passed (as the phrase goes) by the firm of Ramgopal-Bohitram, who are defendants before me. The characteristic of a "principal contract," such as this, is that on the Sold Note, which the broker sends to the seller, the name of the sellers themselves appears but the name of the buyers does not appear; instead of the buyers' name the words "Our Principals" are inserted. In like manner on the Bought Note, which is sent to the buyers, the name of the buyers themselves appears and instead of the name of the sellers the words "Our Principals" are inserted.

The brokers in the present case are between two fires. What happened in the end appears to have been, that delivery was not taken of the goods and the sellers who, in this case were a firm called Maturam Dalmia, proceeded to claim arbitration against the brokers and got an award against the brokers. The brokers stoutly maintained that they were mere brokers but as they were being proceeded against for damages, they too made a claim before the Bengal Chamber of Commerce against the buyers Jitmull-Girdhari Lal. The Chamber has come to the conclusion that the brokers are liable under the contract to the sellers and are entitled to enforce the contract against the buyers. It has made two awards upon that footing of which one is in favour of the brokers and against the buyers. I am now giving judgment in a suit brought on the 14th March 1919, by the buyers to set aside that award.

Apart from any question of custom, the position of the broker in such cases as this, has been laid down by this Court on appeal from the Original Side in the case of Patiram Banerjee v. Kankinarra Company Ltd. (1). Following certain English cases, this Court there held that there is a difference between a broker and an agent for sale. It was of opinion that section 230 of the Indian Contract Act did not apply and it was further of opinion that the arbitration clause in the contract was no submission on the part of the broker. This then is the position apart from any questions of custom.

Very soon afterwards, however, in the case of Joy Lal & Co. v. Monmotha Nath Mullik (2) the question of a custom in this particular market to the effect that in principal contracts the brokers are liable to both parties was raised and decided. Chaudhuri, J., held that a custom had been made out by which brokers are held liable upon such contracts. In the case before him it appears to have been common ground that until a considerable time after the contract was entered into the names of the respective parties were not disclosed to the other. Coming to the conclusion that the brokers were liable for the performance and fulfilment of the contract, Chaudhuri, J., upheld the award which had been made and made in favour of the brokers upon a submission clause exactly like the clause in the contract with which I am now dealing.

In the present case the matter is not wholly covered by the decision in that case. Here the brokers, who are defendants in this suit, expressly admit or assert that at the time the contract was passed the name of the sellers had been disclosed to the buyers and the name of the buyers to the sellers. That is paragraph 2 of the written statement. It would appear that this question as to whether the names of the principals were disclosed at the time of the passing of the contract is one on which brokers and buyers are not in dispute. But it seems that the sellers, Maturam Dalmia & Co., deny that the buyer's name was mentioned to them. I am not concerned with the seller's contention in this suit. For the purposes of this suit I must take it that when the contract was passed the buyers and the sellers knew who the other party was. On that it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the custom in the Calcutta Hessian Market goes as far as this:—That if a contract is entered into in the "principal contract" form then whether or not the names of the parties are disclosed, the brokers are liable to the buyers and to the sellers for the due fulfilment of the contract and are entitled likewise to enforce the contract."

The issues tendered and allowed were, first, as to whether there is a custom of the Market in Calcutta in respect of gunny, hessian and manufactured jute goods that the brokers are liable upon and entitled to enforce all "principal contracts" as against both buyers and sellers even if the principals are disclosed, i.e., that the plaintiffs, the buyers, are liable to the defendants, the brokers, for whatever money they may be liable to pay to the sellers in respect of the transaction? Another issue is:—Is there a custom in the Hessian Market as pleaded in paragraph 8 of the written statement?

I framed a third issue:—Was there an implied or express contract to the effect that the brokers should be entitled to enforce the said contract of the 19th August 1918? The fourth issue is:—Whether the defendant is estopped from contending that he is entitled to enforce the contract by reason of his contentions before the Chamber of Commerce and of his conduct in not purporting at any time to be the sellers.

Now, on the evidence, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that "principal contracts" as distinguished from "direct contracts" are a very well-known feature in this particular Market, and that to them is attached a custom of the Market as to liability for the performance of the contract resting upon the brokers and a right in them to enforce the contract. I have to consider whether the evidence satisfies me that in addition to that finding, which is no more than the custom found by Chaudhuri, J., it is proved to my satisfaction that it makes no difference whether, at the time of the making of the contract, buyers are informed of the name of the sellers and sellers of the name of the buyers. I hold it is proved that it makes no difference according to this custom. It is established by the evidence of two witnesses that "principal contracts" sometime come into existence not because it is desired by the parties that names should not be disclosed, but because on the brokers proposing a "direct contract" one or other of the parties is not satisfied with the credit of the other and prefers to have the liability of the brokers with whose character and circumstances he may have been familiar or who may be of better standing. Instead of passing the contract in the usual way, giving the usual Bought and Sold

Notes, the transaction is concluded in a different form, according to which the name of the other party is kept off the face of the contract. That must be for a special purpose. I have no doubt that it frequently happens that it is not desired to disclose the name of the buying party to the seller. This, however, is not always so. It is a matter of strong probability that contracts in this form are made for the purpose of attaching by custom a special incident to the contract. There is no other special incident that can be suggested excepting the incident of the broker's responsibility. This is a feature which, as the Law Reports show, has occurred in many Markets and for very long periods. I have no hesitation in finding that where the "principal contract" form is employed the custom as found by Chaudhuri, J., obtains even although the names are in fact disclosed.

Certain objections have been taken by Mr. Bose on behalf of the plaintiffs. The first objection is that, if the evidence of the witnesses be examined, it will be found that they say that in contracts in this form the only person liable to the buyers is the broker and the only person liable to the sellers is the broker. I agree that if that were so the evidence would be evidence of a custom that contradicts the contract. But I do not think that the evidence given is directed to mean that at all. The question in the mind of the witnesses was different. It appears that, according to them, the brokers may be let out by the buyers and sellers subsequently to the passing of the contract on their accepting each other, i.e., that the broker's liability under the contract may come to an end by the joint action of his principals on either side. The witnesses have said that the brokers and the sellers are never both liable. This is, no doubt, their experience—nobody makes both principal and agent pay up. I do not think that their minds were directed or could without very special trouble have been directed to the question whether the buyers as being in fact the "principals" mentioned in the Sold Note would not be held liable by the sellers if they were so minded. That is a question of law. But in actual practice on these "principal contracts" that question is very unlikely to arise because from the first the buyers have preferred to look to the brokers. The only person to whom the sellers can really be giving credit—the only person mentioned in the contract—is the broker. Either they do not know the name of the other party, or if they do and still prefer a "principal contract," they prefer the brokers' credit. The evidence of business-men must be taken in the light of the fact that the whole point of a "principal contract" is that the credit of the brokers is in the mind of the contracting parties the main thing.

The next objection is this. There is no doubt that if the principals on both sides accept each other, the broker whose only interest is his commission cannot object and has every interest in favour of being allowed to drop out. There was some difference of opinion among the witnesses as to whether the brokers' liability could be determined by a mere verbal communication. There was a tendency on the part of some of the witnesses to think that, according to the custom of the Market, no important consequence could be allowed to hang on a mere verbal communication. I have no doubt that as a matter of practice and experience any one alleging mere verbal arrangements of this sort would be regarded as a vain babbler in the absence of some writing. I am not satisfied that there is anything more in what is said as to the broker's liability being brought to an end than would be operated by ordinary principles of law apart from custom. But it is not necessary for me to find whether or not the custom of this Market, in addition to the stipulations which the law ordains, requires the release of the broker's liability to be effected in writing. At present I am not satisfied that it does. But the custom is not vague and unreasonable or uncertain because there is room for a possible dispute over this.

I find no valid objection to the custom. The buyers have not come forward to say they did not know of it, and it is very plain that dealers in this Market using such forms of contract must have known. No objection can be taken under section 230 of the Contract Act. That section says:—that "an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them." That is in the absence of any contract to the contrary. The section leaves it open to any one to make that contract if he likes. A further provision of the section is that "such a contract shall be presumed to exist in the following cases. ....." (2) where the agent does not disclose the name of his principal." There is no negative implication in that. If the agent has disclosed the name of his principal then there is no presumption that the agent can enforce the contract but it is open to any party by the very terms of the section to prove his contract without the aid of the presumption. In the present case such a contract is proved by the evidence of custom without the aid of that presumption.

The remaining question regarding the arbitration clause is covered by the decision of Chaudhuri, J. The submission clause in this case is in a somewhat ill-advised and antique form, viz.:—"any dispute whatsoever arising on or out of this contract shall be referred to arbitration under the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce applicable for the time being for decision and such decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract. The award may, at the instance of either party and without any notice to the other of them, be made a Rule of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal." The terms of the clause are framed on the supposition that there are two parties and only two parties. It is a matter for consideration whether, assuming that by the contract the brokers in addition to their principals are liable and entitled to enforce the contract, the submission clause is so framed as to bring within its scope disputes between the brokers and a party. Cases have been cited in which the opinion has been expressed that in this class of cases the liability of the broker is, strictly speaking, attached by custom to his contract of employment. There is a good deal to be said for and there is authority in favour of that view. The rule in England I understand to be that the brokers in such cases could under the old practice be sued on an ordinary count for the price (e.g.,) of the goods sold, and whether that is quite the best logic of the matter it is a sensible and convenient course. So, too, there is everything in favour of the view that a submission clause of this sort is wide enough to cover the brokers. In this case the buyers are interested to say that the brokers should not have gone to arbitration. But put it the other way. That submission clause is a valuable clause in a contract of this class. Buyers might well rely upon it when entering into the contract. If the brokers are entitled to enforce the contract and if the brokers brought a suit arguing that the submission clause did not bind them; then the buyers would have a real grievance. It would give to the brokers a larger right than the sellers would have. It must be remembered that section 230 of the Contract Act contemplates the case of an agent, who is allowed personally to enforce a contract entered into by him on behalf of his principal, i.e., of a person who is allowed to enforce a contract entered into by some body else. In this case the contract, on the face of it, is between the buyers and the unnamed sellers and the language is adopted accordingly, but nevertheless there is a good custom entitling the brokers to enforce the contract and the arbitration clause should be so taken as to include the brokers. There is the decision of Chaudhuri, J., to that effect. That case has been often cited and its authority has never been impaired, though it has not been confirmed on appeal. I should be loath to disturb a settled practice of considerable standing, by throwing doubt on the right of the brokers to have recourse to arbitration. If the decision of Chaudhuri, J., is to be interfered with, it should be by a higher Court.

A question of estoppel has been raised, based on the proceedings before the Tribunal of Arbitration and on the correspondence. It is true that the brokers, like persons between two fires, ran hither and thither alleging sometimes one thing and sometimes another. But I am satisfied that there is nothing to base estoppel upon. The plaintiff have given no evidence. I do not understand exactly how it can be here contended that owing to what took place before the arbitrators or owing to the letters that passed, the plaintiffs in this case have acted on the brokers' representation in such a way as to cause any loss or harm. There is no evidence on behalf of the buyers, and the correspondence makes out no ground of estoppel.

I propose, therefore, to dismiss this suit with costs on scale No. 2 and uphold the award. The defendants will not be entitled to the costs of the 29th March. Plaintiffs will get the costs, if any, occasioned by reason of the suit having been heard ex parte at one time, and then restored.

Mortgage—Prior and subsequent simple mortgages—Execution sale under second mortgage—Subsequent sale under prior mortgage—Suit for possession by prior mortgagee, maintainability of.

A second mortgagee entered into possession of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree for sale obtained in a suit on his mortgage to which a prior simple mortgagee was not made a party. The prior mortgagee subsequently purchased the same property in execution of a decree for sale obtained in a suit on his mortgage to which the second mortgagee was not made a party. The prior mortgagee then brought a suit against the second mortgagee for recovery of possession of the property, and, in the alternative, for a conditional decree that the defendant should redeem his mortgage and in case of his failure to do so, he, the plaintiff, should be put in possession of the property in dispute:

Held, that the suit was misconceived and should be dismissed as the plaintiff had no right to the possession of the property under his simple mortgage on which he based his title.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 10th August 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 27th January 1920.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Pandit Narmadeshwar Prasad Upadhiya, for the Appellant.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff-respondent, who is the purchaser of the property in dispute under a prior mortgage-decree, to which the defendants-appellants were no parties, has a right to eject the defendants, the purchasers in execution of a decree, based on a puisne mortgage, to which the prior mortgagees were no parties. It appears that in the year 1910 the second mortgagees obtained a decree on foot of their mortgage for sale of the property and purchased the property on the 20th of April 1912, in execution of such decree. To this suit the prior mortgagee was not made a party. In the year 1916 the prior mortgagee got a decree for sale on foot of her mortgage, but to this suit neither the puisne mortgagee nor the purchaser in execution of his decree were made parties. The prior mortgagee got a decree and put the property to sale and, in execution thereof, purchased it herself. She has obtained possession over three-fourths of the property and has not got possession over one-fourth, which is in the possession of the defendants.

She brought the present suit for recovery of possession of the remaining one-fourth also, and, in the alternative, for a conditional decree that the defendant should redeem her mortgage, and in case of his failure to do so, she should be put in possession of the property in dispute.

The First Court partially decreed the suit. The learned District Judge in appeal has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendants should redeem her by paying the sum of Rs. 1,640-13-0 and in case of his failure to do so within six months, possession of the property should be delivered to the plaintiff.

The defendant comes here in second appeal and the contention raised on his behalf by his learned Vakil is that such a suit is not maintainable. This contention is fully covered by an authority of this Court in Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (1). That case is on all fours with the present case and this appeal must, therefore, be allowed on the ground that the plaintiff has no right to possession of the property under the mortgage on which she bases her title. It was a simple mortgage and not possessory mortgage. The suit was misconceived and should have been dismissed. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Fraud—Decree, setting aside of—Res judicata.

Plaintiff sued to set aside a decree passed against him on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. The alleged fraud consisted in a suppression by defendant of a part of the accounts whereby it was alleged the Court was deceived. The existence of any such accounts was denied by the defendant. It was found that in the previous suit, the truth or falsity of the accounts was adjudicated upon:

Held, that the alleged fraud had in fact been already adjudicated upon and the suit was not maintainable.

Second appeal from a decree of the Divisional Court, Tennaserim, in Civil Appeal No. 43 of 1919.

Mr. S. S. Halkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued to set aside the decree in Suit No. 17 of 1914 in the Sub-Divisional Court, Thaton, on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud.

The alleged fraud consisted in a suppression by defendant of a part of his account whereby the plaintiff was prevented from placing his case properly before the Court and the Court was deceived and unable to decide the case on a proper basis.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that there was no fraud alleged extraneous to the facts in the suit and that the suit was merely an attempt to reopen a suit on which there had already been a final adjudication; in other words, that the subject-matter of the suit was res judicata.

On appeal the Divisional Court in an able and instructive judgment pointed out that in the previous suit upon items of accounts on which each side produced evidence and the Court came to a decision, plaintiff was given every opportunity to produce accounts. The truth or falsity of the accounts was adjudicated upon and plaintiff cannot now be allowed to say he relies upon certain accounts, the existence of which is not admitted by defendant and that, therefore, the previous decree was not obtained by fraud.

Following the Madras Full Bench case of Kadirvelu Nainar v. Kuppuswami Naicker (1) the learned Divisional Judge held that in so far as plaintiff relied on perjured evidence the suit was not maintainable.

I entirely agree with the view taken by the Divisional Court.

The suit is clearly an attempt to reopen the previous case on the ground that the decree had been obtained by the suppression of evidence. The alleged fraud has, in effect, been already adjudicated upon.

I am of opinion the suit was not, on the allegations in the plaint, maintainable. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14, Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Direction that execution should take place in certain manner—Appeal, whether step-in-aid of execution—Exclusion of time spent in prosecuting previous application—Subsequent application, whether in continuation of previous application.

A decree-holder made an application for execution on which the District Judge directed that execution should proceed on the basis of a certain report. The decree-holder took no further steps in the matter and some time after made a fresh application for execution on which the Executing Court made the same order which the District Judge had made on the previous application. The decree-holder appealed to the District Judge, but his appeal was dismissed. A second appeal to the High Court was also dismissed. A third application for execution was made more than three years after the dismissal of the appeal by the District Judge but within three years from the date of the dismissal of the second appeal by the High Court :

Held, (1) that the second appeal to the High Court could not be treated as a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the High Court was not in this case the "proper Court" within the meaning of clause (2) of Art. 182; [p. 280, col. 1.]

(2) that the decree-holder was not entitled under section 14 of the Limitation Act to the exclusion of the time spent in prosecuting the second application for execution inasmuch as it was not a proceeding which the Court had been unable to entertain from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature; [p. 280, col. 1.]

(3) that the previous application having proved infructuous owing to the conduct of the decree-holder himself, the subsequent application could not be treated as one made in continuation of the previous application. [p. 280, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against an order in execution of a decree. The decree was made by the Trial Court on the 3rd July 1906 and was successively confirmed by the lower Appellate Court and by this Court on the 10th September 1907 and 9th March 1910. In 1912 the decree-holder made the first application for execution of the decree which directed the judgment-debtors to carry out certain works and to restore the disputed property to its original condition. The application was dismissed by the Trial Court on the 17th January 1913. On appeal the District Judge directed that a Commissioner should be appointed with a view to carry out the terms of the decree, and a Commissioner was accordingly appointed. He submitted a report to which exceptions were taken. These were overruled on the 9th July 1913 by the District Judge who accepted the report of the Commissioner and directed that the execution should take place on its basis. The decree-holder, however, did not proceed with the execution and the proceedings were apparently discontinued. On the 16th September 1914 the decree-holder made the second application for execution. This application was based on the assumption that the decree-holder was not bound by the determination of the District Judge on the previous application that execution should proceed on the basis of the report of the Commissioner. The result was that the judgment-debtors objected. On the 15th March 1916 the Trial Court directed that execution should take place on the basis of the order of the 9th July 1913. The decree-holder was dissatisfied and appealed. The appeal, as might have been expected, was dismissed on the 3rd July 1916. A second appeal was preferred to this Court with the result that it was dismissed on the 9th February 1917. The obvious course for the decree-holder would have been, after the dismissal of the appeal by this Court, to proceed with the execution as was directed by the Court of first instance. No steps, however, were taken till the 23rd January 1920 when he presented the third application for execution. He was forthwith met with the plea of limitation on the part of the judgment-debtors. The Courts below have held that the aplication was not barred by limitation. We are of opinion that the view taken by the lower Courts cannot be supported.

In the first place, it is plain that Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act is of no assistance to the decree-holder. He is not able to show that within three years of the date of the present application that is, subsequent to the 23rd January 1917, he applied to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. The fact that he brought an appeal to this Court on the 9th February 1917 against the decision of the District Judge could not clearly be treated as an application to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. The expression "proper Court" as defined in Explanation II to Art. 182 does not apply to a case such as this.

In the next place, it is clear that section 14 of the Limitation Act is of no avail. Sub-section (2) to section 14 which has been invoked on behalf of the respondents, provides that "in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded, where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it." It cannot seriously be maintained that the previous application for execution could not be entertained by the Court from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. The Court dealt with it on the merits and came to the conclusion that the judgment-debtors and the decree holder were alike bound by the order made in the course of the first execution proceedings. In these circumstances, it is difficult to appreciate how the decree-holder can possibly escape the bar of limitation.

It has been finally suggested, however, that the present application for execution may be treated, not as a fresh application but as one in continuation of the second application for execution. This view is clearly unsupportable on the authorities. It was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (1) that an application for execution may in certain contingencies be treated as one to revive and carry through a pending execution; thus, the second application might be treated as one not to initiate a new proceeding, but to revive the previous proceeding when the latter was arrested by reason of circumstances over which the decree-holder had no control. This principle clearly does not apply to the present case. Here the difficulty has been created entirely by the decree-holder himself, as he ignored the order made by the Execution Court in the first proceeding. In these circumstances, the principle has clearly no application: see Kristo Coomar Nag v. Mahabat Khan (2) and Baroda Kanta Basu v. Chandra Kanta Ghose (3). The decision of the Allahabad High Court in Hulasi v. Maiku (4) was prononnced under very special circumstances. If the principle recognised in that case could be applied, the result would be that the order made by the District Judge on the 9th July 1913 would have to be treated as an order capable by itself of execution, even that conclusion, however, would be of no assistance to the respondent, for he never sought to execute the decree till the 23rd January 1920 after the lapse of the period of limitation.

The result is that the order of the District Judge is set aside and the application for execution of the decree dismissed Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 16—Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864), s. 59—Suit for recovery of water-cess paid under protest—Limitation.

A suit for recovery of money alleged to have been illegally collected by Government as water-cess and paid under protest is governed by Art. 16 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 282, col. 1.]

Ravula Vangala Reddi v. Secretary of State, 15 Ind. Cas. 328, Ravala Nagamma v. Secretary of State, 18 Ind. Cas. 699; (1913) M. W. N. 75 and Secretary of State for India v. Zemindarini of Vegayammapeta Estate, 59 Ind. Cas. 98; 12 L. W. 334, referred to.

Section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act is confined particularly to the cases of persons aggrieved by illegal or irregular proceedings taken for the collection of revenue under the provisions of the said Act. [p. 282, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suits Nos. 1 and 11 of 1922, respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangaman, in Original Suits Nos. 226 and 220 of 1920.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair (Government Pleader), for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and R. Subramania Aiyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for our determination is whether the period of limitation applicable to these suits which have been brought to recover amounts alleged to have been illegally collected by Government from the plaintiffs as water-cess on their lands, is one year from the date of payment under Art. 16 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, or six months from the date of the distraint of the plaintiff's paddy crop under section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864).

It is conceded on either side that, if the former period applies, the suits are in time, after giving the plaintiffs credit for the time required under section 80, Civil Procedure Code, to give notice of suit to the Government as allowed by section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act, but that, if the latter period of limitation is applicable, the suits are out of time. Under section 2 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865) arrears of water-cess are made recoverable in the same manner as arrears of land revenue. Section 59 of Act II of 1864 gives a right to persons deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under that Act to apply to the Civil Courts for redress within six months of the cause of action arising.

In the plaint it is stated that the imposition and collection of penal water rate was unauthorised and illegal, and the relief claimed is the refund of the amounts thus illegally collected and paid under protest together with interest, the cause of action being given as the communication on June 24th, 1920, (five days before the institution of the suit) of the Collector's order of May 28th, 1920, in the village of Visalur where the amount was collected on April 30th, 1919. The nature of the suit thus falls exactly under the description in column 1 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, Art. 16 (suit "against Government to recover money paid under protest in satisfaction of a claim made by the Revenue Authorities on account of arrears of revenue or on account of demands recoverable as such arrears.") The only doubt is whether the fact that the plaintiff's crops were distrained in order to enforce payment of the demand (alleged to be unjustifiable) operates to introduce section 58 of Act II of 1864 by reason of section 29 (b) of the Limitation Act and so to shorten the period of limitation. The fact that the plaintiffs do not even mention in their plaints the attachment of their crops clearly shows that they do not deem themselves aggrieved by that. It is not their case that the collection of water-cess from them was intra vires but irregular. They maintain that it was altogether ultra vires as they were not at all liable to pay the cess because they have an immemorial vested right to the water.

The distinction between proceedings for the collection of revenue which are taken professedly under the Act but amount to an illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction by which a party is aggrieved, and proceedings which are wholly without jurisdiction owing to the party against whom they are taken not being a defaulter was first made by a Full Bench in Venkata v. Chengadu (1) and the distinction has been since observed in Iswara Patter v. Karuppan (2), Raman Naidu v. Bhassoori Sanyasi (3), Vadlur Chinna Nagi Reddy v. Devineni Venkatramaniah (4) and Bhamireddi Venkan Doragaru v. Secretary of State (5).

In Secretary of State v. Simhadri Jaghapathiraju (6) quoted by the Subordinate Judge and in Suryaprakasa Row v. Secretary of State for India (7) this particular point was not raised and discussed.

In Ravula Vengala Reddi v. Secretary of State (8), Ravala Nagamma v. Secretary of State (9) and Secretary of State for India v. Zemindarani of Vegayammapeta Estate (10), where the suits were for the recovery of cess alleged to have been illegally levied, the one year's period of limitation under Art. 16 was held to govern them, section 59 of Act II of 1864 being confined in operation to the particular class of cases to which that section is directly applicable, namely, to the cases of persons being aggrieved by illegal or irregular proceedings taken for the collection of revenue under the provisions of Act II of 1864 according to the principles laid down in Srinivasa Iyangar v. Secretary of State (11). The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in his view that Art. 16 of the Limitation Act, which gives one year from the date of payment, governs these suits, and the civil miscellaneous appeals are dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 26th April 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Kaithal, District Karnal, dated the 15th April 1920.

Mr. Prem Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the findings of the Court below there is no valid ground for second appeal.

The pool in question is just an ordinary natural depression which for some months each year after the rains holds rain-water and I have no doubt that the Dhobis sometimes use it.

But such user of an intermittent nature accompanied by no assertion of right is a very common phenomenon in this country and arouses no opposition. The pond is not susceptible of actual pyhsical possession by the legal owner and possession follows title, unless the usurper can prove long and continuous exclusion of the rightful owner.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Ejectment suit—Jus tertii—Res judicata.

A mortgagor brought a suit for possession against his mortgagee on the expiry of the term of the mortgage, which was dismissed on the ground that he had come to some settlement with the mortgagee entitling the latter to retain possession even after the termination of the mortgage. Subsequently, the mortgagee was dispossessed by a stranger. In a suit by the mortgagee against him for possession, the stranger set up the title of the mortgagor as jus tertii:

Held, that the defendant must take the title of the mortgagor as it stood, and as the plaintiff claimed a title from the mortgagor, which in view of the previous litigation the mortgagor could not be heard to contest, that title was, under the circumstances, a good title against the defendant who was liable to be evicted. JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—The disputed land originally formed part of the occupancy holding of Fatiram Tilakdas. After his death his widow, Pratima, mortgaged the holding to the plaintiff. Under the terms of the mortgage instrument the plaintiff was to have possession as usufructuary mortgagee, or ijaradar for a period of nine years ending with Baisakh 1319 B. S. Tilakdas left four daughters, but it appears that since the death of his widow, two of the daughters Paro and Bhuban have been treated as his heirs and the case has been argued before us on both sides on the assumption that they were his sole heirs.

On the expiry of the term of his mortgage the plaintiff did not surrender possession of the holding or the agricultural land therein comprised. In 1912, therefore, Paro and Bhuban sued him in ejectment claiming title as their father's heirs. In that suit Paro succeeded in appeal to the extent of a moiety of the holding while Bhuban's claim to the other moiety was dismissed. It is not very easy to follow the reasoning of the Appellate Court. The plaintiff's case (he was then defendant) was that on the death of Pratima, the landlord took khas possession of the holding and settled it with him with the knowledge and consent of the two ladies. The Trial Court had accepted that plea and had dismissed the suit in its entirety. In the appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found in his own words that "the evidence is not satisfactory to show that the malik dispossessed the plaintiffs (i.e., the two ladies) and took the lands into his khas possession." Nevertheless, he seems to have dismissed Bhuban's claim on the ground that she and the plaintiff (then defendant) had come to some am cable settlement with the landlord which did not bind Paro. It is not easy to conceive of an amicable arrangement between the plaintiff ar.d Bhuban which would deprive the latter of the whole of her share. Moreover, the claim of a person who has obtained possession of land as mortgagee to retain possession after the termination of the mortgage should always be jealously scrutinized. Nevertheless, it must be accepted that the previous suit makes the quest on of the title to Bhuban's original mo ety res judicata in the plaintiff's favour as between him and Bhuban.

In the present suit, the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of that moiety. The defendants are No. 1 Paro, No. 2 Paro's son, No. 3 Bhuban's husband and No. 4 Bhuban's son-in-law. Defendant No. 4 is a mortgagee from Paro of her moiety and apparently he makes no claim to the disputed moiety. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have no title of their own to the latter and must be treated in respect thereof as mere trespassers.

In the state of things so disclosed, the learned Munsif in the Trial Court found in the plaintiff's favour and decreed his suit. In the lower Appellate Court the learned Subordinate Judge took a different view and made a decree of dismissal from which the plaintiff has appealed.

It is contended on the plaintiff's behalf that the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in law in so far as he holds that the findings of the Appellate Court in the previous suit are not admissible in evidence against the defendants or the contesting defendants "who were not parties to that suit and who do not claim to be in possession of the disputed eight-annas share of the land either through Paro or through Bhuban."

On that footing the view of the case taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is briefly this, that on the merits (apart from the previous litigation) the plaintiff has not succeeded in establishing his title to the moiety and that, inasmuch as he was dispossessed in 1323 (1916) and this suit was instituted more than six months later in August 1918, he cannot succeed on the mere ground of prior possession.

If his premises were granted, the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge could not in such a case as the present be disputed in this High Court. There is really no controversy as to the principle that prior peaceable possession furnishes a good title as against a mere trespasser. The result arrived at by this High Court in Nisa Chand Gaita v. Kanchiram (1) is based on the construction and effect of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Other High Courts may have taken a different view of the legal operation of that section but, at any rate, there is this to be said that if a true title may be defeated by twelve years' adverse possession by a trespasser, there is nothing shocking to the sense of justice in a legislative rule that the period of limitation for a suit by mere trespasser or squatter to recover possession should be six months from the date of his dispossession. If that be the true effect of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, the learned Subordinate Judge is so far right, nor do the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Shama Charan Roy v. Surja Kanta Acharya (2) and Adhar Chandra Pal v. Dibakar Bhuyan (3) amount to a dissent from the rule laid down in Nisa Chand's case (1). The ratio decidendi in both those cases was that the rule had no application to the facts. It was held in both cases that the plaintiff had not only been in possession but had a title to possession.

So, in the present case, though I should have no compunction in following the Subordinate Judge if I could see my way to so doing, in my opinion, he had applied the rule in Nisa Chad's case (1) in circumstances to which it has no proper application.

Here it is common ground that the true title was originally in Bhuban. The contesting defendants though they do not in terms claim a title through or under Bhuban are in effect setting up Bhuban's title as a jus tertii. That being so, they must take Bhuban's title as it stands. The plaintiff claims a title from Bhuban which in view of the previous litigation Bhuban could not be heard to contest and that title, therefore, is in the circumstances a good title as against the contesting defendants.

In my opinion the appeal should be allowed. The judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside and the judgment and decree of the Munsif should be restored. The plaintiff is entitled to recover his costs of this appeal and his costs in the lower Appellate Court from the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 as the contesting defendants.

Suhrawardy, J.—I concur in the order my learned brother proposes to pass in this case. I only wish to add that if the question whether a plaintiff can succeed in a suit for recovery of property as against a person having no title to it, only on the strength of his (plaintiff's) previous possession had not been settled in this Court by a series of decisions followed in a large number of cases, I would have deemed the proposition worth reconsideration in view of the reasonings of other High Courts which have taken a different view and some pronouncements of the Judicial Committee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11 —Mortgagee's suit for possession against stranger —Title at issue—Subsequent suit for redemption by mortgagor—Stranger, whether can set up title— Res judicata

A mortgagee's suit for possession was resisted by a stranger on the ground that the land belonged to him and that the mortgagor had no title to it. This suit was decreed. Subsequently, a son of the mortgagor brought the present suit for redemption. The contesting defendant in the earlier suit was also a party and raised the same plea of title :

Held, that in the previous suit the mortgage sued as representing the estate and in the present suit, the plaintiff was really claiming through the mortgagee and the defendant was debarred from raising the same plea of title which had been adjudicated upon in the previous suit. [p. 286, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 208 of 1920.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.
Mr. A. G. Desai, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit to redeem the plaint lands from the mortgage mentioned therein. He has got a decree. But in the course of the suit he was met by defendant No. 22 who claimed to have an interest in the mortgaged land. That question was fought out in 1892 when the mortgagee filed a suit for possession against defendant No. 22's father. Defendant No. 22's father was then disputing the present plaintiff's father's exclusive title and asserted his own over the land. The Court decided that defendant No. 22's father was not the least interested either in the land or in the mango trees, and that the present plaintiff's father was full owner of the properties mortgaged by him to defendants Nos. 1 and 2's father. The Court also held that defendant No. 22's father was not joint in interest with the present plaintiff's father. It seems very strange to me that, 30 years later, when the plaintiff seeks to redeem, he should be met by the same contention on behalf of the 22nd defendant that the property did not belong to plaintiff's father. The Appellate Judge said: "But the mortgagee sued as representing the estate, that is, as representative of the mortgagor, and as such the decree he obtained was for the benefit of the mortgagor, so that the 22nd defendant could not again set up his title on the mortgaged lands against the mortgagor." He, there fore, found that this question was res judicata as between the present plaintiff and defendant No. 22.

Under section 11 or the Code of Civil Procedure the matter must have been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title. Now the mortgagee was litigating against the 22nd defendant's father on the ground that the property belonged to his mortgagor. The father of defendant No. 22 disputed that title and lost. Now that the mortgagor seeks to redeem, he is really claiming through the mortgagee, and it seems to me that section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code would sufficiently dispose of the suggestion that the 22nd defendant is still at liberty to raise a contention against the plaintiff which was defeated in 1892 in proceedings between his father and the mortgagee. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 10, 34—Transfer by proprietor, effect of—Usufructuary mortgage of proprietary rights—Sale of equity of redemption—Position of vendee—Vendee in possession by arrangement with vendor—Suit for arrears of rent, whether maintainable.

When a proprietor makes a transfer, he loses his sir and khudkasht rights under section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act even in the land which he has been cultivating for 12 years and becomes an ex-proprietary tenant. [p. 287, col. 1.]

When a proprietor executes a usufructuary mortgage of his land and then sells the equity of redemption, the vendee does not acquire khudkasht rights in the holding. [p. 287, col. 1.]

If the vendee by private arrangement with his vendor, obtains cultivatory possession of the holding he can be sued by the land-holder for arrears of rent under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 287, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the First Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 7th July 1921.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two connected suits between the same parties. The first suit in which Second Appeal No. 61 of 1922 is brought was for arrears of rent under sections 34 and 102 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The second suit in which Second Appeal No. 44 of 1922 is brought was a subsequent suit for the ejectment of the defendants.

The defendants are purchasers of the shares of three co-sharers, Kalua, Nadir and Moti. Their purchase was made in 1909. It was a purchase of the equity of redemption subject to a usufructuary mortgage of the same land previously made by the proprietors in favour of Debi Singh and Thakria. That mortgage is still subsisting. Under that mortgage ex-proprietary rights arose in favour of the mortgagors in respect of their sir and khudkasht land. When they executed the sale-deed in favour of the defendants the vendors relinquished their ex-proprietary lands and handed over cultivating possession to the defendants. The question in dispute between the parties is whether the defendants held these lands as tenants or as khudkasht. A suit to which the present plaintiffs were parties was brought previously by the mortgagees on an allegation that the cultivation of these plots by the defendants amounted to their dispossession. The suit was dismissed on a finding that the defendants were in possession by receipt of profits from the lambardar and that the rents were collected by the lambardar and not by the co-sharers. On these facts the Courts below have, in our opinion, rightly held that the defendants are not cultivating the land as khudkasht. The defendants not being in proprietary possession of any share it is difficult to see how their possession can possibly be considered as khudkasht. Khudkasht can only be held by a proprietor who is in possession and the possession of the persons from whom the defendants obtained these plots was clearly that of ex-proprietary tenants. When a proprietor makes a transfer he loses his sir and khudkasht rights under section 10 of the Tenancy Act even in the land which he has been cultivating for 12 years and becomes an ex-proprietary tenant. He obviously cannot claim khudkasht rights in land which he only begins to cultivate at the time when he loses his possession.

It is next argued that, if the defendants must be considered to be in possession as tenants, section 34 does not apply as that section only applies to persons who are in possession without the consent of the landholder. The answer to this is that the arrangement between the defendants and their vendors was arrived at behind the backs of the mortgagees who were in possession of the proprietary interest.

Thirdly, and finally, it is argued that if the defendants are tenants at all they are tenants of the mortgagees only and that the mortgagees alone are entitled to collect rent from them. This contention was raised in the Courts below and the learned District Judge points out that all the rents in the village are collected by the lambardar; that the mortgagees themselves now admit this to be the case and do not claim to collect any rents themselves, and that the finding in the previous suit to which the defendants were parties was that the lambardar alone collected. In view of the findings in the previous suit it appears to us that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the mortgagees to bring any suit for arrears of rent.

The result is, that we uphold the decrees of the Court below and dismiss both appeals. We make no order as to costs as the respondent is not represented.

Mr. T. Ameer Ali, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. S. C. Bose and J. N. Majumdar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff, who until lately was Master of the steamship Singhaporean, now lying in the Dry Docks in the Hooghly, sues for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 6,744-4-11 for his wages and messing and other expenses incurred by him on account of the ship in the course of his employment as Master during the period commencing from the 1st July 1921 and ending with the 6th November 1921 and for the wages and messing of the Chief Engineer and other seamen and for other liabilities incurred by the plaintiff on account of the ship as such Master during the said period. Particulars of the said claim are set out in the statement annexed to the plaint and marked Exhibit A. It is alleged that before the institution of this suit, accounts were furnished to the defendants and monthly portage bills with full details and vouchers were duly delivered, but that, notwithstanding demands, the defendants have failed and neglected to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of Rs. 6,744-4-11 or any part thereof. In the particulars annexed to the plaint, a sum of Rs 3,081-13 is claimed by the plaintiff on account of his wages and messing and on account of travelling expenses and refreshments, and a sum of Rs. 2,617 is claimed on account of the Chief Engineer's wages and messing, and three other sums, namely, Rs. 597-12-4, Rs. 33 and Rs. 117-10-10 on account of wages of the deck crew, engine-room crew and dinghy man, aggregating in all to Rs. 6,744-4-11.

The defendants are two in number; (i) Rai Bahadur Damodar Dass, and (ii) Lala Raghumull. It is alleged that they were joint owners of the SS. Singhaporean. As against the defendant Rai Bahadur Damodar Dass, the claim has been wirthdrawn, the defendant Rai Bahadur Damodar Dass not pressing any claim for costs. So far as the defendant Lala Raghumull is concerned, he states in his written statement that sometime in June 1921 an agreement was arrived at between the plaintiff and Lala Raghumull under which the plaintiff agreed to receive a sum of Rs. 325 a month till the vessel resumed work. At the Bar, however, Mr S. C. Bose, on behalf of Lala Raghumull, has stated that the figure should be not Rs. 325 but Rs. 500. In the second place, it is urged that the plaintiff has not rendered any accounts of the various sums which had been paid to him from time to time, and, in the third place, it is alleged that on an account being taken, it would be found that a very large sum of money was due and owing to the defendant Lala Raghumull. Lastly, the question of jurisdiction is raised and it is stated that this Court has no jurisdiction to try this suit which has been filed in the Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction of this Court.

The issues settled between the parties are as follows :—

(i) Is the plaintiff entitled to recover the wages and messing charges of the Chief Engineer in this suit?

(ii) Was there any agreement in June 1921 between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the plaintiff would accept a salary at the rate of Rs. 500 a month including messing charges and travelling expenses, from the 1st July 1921 till the vessel resumed work?

(iii) Was there a similar agreement between the Chief Engineer and the defendant?

(iv) Is the plaintiff entitled to any travelling expenses from the 1st July to the 6th November 1921?

(v) What sum, if any, is due to the plaintiff?

On behalf of the plaintiff, Mr. Ameer Ali has raised the following issues:—

(1) Did the plaintiff fail to render accounts and portage bills as alleged in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the written statement?

(2) Did the first defendant accept as accurate the portage bills and accounts in respect of the period from February to May 1921 inclusive and June to November 1921 inclusive?

The defendant Lala Raghumull has not given any evidence in this case, but on his behalf his constituted attorney and partner, Gopal Dass, was called for the purpose of proving that, so far as the deck crew and engine room crew and the dinghy men were concerned, they had all been paid off. In support of this last statement, the witness Gopal Dass has produced before me three receipts showing that a lump sum of Rs. 700 was paid in the presence of a Solicitor to the head man of the deck crew, the head man of the engine room crew and the dinghy man on account of their wages for the period mentioned in the account annexed to the plaint.

The plaintiff in his evidence states that on the 6th February 1921, he was appointed Master of these SS. Singhaporean by Messrs, Frederick Gaebele, who were the agents of the owners, on a salary of Rs. 650 per month, and on terms and conditions appearing in Exhibit A. He says, at the time of his appointment as Master, he was told that the owners of the ship were away from Calcutta. One of the owners was Rai Bahadur Damodar Dass and the other Lala Raghumull. On the 1st March 1921, he was introduced to Rai Bahadur Damodar Dass when the latter said that the portage bills should be submitted to him at the end of every month and that payment would be made by the 6th of each month. He also said that as regards travelling expenses, the actual sums spent on account of travelling expenses should be included in the bills. The plaintiff states that the agreement entered into with Messrs. Gaebele was such as is usual throughout the shipping world, and that, under the agreement, provision was made for his boarding and travelling expenses and entertaining allowance. As regards the portage bills, they were all settled up to the 6th April, i.e., he was paid on the 6th March for the February bill; on the 6th April for the March bill. After that there were delays, and in the end he found it difficult to realise the amount of his portage bills from the 1st July down to the 6th November. On this date he resigned his appointment as Master, but previous to that date the defendant Lala Raghumull had asked him to remain on board the Singaporean as Master thereof on a reduced salary. The plaintiff's evidence on this point was as follows. (Q. 55):—

"I then spoke to the Rai Bahadur and said, Gentlemen, I am quite prepared to enter into an agreement with you to receive Rs. 500 a month from the day the ship goes into the hands of the repairers until she is able to take in cargo, provided, of course, that the Chief Engineer will have to take the same reduction, because it will be impossible for me to be on board a ship with less salary than the Chief Engineer. I also pointed out to the Rai Bahadur that the agreement should be such that there should be no delays as regards payment: payment should be made regularly, and also if I were to engage myself with him, there should be a car at my disposal and at the disposal of the Chief Engineer while the ship was at Matiabruz, as it was impossible for me to run backwards and forwards between Matiabruz and Harrison Roard out of my own pocket."

He states further that the Chief Engineer had a similar conversation with the defendant Lala Raghumull, wherein the Chief Engineer pointed out that he was a member of the Engineers' Guild and that it was impossible for him to accept a reduced salary, but all he could do was to waive his claim to the messing allowance. Ultimately, nothing was settled; and the plaintiff continued to be Master on the terms mentioned in Exhibit A, down to the 6th November 1921, when he resigned. As I have said, the plaintiff has included in his bill the wages due to the Chief Engineer for the period 1st July to 6th November 1921, and the main contest in this suit has been whether the plaintiff was entitled to include in his claim a claim for the wages and for the messing allowance due to the Chief Engineer.

The Chief Engineer has given evidence, and he states that, according to the custom which prevails among seamen, he looked to the Master as being responsible for the wages due to him. The Chief Engineer corroborates the Captain as regards the conversation he had with the defendant Lala Raghumull with reference to the plaintiff staying on as Master of the Singaporean on a reduced salary. As I have said, no evidence has been called on behalf of the defendants except on the question of payment of the deck crew, the engine crew and the dinghy man.

On behalf of the defendant Lala Raghumull it has been contended that, in any event, there ought not to be any judgment in this suit against the defendant in respect of the wages alleged to be due to the Chief Engineer, and in support of this contention, my attention has been invited to various sections of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 and the Merchant Shipping Act of 1906, and the Indian Merchant Shipping Act of 1859 and to the Amending Indian Act of 1883. I shall refer to these sections later on but in the view which I take, it will be seen later that the sections to which my attention has been directed have no real bearing on the question. Prior to the English Act of 1854, it had been said in numerous cases that mariners were the favourites of the law and were placed particularly under its protection, and that the Court was always anxious to protect them against circumvention and error, and that in suits for wages the Court was always anxious that seamen should not be harassed with litigation, and that it was desirable that questions relating to wages due to seamen should be speedily settled. Now, following these principles, it was held in a series of cases, prior to the Admiralty Court Act of 1861, that the Court of Admiralty had jurisdiction in rem or in personam over claims by seamen for any wages earned by them under a special contract, or otherwise, and that the Master, ship and the owner were severally liable to a mariner for his wages, and that the mariner was entitled to choose who he would proceed against, and that in some respects a proceeding by a mariner against the Master was more covenient (see the cases collected in Pritchard's Admiralty Digest, Vol. II). In the case of Jack Park (1), it was held by Sir William Scott (who was afterwards to be known under the title of Lord Stowell) that for the wages of the mariners the Master was liable, the ship was liable and the owner was liable. The mariner was entitled to his option, and in some respects perhaps there was less inconvenience occasioned by proceeding against the Master because in that case the ship was not detained. In an American case [Bunde v. Haven (2)] it is said that seamen have a triple security for their wages, namely, the vessel, the owner and the Master; and in the case of The Salacia (3), it is laid down as an established rule, so ancient, that the origin thereof is not known, that seamen may recover their wages by action against the Master. [See also Baily v. Grant (4), Anon (5), Hook v. Moreton (6), Armstrong v. Smith (7)]. The principle of these decisions is that, although by the Law Maritime, the ship is the primary security of the mariner for his wages, and although as long as a plank remains, the seamen is entitled to the proceeds of the plank as security for his wages, the mariner is also entitled at his option to proceed against the Master or owner. It is observed rather quaintly in an old case that, "Contracts of seamen have always been considered amongst the most important outfit that a ship can have. Her construction may be the best that modern ingenuity may produce; every device of recent invention may be lavished upon her; yet unless she has a brain to direct her course, and skilful Chief Engineers to regulate the pulsation of her engines and manage her numerous complicated machinery, her propeller is paralysed, her syren is dumb. This is like the human body when the soul has departed. Mere machinery is of little service unless intelligently handled. It is not the gun, but the man behind it who is formidable, and in modern as in ancient times the personal equation is still controlling. On this account the utmost encouragement and fullest protection to seamen are the established policy of Admiralty Law, and as regards Courts they have been equally liberal in deciding questions as regards Statutes relating to seamen and as to who are seamen. The term is not confined to those who actually take part in the navigation of the ship. Every one who is regualrly attached to the ship and who contributes to her successful handling is a seaman although he may not know one rope from another."

In the present case, however, it is argued that the facts of the present case are such that it is impossible to hold that the plaintiff is entitled to include in his claim for wages and for messing due to the Chief Engineer. The argument is put in this way: it is said that Exhibit 1 proves the direct employment of the Chief Engineer by the owners, and, that being so, the defendant Lala Raghumull cannot possibly be held liable to the plaintiff for wages due to the Chief Engineer. The contention raised by the defendant is covered by authority. In the case of Farrel v. M'Clea (8) decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the facts were as follows:— It was a claim against the Master of a vessel for payment of the wages of the mate. The mate had been appointed by the owner and had been shipped by the owner with a letter introducing him to the Master. On behalf of the defendant (the Master) it was argued that, inasmuch as the employment was by the owner, the Master could not be held liable, and that, although by the Law Maritime, the seamen has a triple security for his wages, inasmuch as the employment was by the owner, the case was taken out of the ordinary rule. Counsel for the plaintiff argued that mariners had a threefold security for their wages, they may proceed against the owner; secondly, they may liable the vessel, and, thirdly, they may sue the Captain. It was further argued that the Captain was not bound to receive any sailors shipped by the owners because he was not only liable to the owners, but to strangers for any wrong they may do when shipped, but if the Captain did receive them, he made himself liable for the wages. The President of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in delivering the judgment of the Court observed as follows:—

"It was quite true that the plaintiff (the Mate) has been shipped by the owner, but admitting that to be so, in his opinion the Captain was liable, for the law gave the plaintiff a threefold remedy to recover his wages, and unless by some positive act or word the plaintiff had released, as he might do, one of these remedies, a mere compliance with the solicitation of the owner cannot possibly defeat the plaintiff's claim."

The President said that there was no distinction in this respect between the Mate and a common mariner; they were alike subject to the orders of the Captain, who could equally refuse to receive either, or, when received, was equally empowered to dismiss them for his appointment as Captain and Master of the ship gave him the sole, undoubted and exclusive right of choosing every seamen under him, whatever courtesy he might be inclined to show to the recommendation of those by whom he was himself employed. It will be observed that the above is an exact authority on the facts of the present case. No doubt it is an American authority; but where the decision is not based on any consideration of Statute law peculiar to America I know of no reason which prevents me from following an American authority, especially on a matter like this. One last remark I have to add. It is not disputed that the Chief Engineer comes within the expression "seamen"; if authority is needed the definition of the word in the English and Indian Acts may be referred to.

I now turn to the question whether the authority of the English cases referred to above has in any way been affected by the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894. Like the Act of 1854, it was a consolidating Act and it was not a condification of the law like the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, or the Partnership Act, 1890 and with trifling exceptions it left the Common Law and the case law untouched. The Indian Act of 1859 is a copy of some of the sections of the English Act of 1854. Section 58 of the Indian Act, to which my attention has been drawn by Mr. Bose for the defendant, is taken verbatim from section 191 of the English Act of 1854 and it, therefore, does not contain any such provision as is to be found in sub-section 2 of section 167 of the English Act of 1894. Neither section 58 of the Indian Act nor section 167 of the English Act of 1894 really affords any assistance so far as this case is concerned and I do not prospose to set out the sections here. It is also quite clear that there are no other sections in the two Acts which can be invoked in aid of the defendant in this case. The analogy of the Master being in a position to pledge the credit of the owner in a foreign port and not in a home port does not hold good at all in this case, and nothing more need be said about it.

On the authorities, therefore, I must answer the first issue in the affirmative.

As regards the second issue, I accept the testimony of Captain Morrier, and I hold that there was no such agreement as is referred to in the Issue No. 2.

As regards the third issue, the answer is in the negative.

As regards the fourth issue, the answer is in the affirmative on the evidence which has been adduced before me.

As regards Mr. Ameer Ali's issue, so far as the first issue is concerned, the answer is No.

Now, the question arises as to what relief I should award to the plaintiff. The plaintiff is clearly entitled to his wages and to his messing and travelling allowances. So far as the Chief Engineer's wages and messing are concerned, the plaintiff is entitled to include the same in his claim.

Now, as regards payments to the engine room crew, the deck crew and the dinghy man, certain receipts have been produced before me showing that they have been paid off. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, his liability to the engine room crew, the deck crew and dinghy-man is, on the authorities mentioned by me, clear, and although I am satisfied on the evidence before me that Rs. 700 has been paid to the head men of the three sets of the crews mentioned above, viz., the engine room crew, the deck crew and dinghy-man, in order fully to protect the plaintiff I propse to make this order: that the plaintiff do recover judgment for the entire amount of the claim with costs on scale No. 2. This judgment will carry interest from date at 6 per cent. till realisaton. It will, however, be open to the defendant to produce before the Registrar receipts from the individuals composing the engine room crew, the deck crew and the dinghy man for the period mentioned in the plaint and on the defendant producing before the Registrar within a fortnight those receipts, the amounts due to these three sets of crew will be deducted from the plaintiff s claim and he will then only be entitled to execute the decree for the two sums of Rs. 3,081-13-9 and Rs. 2,617 aggregating Rs. 5,698-13-9.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 83—Tenant in possession for long time —Presumption of permanent tenancy—Signing of kabuliyat by tenant, effect of.

The mere fact that, during the currency of his holding, a tenant signs a kabuliyat in favour of the landlord, which purports to be in terms an agreement for an annual tenancy, will not necessarily displace the presumption of the tenancy being a permanent one, where it is proved that the tenant has been in occupation of the land for so long that one cannot ascertain the commencement of the tenancy. But each case of this class must stand entirely on its own facts. At first, the tenant claiming to hold as a permanent tenant must establish the facts which would entitle him to the presumption of section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code. But that can be rebutted by the landlord by the production of a kabuliyat. Again, the effect of the kabuliyat can be destroyed by further evidence on the part of the tenant. [p. 293, col. 1.]

Where a person having obtained possession as Court purchaser determined to establish his right to the village lands and took kabuliyats from the tenants:

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the signing of the kabuliyat by the tenants destroyed any presumption about the permanent nature of their holdings. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes and Joint First Class, Sub-Judge with A. P. at Surat, in Appeal No. 112 of 1918.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for the Appellants.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Messrs. D. B. S. Rao and Rattanlal Ranchhoddas), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this action to recover possession of the plaint lands, mesne profits and certain damages. The Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the insertion in the kabuliyat of 1902, signed by the defendants, about giving up possession of the land was made fraudulently and without the knowledge of the defendants, and that, apart from the kabuliyat, the defendants were entitled to the presumption on the facts found under section 83 of the Land Revenue Code that they were permanent tenants.

This decision was reversed in appeal, the learned Judge being of opinion that the defendants' contention that the kibuliyat of 1902 was taken by the plaintiffs fraudulently was not established by the evidence. He was also of opinion that the defendants could not prove their possession of the suit land further back than 1862, and there was nothing on the record from which the Court could presume that they had been in possession prior to 1862. In any event, the Court was satisfied that the fact that defendants were in possession in 1854 had not been established. It would follow then that, even without the kabuliyat, it would be rather difficult for the defendants to ask the Court to give them the benefit of section 83, and hold that they were permanent tenants. The execution of the kabuliyat of 1902, in our opinion, must be taken as an admission by the defendants that they were not permanent tenants but tenants bound to give up possession according to the terms of the document.

No doubt, when it has been proved that a tenant has been in occupation of certain land for so long that one cannot ascertain the commencement of the tenancy the mere fact that, during the currency of his holding, he has signed a kabuliyat which purports to be in terms an agreement for an annual tenancy, may not be sufficient to displace the advantage he has obtained from his long holding, if he continues in possession for many years after he had signed the kabuliyat, on the same rent. But each case of this class must stand entirely on its own facts. At first, the tenant claiming to hold as permanent tenant must establish the facts which would entitle him to the presumption of section 83. But that can be rebutted by the landlord by the production of a kabuliyat. Again, the effect of the kabuliyat can be destroyed by further evidence on the part of the tenant. The fact of the signing of the kabuliyat as merely an isolated instance in the midst of a long holding at the same rent, will not necessarily prevent the tenant from succeeding.

There cannot be a clearer case than the one before us in which it has been proved that the kabuliyat was taken for a definite purpose. The plaintiffs were put in possession in 1892 as Court-purchasers. Prior to that time the land had been managed by the Collector, and as soon as the plaintiffs got into possession, they determined to establish their rights to the village lands. They began by filing suits against different occupants for possession. These suits were taken up to the High Court and ended in decrees for the plaintiffs. Thereafter, plaintiffs began taking kabuliyat from the tenants, of which a very large number have been recorded in the case, covering a period from 1902 to 1909. The purpose the plaintiffs had in taking these kabuliyats is perfectly clear. It is also clear that the tenants in occupation of the village lands must have known what the plaintiffs had in their minds. The tenants must have known that the plaintiffs were asking for kabuliyats; that they were asserting their rights against any claims of the tenants to hold as permanent tenants, and that many of the tenants were signing those kabuliyats.

In these circumstances, the plaintiffs obtained the kabilayat in suit from the defendants. Therefore, the signing of the kabuliyat at once destroyed any presumption that might have arisen from the previous holding of the defendants of the suit lands, and there is nothing that has occurred since which would lead one to suppose that the signing of a kabuliyat was a mere accident, which, on the continuance of the holding on the old terms, could be treated as a nullity in consequence of the later possession.

We think, then, the judgment of the First Class Sub-Judge was correct, and that, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Custom—Adoption, failure of—Gift to adopted son—Presumption.

Where a deed contains a testamentary disposition in favour of a person believed to be the adopted son of the executant, it is a question for consideration whether on the failure of the adoption the gift also fails. The Court has to decide in each case, after considering the language of the document and the surrounding circumstances, whether the adoption was the reason or motive for making the gift or bequest, or whether the mention of the donee or legatee as an adopted son was merely descriptive of the person to take under the gift or bequest and he was to take the property even though his adoption may not be valid. This is the law with respect to cases where there is an express gift or bequest in favour of an alleged adopted son, but where the instrument of adoption does not mention any gift inter vivos or any testamentary disposition in favour of the adopted son, and contains merely a declaration, of adoption, which declaration is found to be incorrect, the deed cannot be treated as a deed of gift. Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 2nd September 1913, Ganda Singh, a Jat of the village Khatrai Khurd, in the District of Amritsar, executed a deed of adoption in favour of the defendant, Surat Singh. The plaintiffs, who are Ganda Singh's collaterals, have brought the present action for a declaration that the deed of adoption is a fictitious document and shall not effect their rights to succeed to the estate of Ganda Singh. Now, the District Judge, concurring with the Trial Court, holds that Surat Singh was never actually adopted by Ganda Singh and that the alleged adoption was a mere paper transaction. The learned Judge has, however, treated the deed of adoption as a deed of gift and has granted a declaratory decree in favour of Surat Singh's right to succeed to the estate of Ganda Singh since the property held by the latter has not been proved to be ancestral, qua the plaintiffs.

Now, it has been repeatedly held, vide, inter alia, Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (1) and Lali v. Murlidhar (2), that, where a deed contains a testamentary disposition in favour of a person believed to be the adopted son, it is a question for consideration whether on the failure of adoption the gift also fails. The Court has to decide in each case, after considering the language of the document and the surrounding circumstances, whether the adoption was the reason or motive for making the gift or bequest, or whether the mention of the donee or the legatee as an adopted son was merely descriptive of the person to take under the gift or bequest and he was to take the property even though his adoption may not be valid. This is the law with respect to cases where there is an express gift or bequest in favour of an alleged adopted son. The instrument before us, however, does not mention any gift inter vivos to Surat Singh or any testamentary disposition in his favour. It contains merely a declaration of adoption, which declaration has been found to be incorrect, and does not even remotely refer to any property held by Ganda Singh. We fail to understand how such a deed can be treated as a deed of gift.

The learned District Judge has relied upon a judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in Sant Singh v. Sadda (3) where the adoption was found to have taken place, but according to the custom governing the parties it was held to be invalid. The property affected by the adoption was, however, non-ancestral, and the learned Judges consequently held that as the adoptor was entitled to transfer his non-ancestral property to the adopted son without the consent of his collaterals, the adoption, though invalid by custom, should be viewed as a gift to the adopted son to take effect after his death. It is unnecessary to decide whether the rule laid down in that judgment can be regarded as a correct exposition of the law on the subject because the present case is distinguishable from that case. As pointed out above, even the factum of adoption has not been proved in the case before us, and there is, therefore, nothing in the deed which could by any stretch of reasoning be treated as a gift or a testamentary disposition in favour of Surat Singh.

The result is that we accept the appeal and, reversing the decree of the District Judge, restore that of the Court of first instance. The plaintiffs shall recover from Surat Singh the costs incurred by them in this Court as well as in the Dstrict Court.

Musammat MAHESHA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

RAMESHAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Gift—Transfer by limited owner—Estate conveyed—Presumption—Burden of proof.

Where a transferor has merely a limited interest in the property transferred and purports to dispose of the property itself, the presumption is that he intends to dispose of only his limited interest, and if it is sought to carry the disposition further, it must be shown that he intended to dispose of more than that interest. But for this purpose a positive declaration is not necessary. Regard may be had to the context of the deed of transfer, and to the inaptitude of the words of transfer if applied to the transferor's actual interest. [p. 296, col. 2.]

Where a deed of gift executed by a Hindu widow began by stating the fact of an oral Will made by her husband, which gave her nothing more than a life-interest, but further stated that the donees would have all the proprietary powers of transfer in respect of the gifted property and would, generation after generation, remain in possession and occupation of the same, because the Will gave them a remainder:

Held, that the deed of gift meant that the absolute title arose from the addition of the life-interest gifted under the deed to the remainder devised by the Will, and was not of itself intended to transfer an absolute interest in the property gifted. [p. 296, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 20th January 1922.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, H. K. Ghosh and Ishri Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hyder Hussain and Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This first civil appeal arises out of a suit brought by the three surviving daughters of one Jit Bahadur against Rameshar, husband of a fourth deceased sister (Musammat Parbati,) and against their mother Musammat Hubrani, for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by the latter on 16th September 1912, so far as it transfers to the former an absolute estate in a share of the zemindari left by Jit Bahadur, will have no effect against the plaintiffs after their mother's death.

The Officiating Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on three findings as follows:—

1. The impugned deed of gift was executed in pursuance and execution of a family arrangement between the parties for the avoidance of future disputes;

2. the plaintiffs having accepted a transfer of Musammat Hurani's life-interest in certain property under the deed of gift, could not (by reason of operation of the principle of election) call in question the conveyance by the same deed of the absolute interest in other property to Rameshar;

3. the plaintiffs by their conduct generally, and in particular by their omission to impugn the deed of gift, had led the defendant to believe that they would not impugn it, and acting on this belief the defendant No. 1 had parted with his interest in part of the property gifted to him by the said deed of gift.

All these findings are called in question in this appeal.

It is to be noted that the defendant in the lower Court also relied on an alleged oral Will by Jit Bahadur (referred to in the deed of gift) devising the fractional share in question (and indeed a larger fractional share) to the defendant No. 1 as a remainder after the death of his widow and the fourth daughter, wife of defendant No. 1. This oral Will was held not to be proved by the lower Court and the respondent-defendant No. 1 has not relied on it in contesting this appeal.

As to the first finding, the Subordinate Judge has not relied on, nor even mentioned any evidence in support of, the family arrangement set up, except such evidence as is afforded by the recital in the deed of gift now impugned, by the fact that the deed of gift was executed, and lastly by the subsequent conduct of the parties in respect of the deed of gift. Neither the execution of the deed of gift nor the recital therein can be construed as evidence of a previous family arrangement. On the contrary, the recital is destructive of any plea of such a previous family arrangement. The deed of gift plainly states that it was executed by the widow of Jit Bahadur to prevent future disputes which might have the effect of jeopardising the disposal of her husband's property according to his Will and ardent wishes. If there had been any family arrangement the widow must have referred to it in the deed of gift. As to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the deed of gift, it showed acceptance of the deed of gift but it is not shown how in any other way it could operate as evidence of the fact of a family arrangement previous to the deed of gift. Accordingly, the first finding as to the existence of a family arrangement preceding the deed of gift is incorrect.

As to the second finding, assuming that section 35 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to the case in other respects, it is to be seen whether Musammat Hubrani professed to transfer an absolute interest (that is to say, an interest continuing after her death) to the defendant No. 1. If she did not do so, no question of election by the plaintiffs can arise. In construing the deed of gift I would draw attention to the following passage in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 13, page 121, as succinctly setting forth the rules of construction applicable to this case, They are indeed merely a particular application of the general rules of evidence contained in sections 91, 92, and 114 of the Indian Evidence Act.

"Where a testator has limited interest in property and purports to dispose of the property itself, the presumption is that he intends to dispose only of his limited interest, and if it is sought to carry the disposition further, it must be shown that he intended to dispose of more than that interest. But for this purpose positive declaration is not necessary. Regard may be had to the context of the Will, and to the inaptitude of the testamentary limitation if applied to the testator's actual interest."

I have had a translation of the Will made. A careful study of it convinces me that it is impossible to say that the lady intended to dispose of more than her life-interest. She begins by stating the fact of an oral Will which gave her nothing more than a life interest. The fact that she says that the donees have and shall have all the proprietary powers of transfer in respect of the gifted property and shall, generation after generation, remain in possession and occupation of the same must in view of the previous recital in the deed of an oral Will giving them a reminder, mean that the absolute title arises from the addition of the life interest gifted under deed of gift to the remainder devised by the Will. The only words favouring an intention to dispose of more than her life-interest is the expression of her desire to prevent disputes arising after her death which might prevent the oral Will and wishes of her husband being carried out. It has been suggested that disputes could not entirely be prevented unless the widow intended to give an absolute estate by means of the deed of gift. It is, however, impossible to hold that she can have intended to give an absolute estate after reciting that she had only a life-interest herself. Putting the donees into immediate possession might well be a step in the direction of preventing future disputes. There is nothing in the Will to rebut the strong presumption that the widow only intended to give what she could give. The widow herself says that she made the Will under compulsion but even if this statement could be construed into an admission that the Will evidences an intention to transfer an absolute interest, her statement being parol evidence is not admissible to construe the deed of gift. I hold, therefore, that the widow did not dispose of more than her life interest by the deed of gift and the principle of election does not arise. The transfer which the plaintiffs' conduct may be said to have confirmed was only a transfer of the widow's life interest.

It has been urged by the respondent that, if this is so, the plaintiffs have no cause of action in respect of a deed of gift which does not hurt them. But under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act the plaintiffs are entitled to sue for declaration.

Illustration (e) of section 42 covers the case and it is only necessary for the plaintiffs to show that the defendant No. 1 is interested to deny their title to possess the property if they survive the widow.

There remains the question whether the plaintiffs are estopped. There are two positions only which can be taken up. One is, that all the parties believed up to the date of suit that Jit Bahadur had lawfully devised by Will the reversion to the property in the manner mentioned in the deed of gift in suit. If this is the position then there can be no question of estoppel as the plaintiffs could not have induced the defendant No. 1 to believe what he already believed and what they, the plaintiffs, believed. Another possible position is, that both parties knew that there was no effective Will by Jit Bahadur but chose to act on the supposition that there was one. In this case also there can be no estoppel. In any case the plea of estoppel must fail, because, when the defendant No. 1 parted with his interest in Basudha property to Rajah Shambhu Dayal to raise money to meet a decree for foreclosure on some of the property gifted by the deed in suit, it cannot be said that he parted with it because he was deceived into beliving that he had an absolute interes in the property in suit. He should have been bound to satisfy the foreclosure decree even if he held only a life-interest in the property in suit.

For the above reasons this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

An entry in a wajib-ul-arz about the existence of a custom of pre-emption in a village is not rebutted by the mere fact that forty years or so before the time of the entry, the village was owned by a single person, for it is quite possible that the custom might have grown up during that interval.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 21st December 1922.

Mr. A. P. Pandeya, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge has decreed it.

The plaintiffs, in order to prove the custom alleged, relied on an entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1882 which prima facie raised a presumption of the existence of the custom. To rebut this evidence the defendants proved the fact that in the year

SHANKAR MAHABLESHWAR v. MANJUNATH SUBBA.

1840 there was a single proprietor in this mahal, and, further, that no suit for pre-emption had ever been brought between the years 1840 and 1882. The learned District Judge has considered all the circumstances in the case and has weighed the evidence. In our opinion the circumstance of there being a single proprietor in 1840 does not necessarily rebut the presumption of custom raised by the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1882; as the learned Judge has pointed out, it was admitted in the written statement that there had been numerous transfers and, therefore, it was possible that a custom might have grown up during that interval. In second appeal we find it impossible to hold that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs had not been sufficiently rebutted.

The learned Vakil for the appellants relied on the case of Kulsumunnisa v. Khaslat Husain (1). We may point out that in that case stress was laid on the circumstance that the learned Judge of the Court below was under a misapprehension on a question of law, namely, that the fact that the property once was in the hands of a single proprietor did not put an end to the custom. It was in view of that erroneous assumption that the Bench said that, in the peculiar circumstances of that case, a question of law did arise and they were justified in going behind the findings of facts.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11.

Will, construction of—Bequest by Hindu leaving two sons—Half share to be given by first brother to second in certain event—Deed of transfer, whether necessary—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 118, application of.

A Hindu Will provided that one of the two sons of the testator should give one-half of the bequeathed property to the other if the latter reformed himself and lived amicably with his brother. The second brother lived respectably and in amity with the first brother for two or three years after the death of the testator and transferred his one-half share in the property. The transferee brought a suit for possession against him, also joining the first brother as a party. It was urged in defence that the transferee had got nothing as the property could not go to the second brother without a deed of transfer from the first:

Held, that a Hindu Will of the above character should not be construed very strictly; that section 118 of the Succession Act was applicable, and that on the happening of the uncertain event of the reformation of the second brother, half of the estate, which under the Will got vested in the first brother, became vested in the second and his transferee was entitled to the same. [p. 299, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 128 of 1920.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT.—We think the decree of the Trial Court must be restored. The learned Judge was of opinion that the 2nd defendant did not prove that, according to the terms of the Will of his father, defendant No. 3 was not entitled to any share in the plaint property. The Will, no doubt, standing by itself, is one which it would be very difficult to construe according to English ideas, but it was clearly intended that if Venkatesh behaved himself well, he should get half the share in his father's property. But the evidence shows that whatever Venkatesh's conduct may have been at the time the Will was written, he was living in amity with his brother, and presumably with his father at the time the father died. The Judge says: "It appears from the evidence of Exhibit 39 a witness for defendant No. 2 that after the death of the testator which took place immediately after the date of the Will the two brothers lived in amity for 2 or 3 years. There is no evidence to say that during this period defendant No. 3 was not leading a respectable life."

NAND KISHORE v. KISHORI LAL.

The condition in the Will was that Venkatesh should turn to good ways and reside with Manjunath respectably, then only Manjunath should give the other half to Venkatesh. It was open to Manjunath to prove that the uncertain event, on the happening of which half the share was to go to Venkatesh, had not happened. But we find from Exhibit 38, which was his conveyance to the 1st defendant, that he admitted that, in accordance with the father's Will, himself and Venkatesh were together enjoying the below described property as rightful owners. Therefore, when he sold his half share to the 1st dedefendants he could not possibly have imagined that he was keeping the other half for himself. In any circumstances, the plaintiffs who derived title from Venkatesh are entitled to succeed.

The learned District Judge seemed to consider that half the share in the property could not possibly go to Venkatesh without a deed of transfer, but I should not be disposed to take such a strict view of the construction of a Hindu Will of this character. I think, that the provisions of section 118 of the Succession Act would apply, so that on the happening of the uncertain event half the estate which, under the testator's Will, vested in Manjunath would become vested in Venkatesh. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

Mr. Radha Krishna Srivistava, for Respondent No. 4.

JUDGMENT.—There was a dispute between Nand Kishore and the reversionary heirs of Musammat Sundar in regard to certain property left by Musammat Sundar which was referred to arbitration. The agreement of reference was signed by Nand Kishore and one of the reversionary heirs and provided for the settlement of the dispute by four arbitrators and a sarpunch acting together. There was no provision that, in the case of a difference of opinion between them, the opinion of the majority was to prevail. All the five arbitrators entered into the reference but the award made was signed by only four of them. The Courts below found that the fifth man did not sign, because he did not concur in the award.

As stated by Russell, on a reference to several arbitrators together, when there is no clause providing for an award made by less than all being valid each of them must act personally in performance of the duties of his office, as if he were the sole arbitrator; for, as the office is joint, if one refuse or omit to act, the others can make no valid award. (Russel on Arbitration, 9th Edition, page 168). In United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Assurance Association v. Houston Co. (1) it was held that where a matter in dispute was referred to the decision of three arbitrators it was necessary that all the three must concur in the making of the award and that the award made by two of them only was bad. In Gurupathappa v. Narasingappa (2) and Muhammad Abid v. Muhammad Asghar (3) it was similarly held that in the absence of a provision that a decision by a majority of the arbitrators should be binding or that an umpire could be appointed in case of a difference of opinion between the arbitrators, an award made by some of the arbitrators could not be upheld. In Lala v. Abdus Samed (4), Gur Bakhsh Singh v. Chutta Singh (5) and Lachman Prasad v. Pran Nath (6) a similar view was taken.

The agreement in the present instance provided that whatever decision was given by the arbitrators, punchas and sarpunch included, about the property in dispute shall be acceptable to and be binding on the parties. An agreement must be taken for what it is worth, and if it does not mention that an award by a majority would be valid, the award should be made by all the arbitrators unanimously. It is not enough that all the arbitrators join in the deliberations for the concurrence of all the arbitrators in the award is in such a case essential. It is unnecessary to consider the effect of the award on the persons who did not join in the reference.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), Sch. II, cl. (k)—Risk-Note X—Article not "excepted"—Railway Company, liability of—Momi motis, whether "excepted."

If an article consigned to the Railway Company is not in fact one of the excepted articles mentioned in Sch. II to the Railways Act, the mere fact of giving the Risk Note X in respect of it does not exonerate the Railway Company from liability in case of its loss.

Momi motis, or wax pearls, are only wax with thin coverings of glass over them and as such cannot be called "articles made of glass" and cannot, therefore, be said to be articles falling under clause (k) of the Second Schedule to the Railways Act.

Saminadha Mudali v. South Indian Railway Company, 6 M. 420; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 572, relied upon.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 3rd August 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by a firm styled the firm of Kidar Nath-Raj Narain from a decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Agra, dismissing their claim for damages against the East Indian Railway Company.

The case for the plaintiff firm was that they bought some articles at Calcutta through their agent, who consigned three boxes to them at Agra. One of the boxes was lost in transit, and hence the claim for the price of the goods contained in that box. The defence of the Railway Company was that as the consignor had given a Risk Note they were not liable for the loss. It was further pleaded that the goods consigned to Agra were glass beads which came under the excepted articles, mentioned in the Second Schedule of the Railway Act under clause (d). The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the lost goods fell under clause (k); and the consignor having chosen to give the Risk Note X, the Railway Company was not liable. The claim was accordingly dismissed. In revision the contention for the plaintiff firm is that the lost goods do not fall under clause (k) of the Second Schedule of the Railway Act. If they do not fall under the said clause, the giving of the Risk Note X by the consignor does not exonerate the Railway Company from liability. The clause (k) mentions the articles which are described as "excepted articles". They are pearls, jewellery and all articles made of glass, china or marble.

The lost goods, though described in the Risk Note given by th consignor as glass beads, are really what are called in the vernacular as momi motis, that is, wax pearls.

It is contended on behalf of the Railway Company that the wax pearls would not fall under clause (d) of the Second Schedule but they would come under clause (k) because the covering of the pearl is of thin glass. Some of the wax pearls were produced in the Court below and are on the record. On examining them it appears that the major portion of the constitution of the wax pearls is wax and there is only a thin covering of glass over the wax. I do not think that these wax pearls can properly be described as articles made of glass. In a similar case where the question was whether an article was of pure silk or manufactured silk, the Madras High Court held that where a manufactured article contained only 1-8th of the silk and 7-8th of cotton the article could not be said to be made of manufactured silk (vide Saminadha Mudali v. South Indian Railway Company (1). But it is, however, contended on behalf of the Railway Company, that as the consignor has given the Risk Note X, the Company is not liable. A perusal of the Risk Note X shows that it relates to the excepted articles mentioned in Sch. II of the Railways Act. If the article in respect of which the Risk Note X was given was not one of the excepted articles, the mere giving of the Risk Note X would not take away the liability of the Railway Company. I, therefore, hold that the Railway Company is liable for the price of the lost goods. The application is allowed. The decree of the Court below is set aside, and the claim of the plaintiff firm is decreed for Rs. 250. Costs in proportion to success and failure are allowed to parties.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff who is the central Nazir of the Court of the District Judge of Gonda has been appointed Receiver of the property of an insolvent, Paspat Prasad. The defendant, Paspat Prasad, is a member of a joint Hindu family and has a share in joint family property. With the permission of the District Judge the Receiver instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda for partition of the share of the insolvent. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the undivided share of a co-parcener in joint Hindu family property was not property as defined in section 2 (d) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920. The learned Judge relied on a decision of this Court reported as Anant Singh v. Kalka Singh (1). In that case the property was not alienable but the learned Judge who decided the case went further and held that a Receiver cannot be appointed in respect of an insolvent's undivided share in the property of the joint Hindu family of which he is a member. The remarks on the point in issue in the present appeal were obiter because the reported case could have been decided on the other point of inalienability of the property. Referring to the definition given in section 2 we find that the word used in defining the term property is "includes" and not "means" and, therefore, the definition is not exhaustive. The definition was inserted to make it clear that certain kinds of property which do not actually belong to the insolvent are to be treated as his property for the purposes of the Insolvency Act, e.g., property over which he may have a power of appointment exercisable for his own benefit. As far back as 1877 it was held by the Privy Council that the right, title and interest of one co-sharer in joint ancestral estate may be attached and sold in execution to satisfy a decree obtained against him personally under the Mitakshara Law; Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (2). It is clear, therefore, that an undivided member has an interest in ancestral property and that would amount to "property" as defined in the Insolvency Act. Under section 28 (5) of the Act the only property which is exempted from the scope of adjudication is property of the insolvent which is exempted by any enactment from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. We have seen that a share in joint family property is not saved from such attachment and sale and is, therefore, not outside the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court. We are of opinion, that Paspat Prasad's share in joint family property did vest in the Receiver who could, therefore, sue for its partition.

In the result, we set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit to it under O. XLI, r. 23 Civil Procedure Code, for trial on the merits. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the result.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CIVIL EXTRAORDINARY APPLICATION No. 281 OF 1922.

January 19, 1923.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.

DEV CHAND CHATRAJI—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

JAMSEDJI SHAHPURJI—DEFENDANT No. 1—OPPONENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20, 21—Joint debt—Part payment recorded by one defendant and signed by other—Acknowledgment.

Where two persons are liable on a debt embodied in a khata and they make payments towards satisfaction of the debt, it is not necessary that both should make entries in the creditor's books. [p. 303, col. 2.]

If one of two joint contractors has done anything which starts a new period of limitation, then that new period starts only as against him, not as against his joint contractor. [p. 303, col. 2.]

In a suit for recovery of money due on an entry made in the plaintiff's book by both the defendants it appeared that part payments had been made, which appeared in the handwriting of one of the defendants with the signature of the other added:

Held, that the payment clearly amounted to an acknowledgment that the liability was continuing and both the defendants were jointly liable [p. 303, col. 2.]

Application praying for the reversal of the decree passed by the First Class Sub-Judge, Surat, in Small Cause Suit No. 1331 of 1921.

Mr. M. B. Dave, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—One Sorabji Rustomji and Jamsedji Shahpurji signed an entry in the plaintiff's book to the effect that they had borrowed Rs. 599 which they promised to pay. Payments were made on account which appeared in the handwriting of Sorabji, with the signature of Jamsedji Shahpurji added. The plaintiff relied upon these entries as saving limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act. The learned Judge held that the claim against Jamsedji, the 1st defendant in the suit, was time barred; and that, although he was present at the time when the payments were made, still as he had not himself written the fact that he made the payment the payment could be of no use against him as part payment in his own hand. If that view were correct then it would be, in my opinion, a very startling interpretation of the law. Where two persons are liable on a debt embodied in a khata and they make payments towards satisfaction of the debt, then it would be absurd to suppose that the law required that it would be necessary that both persons should make entries in the creditor's book. Section 20 of the Limitation Act prescribes that when part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, a new period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made; provided that, in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same.

By section 21 (2) nothing in sections 19 and 20 renders one of several joint contractors chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed, or of a payment made by, or by the agent of, any other or others of them. The effect of that is that if one of two joint contractors has done anything which starts a new period of limitation then that new period starts only as against him, not as against his joint contractor.

In this case, however, Jamsedji authorised the 2nd defendant to make payments towards the reduction of the joint debt, and signified that not only by being present when the payment was made but by signing underneath. In my opinion, that clearly amounted to an acknowledgment that the liability was continuing.

Section 19 provides for an acknowledgment in writing. Section 20 provides other means by which a debt can be kept alive. But those acts which are mentioned therein, which, if done by a debtor will start a fresh period of limitation, are acts which in effect constitute an acknowledgment of the liability.

I think, therefore, that the Rule must be made absolute and there must be a decree against the 1st defendant also with costs throughout.

Crump, J.—I agree. Upon the facts of this case I have no hesitation in holding that when defendant No. 2 paid the sum of Rs. 10 on Ashad Sud the 6th, he made that payment as the agent of defendant No. 1. That defendant No. 1 authorised him in that behalf is clear from the circumstances that he himself was present at the time and that he affixed his signature below that of Sorabji. It follows, therefore, that as regards defendant No. 1, there was a payment made by an agent duly authorised by him, and further that the fact of that payment appears in the handwriting of the person making it, that is to say the agent of defendant No. 1. Therefore, a fresh period of limitation starts as against defendant No. 1 as from that date. I find nothing in section 21, which has been invoked in argument, to militate against that view. I agree, therefore, with the order proposed.

K. S. D. Rule made absolute.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 53 OF 1922.

December 22, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, J. C.

ABDUL HAKIM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

SAJJAD HUSSAIN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Redemption—Clog on equity of redemption—Long term—Onerous conditions.

A mortgagee cannot be allowed to fetter redemption by terms which are unreasonable or oppressive. An agreement made at the time of the mortgage between a mortgagor and the mortgagee cannot operate to make that mortgage irredeemable. Incidental to every mortgage is the right of the mortgagor to redeem it, which is called his equity of redemption. The right to redeem is so inseparable an incident of a mortgage that it cannot be taken away by an express agreement of the parties that the mortgage shall not be redeemable or that the right shall not be exercised except in a particular manner or under certain onerous conditions. If the conditions are one-sided and designed to thwart or defeat redemption, equity will interpose in favour of the mortgagor and relieve him of the oppressive conditions which unreasonably hinder redemption without interfering with what might really be due to the mortgagee on account of the principal and interest secured by the mortgage. [p. 306, col. 1.]

A long term may not by itself operate as a clog on the equity of redemption but where such a long term is accompanied, by other conditions, rendering redemption extremely difficult and onerous without any corresponding benefit to the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot be allowed to take advantage of those conditions to defeat the right of redemption. [p. 307, col. 1.]

Each case must, however, be decided on its own facts and circumstances. There is nothing more dangerous and misleading than to apply the inferences to be drawn from one set of facts to the facts and circumstances proved elsewhere. [p. 307, col. 1.]

A mortgage was made for a period of 101 years and it was provided that the mortgagee would remain in possession for that period and enjoy the usufruct in satisfaction of interest agreed upon between the parties and that on the expiry of the said period the mortgagor would be entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property on payment of three times the principal money. There was a further provision that the mortgagor would not be entitled to a rendition of accounts or the re-payment of the surplus profits, if any, but that the mortgagee would be entitled to claim any deficit from the mortgagor. The net profits of the mortgaged property were estimated and found to be sufficient to pay the interest settled to be payable:

Held, that these covenants taken together operated as a clog on the equity of redemption and that the mortgagor was entitled to claim redemption before the period fixed in the mortgage. [p. 306, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 8th December 1921, upholding a decree of the Munsif, Ramsanehighat, dated the 11th August 1920.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Hyder Hussain, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemtion, and the question for considertion is whether the covenants contained in the deed of mortgage impose a clog on the equity of redemption and, so far as they impose such a clog, are legally enforceable. The mortgage was effected by Wazir Ali and certain other persons in favour of Madho Dayal in lieu of Rs. 8,304 on the 17th January 1882. The property mortgaged was an 18-rupees 10-annas share out of 72-rupees in the village Mitai. The mortgage was made for a period of 101 years, and it was provided that the mortgagee shall remain in possession for that period and enjoy the usufruct in staisfaction of interest at Rs. 8-8-0 per cent. per annum and that on the expiry of the said period the mortgagors would be entitled to obtain possession of the mortgaged property on payment of three times the principal money. There was a provision that the mortgagors shall not be entitled to a rendition of accounts or the re-payment of the surplus profits, if any, but the mortgagee would be entitled to claim any deficit, accruing on the mortgage, from the mortgagors. The net profits of the mortgaged property were then estimated at Rs. 707-8-0 and that amount was sufficient to pay the interest settled to be payable.

The plaintiffs are the representatives-in-interest of the mortgagors and seek to redeem a portion of the mortgaged property on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage-money. Their allegation is that the covenant postponing redemption till the expiry of the period of 101 years and requiring the plaintiffs to pay three times the principal money secured by the mortgage at the time of redemption, along with certain other conditions, hindering the plaintiffs from claiming accounts or surplus profits, were entered to clog and fetter the equity of redemption and were not legally enforceable. They also state that the net profits of the mortgaged property have been more than sufficient to satisfy the principal and interest due on the mortgage and that a surplus of Rs. 13,665-5-0 was due to them.

The suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki and was valued at Rs. 1,209-5-4, being a proportionate part of the mortgage-money payable by the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim a rendition of accounts or surplus mesne profits. The suit was subsequently transferred by an order of the District Judge to the Court of the Munsif of Ramsanehighat and by an application made on the 15th July 1920 the plaintiffs reduced the valuation of the suit from Rs. 1,209-5-4 to Rs. 1,018-10-0 and contended themselves with pressing their claim for redemption on payment of any sum that might be found due to the defendant, who represented the interest of the mortgagee in the mortgaged property. In fact, the claim for surplus profits, originally laid in the plaint, was given up by the plaintiffs in the Court of the first instance and never re-asserted either in the Court below or in this Court.

The defendant pleaded that the intention of the original mortgagors and the mortgagee, Madho Dayal, was that the latter should purchase such portion of the village at the rate of 8½ per cent. per annum profits, then current for sales, as might be sufficient to pay the prior debts due by the former, that for fear of pre-emption the mortgagee agreed to take a mortgage for 101 years at the rate provided for the sale, and that the covenants contained in the deed of mortgage were not secured by undue influence and were valid and enforceable.

The learned Munsif who tried the suit came to the conclusion that the mortgage was taken in preference to a sale to avoid pre-emption and that no undue influence was exercised in obtaining the terms specified in the deed of mortgage. He accordingly held that the suit was premature and dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court upheld that decree.

The terms of the mortgage were clearly intended to impose obstacles in the way of redemption. It is not asserted that the mortgage was really intended to operate as a sale. On the other hand, a mortgage is said to have been preferred in order to obviate a claim for pre-emption, but certain terms and conditions were devised which were to render redemption difficult, if not practically impossible. In the first place, the mortgage provided for the payment of interest on the mortgage-money at the rate specified therein, but the mortgagors were deprived of the right to claim accounts or surplus mesne profits if the profits realised from the mortgaged property exceeded at any time the interest payable on the mortgage-money. On the other hand, the mortgagee was empowered to claim any deficit that might accrue and add the same to the mortgage-money at the time of redemption. In the second place, the mortgagee was to keep possession of the mortgaged property on terms, so advantageous to himself and disadvantageous to the mortgagors, for a period of 101 years. In the third place, he was to get in addition to his interest any excess profits, which he might be able to realize during the subsistence of the mortgage and three times the amount of the principal money, if redemption was claimed after the expiry of the above period. It is stated on behalf of the mortgagee that the market-value of the mortgaged property would still leave a considerable margin for the mortgagors to have redeemed the mortgage after the expiry of the above period in spite of the disadvantageous terms which were imposed by the mortgage, but at this distance of time it is not possible to say what the price would be in 1983.

A mortgagee cannot be allowed to fetter redemption by terms which are unreasonable or oprcssive. An agreement made at the time of the mortgage between a mortgagor and the mortgagee cannot operate to make that mortgage irredeemable. Incidental to every mortgage is the right of the mortgagor to redeem it, which is called his equity of redemption. The right to redeem is so inseparable an incident of a mortgage that it cannot be taken away by an express agreement of the parties that the mortgage shall not be redeemable or that the right shall not be exercised except in a particular manner or under certain onerous conditions. If the conditions are one-sided and designed to thwart or defeat redemption, equity will interpose in favour of the mortgagor and relieve him of the oppressive conditions which unreasonably hinder redemption without interfering with what might really be due to the mortgagee on account of the principal and interest secured by the mortgage. There could have been no object in fixing such a long term for redemption and requiring the mortgagors to pay three times the principal sum secured by the mortgage in addition to any deficiency in the interest, which was to be paid out of the profits, unless the intention was to hinder redemption by rendering the same extremely onerous to the mortgagors. A long term may not by itself operate as a clog on the equity of redemption, but where such a long term is accompanied by other conditions, such as exist in this case, rendering redemption extremely difficult and onerous without any corresponding benefit to the mortgagors, the mortgagee cannot be allowed to take advantage of those conditions to defeat the right of redemption. As observed in Durga Singh v. Muhammad Raza Husain Khan (1) a mortgagor cannot compel the mortgagee to accept payment of the mortgage-money before the date fixed for redemption where there is a covenant in the mortgage-deed that redemption shall not take place before that date, but where the effect of a covenant is to postpone redemption for an unduly long period without any corresponding advantage to the mortgagor or there are circumstances indicating that the covenant postponing redemption is unreasonable and oppressive and intended to fetter the right to redeem, a Court may allow redemption irrespective of that term as it may deem fit. In Mathura Prasad v. Harakh Narain (2) where a mortgage-deed provided that redemption shall take place after 90 years on payment of double the amount of the principal sum secured, it was held that the covenants taken together practically clogged the equity of redemption and could not be enforced except in so far as to allow the mortgagee reasonable interest to make up for the deficiency in the profits. In Ram Das v. Swami Dayal (3) a covenant precluding the mortgagor from redeeming the mortgage for a period of 70 years, where the profits from the mortgaged property were disproportionately large, was similarly held to be oppressive and unreasonable and to operate as a clog on the equity of redemption. In Sohan Lal v. Kunwar (4) and Sarabdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (5) a covenant postponing redemption for a long term with a condition that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem out of the borrowed money was similarly held to be unenforceable. The decisions in Saheb Bakhsh Singh v. Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan (6) and Zulfiqar Ali v. Suraj Prasad (7) do not help the defendants, because in the former case the mortgage was made for a period of thirty years and the interest secured exceeded the profits recoverable from the mortgaged property and in the latter case a long term was agreed upon in consideration of the mortgagee releasing a portion of the mortgaged property held by him under a prior mortgage and agreeing to make a further advance and to accept the profits of the remaining property towards the interest payable to him on the mortgage and the further advance he had undertaken to give.

A reference has also been made to the decision in Genu Tukaram Tapkir v. Narayan Raghu Tamhane (8) but in that case the mortgagee was allowed after the expiry of the stipulated term for payment to develop the mortgaged land by planting fruit-bearing trees thereon, in consideration of which he was to be allowed to remain in possession of the land so long as those trees continued to bear fruit, and that covenant was held to be fair and not inequitable. If the terms are inequitable and oppressive, that consideration does not arise and equity can step in to grant relief. The value of that decision is, moreover, somewhat discounted by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Muhammad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal (9) as to the effect to be given to covenants restraining redemption after the mortgage-money has become payable. Each case has to be decided on its own facts and circumstances. There is nothing more dangerous and misleading than to apply the inferences to be drawn from one set of facts to the facts and circumstances proved elsewhere.

The mortgagee did not in the present instance like to take a sale, because he was afraid of a claim for pre-emption. He preferred to take a morgage but contrived to reduce the risk of losing the property by imposing oppressive and unreasonable fetters on the equity of redemption to render redemption practically impossible or difficult.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent relies on section 16A of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) and section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) in support of his contention that, so long as no undue influence is established, a contract is binding and a mortgage cannot be redeemed before the expiry of its term. But it is an essential ingredient of every mortgage, if it is a mortgage, that it should be redeemable, until the right of redemption is extinguished or lost in the manner provided by law, and any fetters intended to render redemption practically difficult or impossible cannot be recognised, unless there are circumstances indicating that they were intended to compensate for the advantages allowed to the mortgagor and were not unreasonable or oppressive.

The claim for surplus mesne profits has already been given up by the plaintiffs. The question of the amount of the mortgage-money, if any, payable by the plaintiffs, still requires to be determined.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court of the first instance with direction to re-instate it under its original number and to dispose of it in the manner required by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

First appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 16th of September 1922.

Mr. Damodar Dass, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit belonged originally to one Musammat Munir-un-nissa. She died apparently in the early nineties, leaving a son Habib Hasan and a daughter Musammat Roshni. The name of Habib Hasan alone was entered in the revenue papers on the death of Musammat Munir-un-nissa and Habib Hasan has remained in physical possession of the property ever since then. In 1896 he mortgaged this property to the father of Mulraj. That mortgage was paid off in due course. Habib Hasan made another mortgage in 1908 and a third mortgage in favour of Mulraj in 1911. Subsequently, Mulraj brought a suit on this mortgage and having got a decree for sale put the property up for sale and bought it himself. Thereupon, the suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Musammat Roshni for a declaration that she was entitled as owner to one-third of the property in suit and asked for a declaration that the mortgage and the sale so far as her one-third share is concerned were inoperative. She pleaded that, as a matter of fact, she had been all along in possession through her brother but that if it be held that she was not in possession she asked for possession of her share. Various defences were raised by Mulraj but it is only necessary to consider the defence raised by him under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Munsif on the evidence of the parties came to the conclusion that Habib Hasan had been acting as ostensible owner of this property and that Mulraj was entitled to the benefit of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. He accordingly on this short point dismissed the suit. Musammat Roshni having died her heir appealed to the Court below and the learned District Judge of Saharanpur came to the conclusion that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply. He held that, "the parties to the mortgage were residents of the same place (the town of Deoband) and the property in suit was also situated there. The defendant Mulraj admits that he took the mortgage without making any enquiry simply because Habib Hasan's name was recorded in the khewat and he had on a previous occasion mortgaged it to his father. He did not know how Habib Hasan had got that property and made no enquiry about it." Under these circumstances, the Court held that section 41 had no application. He, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and remanded the case for decision of the other points raised in the case. Mulraj appeals and urges that the question whether section 41 does or does not apply to the facts as found is a question of law and that, on the facts as found, the learned Judge was wrong in holding that section 41 did not apply. Mr. Haider very strenuously urges that a finding that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply is a finding of fact which cannot be interfered with in second appeal and he lays stress on the case of Jamna Das v. Uma Shanker (1). In that case the lower Appellate Court held that section 41 did not apply. On second appeal to this Court a Single Judge of the Court held that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act did apply. On the case being taken up in Letters Patent Appeal a Bench of this Court set aside that decision holding that, "whether Lal Muhammad was the ostensible owner of the property with the consent, express or implied, of the heirs of Muhammad Bakhsh, and the further question whether the plaintiff in that case bona fide took the transfer after taking reasonable care to ascertain the title of Lal Muhammad, were questions of fact to be decided by the lower Appellate Court" and held that "this Court is bound by the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court in second appeal and cannot go behind them whether it approves of that finding or not." If the learned Judges meant to hold that the question whether section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to a given set of facts is a question of fact we cannot agree with them, but we do not think really that that is what they meant. We think that case really means this that, on the facts as found by the lower Appellate Court, which facts could not be questioned in second appeal, it was not open to this Court to say that section 41 applies. There are a number of cases to the contrary, for instance, the case relied upon by the Trial Court viz., Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Ibrahim (2). Now, the facts in this case are not in dispute. Since the early nineties, Habib Hasan's name alone had been recorded as the owner of this property. He has been dealing with it as his own ever since. As long ago as 1896 Habib Hasan alone mortgaged this property to the father of the present mortgagee. That mortgage has been paid off. No one ever took any exception to that mortgage. Surely Mulraj was entitled to believe, under the circumstances, that that mortgage had been properly made by Habib Hasan. Twenty-one years afterwards Habib Hasan mortgages the same property to him. He satisfies himself that Habib Hasan's name is still in the khewat as the recognised owner of the property so far as Government is concerned. We fail to see what further enquiry Mulraj should have made. What was there to put him on to enquiry or to doubt the genuineness of the position Habib Hasan had ostensibly maintained for over 25 years. Under the circumstances, on the facts as found by the Courts below, we think as an inference of law that section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applied and that on that ground the suit was rightly dismissed.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Trial Court with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 2, 4—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Minor—Suit brought without next friend—Procedure—Guardian ad litem—Certificated guardian not appointed—Failure to record reasons—Irregularity—Appointment of guardian ad litem procured by fraud, effect of—Guardian, whether can bind minor by onerous covenants—Mortgage by guardian held valid in part—Declaration, suit for, whether lies—Redemption—Construction of document.

O. XXXII, r. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable only where, on the face of a plaint, the plaintiff appears to be a minor. [p. 312, col. 2.]

Beni Ram v. Ram Lal, 13 C. 189; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 625, followed.

If on an issue raised and tried in a case the Court finds that the plaintiff is a minor, it should not dismiss the suit at once but should allow a reasonable time for a next friend to come on the record and go on with the suit and it is only if no one comes forward that it should reject the plaint. [p. 313, col. 2.]

Sankaran Nambi v. Devaki Antherjenam, 73 Ind. Cas. 491; (1922) M. W. N. 428; 16 L. W. 26; (1922) A. I. R. (M) 259; 43 M. L. J. 572, referred to.

But if before the Court decides the point, the plaintiff becomes a major, he may elect to drop the suit as not properly instituted or affirm the previous proceedings and continue the suit. [p. 313, col. 1.]

Where in a suit the defendant raised the objection that on the date of suit, the plaintiff was a minor and the suit was brought without a next friend was unsustainable but before the Court decided the point, the plaintiff admittedly became a major:

Held, that the objection that the suit was originally by a minor could no longer be urged and the suit was not liable to be dismissed. [p. 313, col. 1.]

The mere failure by a Court to record reasons under O. XXXII, r. 4 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code for appointing a guardian of a minor defendant in supersession of the legal guardian is only an irregularity and will not by itself vitiate the decree if the minor is in fact properly represented by a guardian appointed by Court. [p. 313, col. 2.]

Sridhar Rao v. Ram Lal, 1 Ind. Cas. 555; 31 A. 7; A. W. N. (1908) 251; 5 A. L. J. 633, relied on.

PUPPOOTH v. VAYISRAVANATH MANAKKAL RAMAN SOMAYAJIPAD.

Where the appointment of a Court Officer as guardian for a minor defendant was procured by means of an affidavit which falsely stated that there was no other next of kin for the minor except his father who was unwilling to act and whose interests in the suit were adverse to those of the minor:

Held, that the appointment was vitiated by fraud and was of no legal effect and the case must be treated as having been proceeded with without a legally appointed guardian, and that the decree in the case and a subsequent Court-sale in execution of the decree were not valid and binding on the minor. Held, (1) that the minor was not entitled to bring a suit for a mere declaration as to the invalidity of the lease and mortgage since it was open to him to claim further relief by way of redemption of the mortgage to the extent it was valid; [p. 314, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, in Original Suit No. 30 of 1919.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and A. S. Venku Iyer, for the Appellants.—The plaintiff's suit is to declare that a mortgage and a lease executed by his guardian are not binding upon him and that a prior decree obtained against him and the Court-sale held in execution thereof, were invalid as he was not properly represented in the prior suit. The lower Court has dismissed the suit on several grounds. It held that the plaintiff was a minor on the date of the suit, that the suit was not maintainable, that the mortgage and the lease were binding on the minor, that the minor was properly represented in the prior suit, and that the Court-sale was good and binding.

The plaintiff was aged more than 18 at the date of suit but had attained 21 years of age by the time the decree was passed. No guardian had been validly appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act. The age of majority was therefore 18 and not 21. Plaintiff was thus a major on the date of suit. But assuming the age of majority was 21, he had become a major by the time the issue was decided. A suit by a minor plaintiff without a next friend cannot be dismissed. See Beni Ram v. Ram Lal (1).

The Court could only give time for a proper guardian to come on record and continue proceedings. Sankaran Nambi v. Devaki Antherjenam (2).

If he becomes a major meanwhile, he can either withdraw the suit or affirm and ratify proceedings. The Judge's finding that the suit was not maintainable is clearly wrong.

Secondly: The guardian mortgaged the properties usufructuarily and took a lease from the mortgagee on very high and onerous terms. Rent was allowed to fall in arrears and the mortgagee sued for rent and himself purchased the mortgaged property in auction. The minor defendant was represented by a Court guardian.

The father had been formerly appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act. The legal guardian could not be superseded by a Court Officer, without reasons being recorded in writing as required by O. XXXII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. No reasons were admittedly recorded in the present case. The appointment of the guardian was hence illegal.

Again, the appointment itself was procured by a false affidavit which stated there was no next of kin except the father. The maternal uncle was admittedly alive.

The minor must be deemed to have been unrepresented. The money-decree and the sale were void and not binding on the minor. See Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (3).

Further, the Court-sale was invalid in that, the plaint claim which was for rent arose out of the mortgage and the mortgagee who was the plaintiff was not entitled to bring the mortgaged properties to sale except by instituting a suit on the mortgage itself (O. XXXIV, r. 14).

Again, the usufructuary mortgage was not binding except to the extent of the amount of the prior mortgage and the decree amount. The lease imposed onerous obligations on the minor. The father was not the legal guardian. The powers of a de facto guardian are limited in scope. There was no necessity or benefit for the mortgage. There was no pressure from creditors. The mortgage and lease were improvident, containing onerous covenants on the minor. The mortgage and the lease were clearly beyond the powers of the guardian and are not binding.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Iyer (with him Mr. Kutti Krishna Menon), for the Respondent:—The omission to record reasons for appointing a Court guardian is at best only an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the decree or of the Court-sale. Sridhar Rao v. Ram Lal (10).

The affidavit was neither false nor deliberately misleading. The father had been appointed guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act and when he refused the Court guardian had to be proposed. It

The maternal uncle had been found unfit in the guardianship proceedings. He was further on terms of enmity with the minor. The minor had been adopted away into another family and there was, therefore, no legal relationship. The maternal uncle was hence neither a suitable nor a proper guardian and it was not irregular to have omitted to mention his name.

There was no fraud or suppression of facts. The fact that a better or a more suitable person would have been appointed is not sufficient. The Court guardian acted fairly and honestly and the decree is binding. Dammar Singh v. Pirbhu Singh (11) and Maruthamalai Gownden v. Palani Gownden (12).

Again, the mortgage and lease were clearly for the benefit of the minor. There was an outstanding prior mortgage and there was also the decree-debt. To that extent at least the mortgage was good.

The present suit for a bare declaration as to invalidity of the mortgage and lease without a prayer for redemption is unsustainable.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer.—If necessary, the plaint may be allowed to be amended by the inclusion of a prayer for redemption.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Calicut in Original Suit No. 30 of 1919 on his file dismissing the plaintiff's suit and the plaintiff is the appellant before us.

Plaintiff became the sole surviving member of his Kommancheri Tarwad on the death of his mother and sister in March 1907; and he was then solely entitled to the Tarwad properties. He was at the time a minor of eight years of age and his father, the second defendant, who had previously managed the affairs of his Tarwad as his mother's agent, continued in the management of his affairs as his de facto guardian. Being a member of a Marumakkatayam Tarwad, his father was not his legal guardian. At that time there was a mortgage-debt on the Tarwad lands in favour of one Bhattathiripad, of Rs. 9,000 which was admittedly binding. To pay off this debt and to meet other alleged necessities, the father acting as plaintiff's guardian borrowed in March 1908, a sum of Rs. 12,000 from the first defendant and executed a usufructuary mortgage to him, copy Exhibit A. Two days afterwards he also executed a Verumpattom chit or lease for himself and as plaintiff's guardian and took back the properties on lease; see copy Exhibit G. Under this arrangement plaintiff was newly made liable with his father to pay a rent of Rs. 1,200 a year. Such an obligation did not exist under the Bhattathiripad's mortgage. The rent was allowed to fall into arrears by the second defendant and he executed a pro-note, copy Exhibit I, for Rs. 3,692-12-11 to the first defendant, again acting for himself and as guardian of his son. The first defendant brought Original Suit No. 37 of 1915 on this note and got a decree against both the father and the son. In this suit the Head Clerk of the Court was appointed as the plaintiff's guardian. Subsequently, the first defendant attached the properties mortgaged to him subject to his own mortgage and got them sold and purchased them himself in Court auction.

Plaintiff brings this suit as a major and prays that the mortgage Exhibit, A, may be declared invalid to the extent of Rs. 2,200 and odd as not being supported by proper consideration except as to the amount due under the prior mortgage which had been paid off. He also prays for a delcaration that the lease Exhibit, G, is not binding on him at all, as it is not for his benefit or necessity but, on the other hand, it imposed on him an onerous liability to pay Rs. 1,200 a year as rent. He states that the decree, Exhibit IX, was obtained by fraud, that he was not represented in it by a proper guardian and that the Court guardian appointed for him acted with gross negligence in the conduct of the case and he, therefore, claims that it is not binding on him; and he further prays that the sale held in execution of that decree may be set aside as invalid.

The first point taken against the plaintiff in the lower Court was that at the date of suit he was a minor and the suit as brought without a next friend was unsustainable and must be dismissed. Plaintiff was over 18 years of age but below 21 when the suit was filed and the question whether he was a major or not turns on whether a guardian had been appointed for him under the Guardians and Wards Act. It is not very clear on the evidence whether such an appointment had been made. An application had been filed under the Act by plaintiff's uncle P. W. No. 2, and the District Judge had passed an order that the plaintiff's father, the second defendant, would be appointed guardian of the plaintiff's person and property on his furnishing security. Though security was tendered, no steps were taken by the Court to test it or get a proper security executed and no formal order of appointment was drawn up. Nevertheless, in several subsequent Court proceedings the second defendant was treated as a properly appointed guardian for the plaintiff; and it was also held that his age of majority had been extended to 21 in consequence, it is not, however, necessary to decide the point definitely, for even assuming that the 21 years' rule applied and the plaintiff was a minor at the date of suit he became a major when the suit was pending in the lower Court and is now a major; and he has before us through his learned Vakil agreed to be bound by all the proceedings that have taken place in the lower Court. O. XXXII, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code is applicable only when, on the face of the plaint, the plaintiff appears to be a minor; see Beni Ram v. Ram Lal (1). That case was decided under the old Code but the new Code makes no change on the point. If on an issue raised and tried in the case, the Court finds that the plaintiff is a minor, it should not dismiss the suit at once but should allow a reasonable time for a next friend to come on record and go on with the suit and it is only if no one comes forward that it should reject the plaint. Beni Ram v. Ram Lal (1) is an authority for this position also. In the present case before the Court decided that the plaintiff was a minor, he had become a major and there was no necessity thereafter to have a next friend for him. Plaintiff may, no doubt, have elected to drop the present suit as not properly instituted but he was not bound to do so; he could affirm the previous proceedings and continue the suit. That is the principle embodied in O. XXXII, r. 12. A somewhat similar case was considered [Sankaran Nambi v. Devaki Antherjenam (2)] and it was ruled there that when a next friend has been appointed, the objection that the suit was originally by a minor without a next friend can no longer be urged.

The next point for consideration is, whether the Court-sale was valid, for if it was, the property has passed to the first defendant and the plaintiff has no more interest in it and cannot maintain this suit. The purchaser in Court-auction was the decree-holder himself and not any third party and we have not, therefore, to consider any rights or equities of bona fide purchasers in Court-auction. The validity of the sale in this case thus depends on the question whether the decree, Exhibit IX, was binding on the plaintiff or not. The plaintiff contends that the appointment of a Court guardian for him was null and void as it was obtained by the first defendant by means of a false affidavit and that the second defendant being a guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act there was no reason and none is recorded why he should not have been appointed; and further that the Court guardian was guilty of gross negligence. It will lead to a clearness to consider these points separately.

Taking the second point first, it wil lbe observed that the second defendant was proposed by the first defendant as plaintiff's guardian ad litem in the first instance. Four notices were taken out to him; the last of them, Exhibit XIII (c), was tendered to him personally but he refused to receive it and sign the copy and it was thereupon affixed to his door. That was rightly accepted as good service by the Court under O. V, rr. 16 and 17. The way in which he behaved when the notice was tendered to him showed clearly that he was not willing to act as guardian and the petition to appoint him guardian was, therefore, dismissed. The reasons, no doubt, are not stated in the order but it is apparent what they were. Considering that he was the person who had executed the promissory-note on which the suit was brought against the minor he would have been an unsustainable guardian in any event as his interests would clash with the minor's interests. It was, however, argued that as he was a guardian appointed by a competent authority under the Guardians and Wards Act, the Court acted improperly in superseding him and appointing a Court guardian without recodrding proper reasons under O. XXXII, r. 4, clause (2). Now in the first place as I have already said it is not very clear that he was so appointed, plaintiff's own case being that he was not so appointed. But if we take it that he had been so appointed the failure to record reasons under r. 4, clause (2) is only an irregualrity in my opinion and will not by itself vitiate the decree if the minor is in fact properly represented by a guardian appointed by Court. The Allahabad High Court has held that the absence of a formal order removing the certificated guardian will not vitiate proceedings if another next friend is allowed to sue and the suit will not be defeated solely upon the ground that no formal permission had been granted. See Sridhar Rao v. Ram Lal (10). The case in Bhimaji v. Rajabhai Hussain Sahib (13) is easily distinguishable as there was no attempt at all made there to have the certificated guardian appointed as guardian ad litem as here.

But the more serious objection to the appointment of the Court guardian is, that his appointment was procured by means of a false affidavit. The affidavit filed on first defendant's behalf by his brother, D. W. No.

(13) 59 Ind. Cas. 842; 43 M. 808; 12 L. W. 114; 39 M. L. J 239; 28 M. L. T. 295.

5, Exhibit X (a), contains a statement that besides the second defendant plaintiff had no next of kin. This statement is false as there was at least one person known to first defendant and his brother, namely, plaintiff's maternal uncle Ravunni Nair, P. W. No. 2, who though he belonged to a different Tarwad as plaintiff's mother had been adopted from his Tarwad to plaintiff's Komancheri Tarwad, was certainly plaintiff's next of kin just like his father, yet this information was suppressed. The only explanation D. W. No. 5 gave for his action in cross-examination is that Ravunni Nair was "not proposed as guardian because the Court held that the second defendant was the proper person to act as guardian;" this apparently refers to Exhibit F. The explanation, however, is worthless and we must hold that the first defendant was guilty of fraud in law in making a false statement and thereby getting a Court Officer appointed as guardian. The appointment is thus vitiated by fraud and is of no legal effect. This brings the case within the principle of the ruling in Privy Council in Bhagwan Daval v. Param Sukh Dass (3) for here as there the case must be treated as having been proceeded with without a legally appointed guardian ad litem. The decree and the subsequent sale are, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff.

It was also urged that, even if we take it that the appointment of the Court guardian was regular and proper one, the decree and sale should still be set aside because there was gross negligence on his part in the conduct of the case. It is not necessary, to consider this point as I have already held that the decree against the plaintiff and the sale must be set aside, on another ground.

Plaintiff has also asked for declaration that the lease is not binding on him and that the mortgage is invalid to a certain extent. Now, clearly, the lease which imposes an onerous obligation on a minor to pay a rent of Rs. 1,200 a year is not binding on the plaintiff. A guardian has no power to enter into engagements on behalf of his minor ward making him liable under such onerous covenants. See Indur Chundar Singh v. Radhakishore Ghose (8), Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (7), Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (9) and Chodavarapu Narayana Row v. Chennuru Venkatasubba Row (6). It was, however, argued that the lease and the mortgage were one and the same transaction and that, as the creditor the first defendant was not prepared to lend except on condition that such a lease should be taken, it was justified by necessity in the same manner as the mortgage. This argument cannot be supported for even if the two be parts of the same transaction, there is no proof that there was any necessity to borrow at all. There was no pressure from the previous mortgagee. The action of a de facto guardian, as second defendant was, will be binding on the minor's property only if it is for the minor's benefit or necessity. That is not proved in this case and the lease, so far as the plaintiff is included in it, is, therefore, not valid.

As regards the mortgage the plaintiff has conceded in this Court that it is valid not only to the extent of Bhattachiripad's mortgage paid off but also to the extent of the decree-debt in Original Suit No. 364 of 1905 and for the amount due to Unnith Amma, i.e., in all for about Rs. 11,000, the objection being confined to about Rs. 1,000 not properly accounted for. There is, however, a preliminary difficulty in plaintiff's way in getting any declaration as regards the lease and the mortgage inasmuch as no declaration can be given to him under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act if he can claim further relief. In this case, on my view, it is clearly open to him to redeem the mortgage to the first defendant or such portion of it as is valid. The Subordinate Judge holds that plaintiff is entitled to redeem without a demand for payment by the first defendant and cites Navunni v. Ramasawmy Patter (14) in support of his view that section 42 will not apply in such circumstances. But this view is based on a misreading of the covenant in Exhibit A. That only provides that if the mortgagee wants payment he must give notice to be paid on the day after "Ucharal" or the beginning of the cultivation season in any year and not at other times. This provision does not affect the mortgagor's right to redeem at any time he likes. The covenant is not mutual by its wording. As the mortgage and the lease are clearly parts of one and the same transaction, no declaration can be given regarding either without the plaintiff suing to redeem. The case cited in Navunni v. Ramasawmy Patter (14) itself recognises this position. Plaintiff's Vakil then asks that his client may be permitted to amend his plaint by adding a prayer for redemption and paying the necessary Court-fees on the plaint and memorandum of appeal. This is rightly not opposed by the first defendant's Vakil and may, I think, be granted. Plaintiff is allowed to amend his plaint and pay the necessary Court-fees for it and for the appeal in this Court in two weeks from this date. The appeal is adjourned for the purpose.

JUDGMENT.—Further Court-fee has now been paid and the plaint amended to convert the suit into one for redemption. The objection as to non-maintainability of the suit for a mere declaration thus ceases. As the result of the amendment, the case must be sent back to the lower Court for fresh disposal as a suit for redemption subject to the rulings we have given on the points already dealt with. The respondent will be allowed to file a supplemental written statement on the amended plaint and the case will be disposed of according to law.

Each party will bear costs up to the date except as to the Court-fees now paid by the appellant which would be disposed of by the lower Court in its final order.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 30th June 1921.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.
Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this second appeal is whether the custom of pre-emption upon which the plaintiff relied was proved.

The only document put forward in proof of this custom was a wajib-ul-arz which was prepared in the year 1909 after a partition had taken place in the village. It seems to be the case that when partition is made it is the duty of the Collector or Assistant Collector to prepare a fresh Record of Rights. This, as is pointed by the learned Counsel for the respondent, was laid down in the case reported as Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh (1).

We take it, therefore, that this wajib-ul-arz prepared in the year 1909 can be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining whether it records a custom.

The argument on behalf of the defendant-appellant is that on the language of this document the Courts ought not to hold that there is a record of custom but merely a record of contract and in this connection reference is made to what was laid down in the case reported as Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nasir (2).

There can, we think, be no doubt that if the principles laid down in this case are to be followed then we ought certainly to hold that his document now before us is not a record of custom. In that case it was pointed out that where the record which is relied upon for the purpose of showing custom, contains a number of extraneous matters some of which could only have relation to a contract entered into between the parties and which could not possibly be based upon custom then it ought to be taken that the whole wajib-ul-arz is not properly a record of custom at all. We have followed this case in many other cases recently decided.

(1) 22 A. 1; A. W. N. (1899) 111; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1035 (F. B.)
(2) 48 Ind. Cas. 220; 16 A. L. J. 879.

Turning to the document now before us we find that Chapter II of this wajib-ul-arz is headed as follows:—

"Hissadaran ke apas ke huquq ya jo rasm muahida khass par mabni hon."

The 16th paragraph of this Chapter relates to pre-emption. It also deals with other matters including the procedure to be observed when mortgages are to be redeemed and it distinctly gives a right to a co-sharer to redeem a mortgage made by another co-sharer who is unwilling or unable to ask for redemption at the time when redemption becomes due. It is set out there that another co-sharer may redeem and hold the property under charge until it is redeemed by the co-sharer who made the mortgage.

We cannot in principle distinguish this case from the case to which we have referred, viz., Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nasir (2) and we consequently hold that the record relied on in this case is not a record of custom. It has been argued before us that this point cannot be debated in second appeal inasmuch as the question was not raised before the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. In the grounds of appeal which were taken in that Court the first ground was that the custom of pre-emption on the basis whereof the plaintiff sues is not proved from any reasonable evidence. The judgment of the learned Judge seems to indicate, however, that this point was not debated before him and his judgment shows that the only point which was argued before him was with regard to the interpretation of the preferential right of the co-sharers inter se. Be that as it may, it seems to us that the defendant-appellant is not precluded from asking us to hold on the basis of the decisions of the Pre-emption Bench that the language of this document does not show that what was recorded was a true record of custom. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the claim of the paintiff be dismissed. The defendant-appellant will be entitled to his costs in all three Courts including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 100 OF 1922.

Syed MOHAMMAD JAFAR, DEAD, AND ON HIS DEATH Musammat ABIDA BEGAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

RAM CHARAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Pro-note, suit on—Pro-note executed in renewal of prior pro-note—Consideration—Forbearance to sue.

Defendant executed a pro-note in favour of one K. After the latter's death the defendant renewed the pro-note in favour of one R, who was not entitled to sue on the old pro-note, at the request of the plaintiff who was entitled to sue on it. R, subsequently assigned the renewed pro-note in favour of the plaintiff who sued on it. Defendant objected that the renewel in favour of R was without consideration as the latter was not entitled to sue on the old pro-note;

Held, that the renewal having been made at the request of the plaintiff, who was entitled to sue on the old pro-note, the forbearance of the plaintiff to sue on the old pro-note was sufficient consideration for the renewed pro-note. [p. 317, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 31st December 1921, upholding that of the Munsif, Safipur, Unao, dated the 2nd May 1921.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellants.
Mr. Ram Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit on a pro-note. The defendant seeks to escape liability on what the Court below describes as a technical and not altogether honest plea. The pro-note was executed by the original defendant, Syed Mohammad Jafar, who has died during the pendency of this appeal, in favour of Musammat Suraj Kuar, wife of the second plaintiff, Raghubar Dayal, on 8th December 1917. It was in renewel of a pro-note previously executed by the defendant in favour of Raghubar Dayal's uncle Kanhai on 16th December 1914.

It was executed just before limitation on the earlier pro-note expired. Kanhai had died childless and had made a Will in favour of Musammat Suraj Kuar. It has been found that Kanhai was a member of a joint family with the plaintiffs so that the Will was not really valid. It appears, however, that the plaintiffs did not wish to dispute it, for it has been found that it was at the request of the second plaintiff that the pro-note was renewed in favour of Musammat Suraj Kuar.

Musammat Suraj Kuar subsequently transferred her interest in the pro-note to the plaintiffs who were the persons really entitled to recover the debt due to Kanhai. The defendant's case is that the renewal was without consideration as Musammat Suraj Kuar had no title to and could not have enforced the original pro-note in favour of Kanhai. Both the Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court rests its decision on certain sections of the Negotiable Instruments Act which do not appear to apply. It appears to me, however, that the decree can be supported on other grounds. The defendant wishes the Court to look at the question of consideration entirely from the point of view of Musammat Suraj Kaur and the plaintiffs as her transferees. The real question is whether the defendant himself received any consideration for renewal of the pro-note. It appears clear to me that he did. It is true that Musammat Suraj Kuar could not have sued on the original pro-note against him but the plaintiffs could have done so and it was at the second plaintiff's request that the pro-note was renewed in her favour instead of in the name of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' forbearance to sue on the original instrument is sufficient consideration for the renewal. On these grounds, I hold that the decree of the Courts below is correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 19 OF 1922.

February 9, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Halifax, A. J. C.

SHEONARAYAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

RAMPRASAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 153, O. VI, r. 17—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Amendment of plaint—Discretion of Court—Amendment, effect, of—Exclusion of time spent in previous suit—Same cause of action—Good faith.

An amendment of a plaint relates back to the date of the original institution of the suit provided there was nothing illegal about it. [p. 319 col. 1.]

Section 153 and O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code do not put any express restriction on the discretion of the Court to allow an amendment altering the entire character of the suit. [p. 312, col. 1.]

The plaintiff brought a suit in Court A on an account alleged to have been taken respecting a dissolved parternership between himself and the defendant. After inquiry the Court held that no such account had ever been taken. Instead of dismissing the suit, however, it returned the plaint, to enable the plaintiff, after amending the suit into one for taking an account of the dissolved partnership, to present the plaint in Court B, which alone was competent to try a suit of that description. The plaintiff, however, presented the plaint in Court B without any amendment, with the result that it was again returned, the Court holding that on the face of it, the suit was triable by Court A. The plaint was now presented back in Court A, which again returned it for proper presentation, after allowing it to be amended into a suit for an account and a share of the dissolved partnership. The plaint as amended was now finaly presented in Court B, but by this time the suit was time-barred, and the Court dismissed it after holding that the delay could not be condoned under section 14 of the Limitation Act. On appeal:

Held, (1) that in granting the amendment, the Court A exercised its discretion in a judicial manner and that, as an amendment relates back to the time of the institution of the suit, the suit ultimately instituted in Court B was, for the purpose of section 14 of the Limitation Act, not only to be considered to be founded on the same cause of action as the suit at first instituted in Court A, but was in fact the same suit; [p. 319, col. 1.]

(2) that, however, as the plaintiff deliberately left the plaint unamended for a long time after the decision in Court A as to no account having been taken of the dissolved partnership, it could not be said that he was prosecuting the suit in "good faith" to enable him to take advantage of that section, and that the suit was rightly dismissed. [p. 319, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 29th June 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1922.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellant.

Mr. Eracksha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint was originally presented in the Court of the Munsif, Gondia, on the 13th of July 1920. The plaintiff alleged that a partnership between himself and the defendant had been dissolved on the 14th of November 1917, and that an account of the partnership taken between them on the 9th of October 1917 showed a sum of Rs. 508-6-6 due to him by the defendant. After enquiry, it was held by the Court that no account had ever been taken, and this is now necessarily accepted as a fact. On that finding the suit was not triable by that Court, but a suit not based on the allegation that accounts had been taken and claiming that they should be taken up to the end of the partnership would have been triable, under the standing distribution of work, by the First Munsif of Bhandara. The Munsif of Gondia, instead of dismissing the suit, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court and it was later presented, without amendment, in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara. There it was rightly held that, on the face of the unamended plaint, the suit was triable by the Munsif of Gondia, and the plaint was again returned.

2. In appeal aginst this order by the plaintiff it was held by the Court of the District Judge that the order was correct and the Munsif of Gondia was ordered to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register and to deal with it according to law. The plaint was then again presented in the Court of the Munsif of Gondia and, on the 27th of July 1921, that Court again returned it for proper presentation after allowing it to be amended into a suit for an account and a share of the profits of a partnership which had been dissolved on the 14th of November 1917. Thus amended, the plaint was again presented in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara on the 21st of September 1921. In that Court it was held (by the Additional Subordinate Judge to whom the suit was transferred) that section 14 of the Limitation Act did not condone the delay after the 14th of November 1920, the end of the ordinary period of limitation and the suit was, therefore, barred by time. In appeal the learned District Judge has remanded the case for a decision on its merits, holding that section 14 of the Limitation Act does apply to it, and the present appeal is against that order of remand.

3. The dates of the few orders that have not been stated above are immaterial, as the order of the District Judge's Court that the suit should be re-admitted by the Munsif of Gondia wiped out all the intermediate proceedings. It is urged for the defendant that the Munsif of Gondia was wrong in allowing the plaint to be amended, and that he can still question the correctness and legality of that order, though he never appealed against it. If we assume that contention to be correct, which is the same as assuming that the amendment was made by the plaintiff himself of his motion at some time before presenting the plaint in Bhandara, it is quite clear that section 14 of the Limitation Act does not operate to condone the delay. In that view, the case stated in its simplest terms is as follows. On the 13th of July 1920 the plaintiff instituted his suit in the Court of the Munsif of Gondia for money payable on accounts stated on the 9th of October 1917. This dragged on till the 27th of July 1921 when the Munsif returned the plaint. On the 21st of September 1921 the plaint was presented in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara, after amendment of the plaint so as to make the suit one for an account and a share of the profits of a partnership dissolved on the 14th of November 1917.

4. In this view of the case, it appears that, in respect of the period between the 13th of July 1920 and the 27th of July 1921, the plaintiff satisfied all the requirements of section 14 of the Limitation Act with the possible exception of the last two, that it was in good faith that he prosecuted his suit in the wrong Court and that the two suits are founded on the same cause of action. The question of good faith does not require examination at present as it appears distinctly that the cause of action was not the same in the two suits. In the original plaint the cause of action or the set of facts to be established by the plaintiff to enable him to succeed was that an account had been stated showing a certain balance in his favour, the fact that the partnership had been dissolved was irrelevant, as he would have succeeded equally if it had not been dissolved or, indeed, if it had never existed. In the amended plaint the cause of action was the dissolution of the partnership, and that suit would have succeeded whether there had been even more than one statement of accounts during the continuance of the partnership.

5. But the making of the amendment in the Court in which the plaint was originally filed and with the leave of that Court makes all the difference, as, provided there was nothing illegal about it, the amendment undoubtedly relates back to the date of the original institution of the suit. As has been shown, the amendment alters the character if the suit entirely, and under section 53 of the old Code an amendment of that kind was expressly forbidden. But section 153 and r. 17 of O. VI of the present Code make no express restriction on the discretion of the Court, and in this case it undoubtedly was judicially exercised, and the order passed by the Court in the exercise of that discretion was never contested in appeal. What puts the correctness of the order and the rightness of the exercise of its discretion by the Court beyond all doubt is the fact that the defendant agreed to the order being passed. The record of the proceedings in the Court of the Munsif of Gondia is not now before me but the learned Pleader for the plaintiff-respondent produced certified copies of the pleadings which were admitted by the defendant-appellant to be correct, and from them it appears that when the plaintiff asked for permission to make the amendment, the defendant's Pleader raised no objection and the defendant himself said: "I have no objection to the amendment." The suit, therefore, that was instituted in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara was not only founded on the same cause of action as that instituted on the 13th of July 1920 in the Court of the Munsif of Gondia, but was the same suit.

6. There remains then the question of good faith. It was possibly, though not very probably, through inadvertence that the allegation that accounts had been made, which must now be admitted to be untrue, was left unamended in the plaint when it was presented for the first time in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara. But the matter was brought prominently to the plaintiff's notice when the plaint was again returned to him and it was practically the only matter discussed in his appeal. Even after the remand to the Court of the Munsif, Gondia, it was sometime before he could make up his mind to amend the plaint and abandon the allegation that there had been a settlement of accounts. I am unable to believe that this was due to any inadvertence or that it was done otherwise than deliberately in the hope of establishing later on an allegation of fact that had been found to be untrue and is now admitted to be untrue. Whatever may be the full extent of the meaning of the expression "good faith" in section 14 of the Limitation Act, it must be admitted that it cannot cover conduct of that sort.

7. I hold, therefore, that section 14 of the Limitation Act does not bring this suit, as filed on the 21st of September 1921 in the Court of the First Munsif of Bhandara, within time. The order of the District Judge remanding the case for hearing will accordingly be set aside and the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit as barred by time will be restored. The plaintiff-respondent must pay all the costs of all the proceedings.

Mortgage—Two mortgages on same property—Covenant to redeem together—Clog on redemption,

A person who had executed a usufructuary mortgage of his property, mortgaged it again to the same mortgagee, and it was agreed that in case interest on the amount secured by the second mortgage was not paid annually, the mortgagee could, if he so desired, sue to recover the money due on the second mortgage. It was also agreed that the first mortgage would not be redeemed without the redemption of the second mortgage being effected:

Held, that the condition was a clog on the equity of redemption and the mortgagor could redeem the first mortgage alone without redeeming the second.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mathura, dated the 8th of August 1921.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are as follows. On the 15th of July 1868 the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff and defendant second party executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of Makkhan Lal, defendant first party. On the 19th of July 1869 the same mortgagors executed another mortgage in favour of Makkhan Lal, aforesaid, to secure a further advance of Rs. 300 on the same property. It was, however, agreed that in case interest was not paid annually the mortgagee could, if he so desired, sue to recover the money due on the second mortgage. It was also agreed that the first mortgage would not be redeemed without the redemption of the second mortgage being effected. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff-appellant for redemption of the mortgage of the 15th of July 1868. The prior mortgagee pleaded in defence that the plaintiff must redeem the second mortgage of the 19th of July 1869 also. The First Court held that the plaintiff had a right to redeem the first mortgage only. The defendant first party appealed and the plaintiff raised objections that he was to pay Rs. 34 only for redemption and not Rs. 61 as ordered by the First Court. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that the condition entered in the second mortgage that the plaintiff was to redeem that mortgage also before he could redeem the first mortgage, operated as a clog on the equity of redemption and could not be enforced and, dismissing both the appeal and the objections, has confirmed the decree of the First Court. The defendant first party, the mortgagee, comes here in second appeal and his contention is that, on a true construction of the terms of the mortgage-deed dated the 19th of July 1869, the plaintiff is bound to redeem the second mortgage also before he could redeem the first mortgage and that the dismissal of his suit on the second mortgage is no bar to his claiming that money when the plaintiff seeks to redeem the usufructuary mortgage. The learned Vakil for the appellant has relied on the case of Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (1). It is true that in that particular case this Court held that the second bond had to be redeemed along with the first usufructuary mortgage-bond. But the difference between that case and the present one is that in that case the second bond was a purely usufructuary mortgage-bond. In the present case, however, as it would appear from the facts which I have given above, the second mortgage was not a usufructuary bond pure and simple. The money due could be realised by sale also; in other words, the money due under the second bond could be realised notwithstanding the first mortgage-bond remained unredeemed. This circumstance distinguishes the present case from the Full Bench case referred to above. The case clearly in point is that of Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (2) and the two lower Courts have taken a correct view and put a correct construction on the mortgage-deed of 1869. Under these

RENT APPEAL No. 8 OF 1922.
November 30, 1922.
Present:—Mr. Daniels A. J. C.
Musammat RUQAIYA BEGAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus
IMDAD ALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 34 (5), scope and applicability of—Failure to make report required by section—Suit for profits under Rent Act, whether barred—Report made by Patwari, whether sufficient—Report during pendency of suit.

The language of sub-section (5) of section 34 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act is perfectly general, and the operation of the sub-section is not confined to suits under the Act. The sub-section prohibits a Revenue Court from entertaining a suit or application of any description by a person who is required to make a report of succession by the section, until the report is made. [p. 321, col. 2.]

Chhajmal Das v. Sirya, A. W. N. (1906) 254; 3 A. L. J. 625, relied on.

If mutation has taken place before the institution of a suit, the report required by section 34 becomes unnecessary and sub-section (5) of the section has no application, but if mutation has not yet taken place a report made by the Patwari, cannot be a substitute for the report which the section requires to be made by the proprietor. [p. 322, col. 1.]

A report made during the pendency of a suit is of no avail, as sub-section (5) of section 34, debars a Court from even admitting the plaint until the report required by the section has been made. [p. 322, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 20th December 1921, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Unao, dated the 25th November 1920.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Wasi Hasan, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed jointly for profits under section 108 (15) of the Oudh Rent Act by two plaintiffs Musammat Ruqaiya Begam and Allahyar Beg. The suit was for profits of the years 1324 to 1327 and the causes of action arose on different dates from 1st June 1917 to 1st June 1920. During nearly the whole of the period in suit the recorded proprietor of Allahyar Beg's share in his property was his son Hamidullah Beg who died on 4th April 1920. The suit has been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court as against Allahyar Beg on two grounds, one of which was that, at the time of the institution of the suit, he had not made the report of succession required by section 34 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, and that, therefore, his suit was barred by sub-section (5) of the same section. Both plaintiffs appealed but the appeal has been argued solely from the point of view of Allahyar Beg.

It is admitted that, on the date of the insititution of the suit, no report with a view to mutation had been made by Allahyar Beg. He contests the finding of the Court below on three grounds:—

(1) that section 34 (5) only applies to proceedings under the Land Revenue Act;

(2) that prior to the institution of the suit, namely, on 19th April 1920, the Patwari had made a report of Hamidullah Beg's death and Allahyar Beg's succession to the property as his heir;

(3) that the report required by section 34 was made by the plaintiff during the pendency of the suit and this should have been treated as sufficient.

Neither of these has any force. The language of sub-section (5) of section 34 is perfectly general: "No Revenue Court shall entertain a suit, or application by the person so succeeding.....until such person has made the report required by this section." It is impossible to read into this language the limitation suggested by the appellants, and indeed in the only case on the section which I have been able to find, Chhajmal Das v. Sirya (1), the section was treated as applicable to a suit under section 142 of the Agra Tenancy Act. In this particular case the transfer of right had taken place prior to the passing of the Act and on this ground alone it was held that section 34 was not a bar to the suit. The report made by the Patwari is made under the rules framed in accordance with the Land Revenue Act, and is not a substitute for the report which the Act itself requires to be made by the proprietor. No doubt, as suggested by Mr. Agarwala in his commentary on the section, if mutation had already taken place at the time of the institution of the suit the report required by section 34 would have become unnecessary, but this is not the case here. Mutation was not ordered till after the institution of the suit. The suggestion that a report subsequently made is sufficient is untenable in view of the language of the Act. The Court is debarred from entertaining the suit at all, that is to say, from even admitting the plaint, until the report required by the section has been made.

Out of several defendants to the suit only the first defendant Imdad Ali Khan appealed. It is argued that the Court below ought not to have dismissed the plaintiff's claim altogether. I do not see how it could have done otherwise, in view of the fact that it was precluded from entertaining a suit by the plaintiff at all.

It is further urged that if this appeal is dismissed the result may be that a fresh suit for profits against defendants will be time-barred. I notice, however, that as against the defendants who have not appealed the Court below has given a decree for the full amount due in favour of the co-plaintiff, Musammat Ruqaiya Begam. It is difficult to see, therefore, how Allahyar Beg could recover these profits from the defendants over again. His remedy would appear to be against Musammat Ruqaiya Begam if she declines to hand over to her co-plaintiff his share of the profits which she has recovered. She did not profess in her plaint to be entitled to recover the whole profits herself but only jointly with Alllayhar Beg. In view of the fact that the plea on which the suit was ultimately dismissed was not clearly taken in the written statement, I allow no costs to the respondents.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed but the parties will bear their own costs.

An entry in a wajib-ul-arz as to a right of pre-emption is good prima facie evidence of the existence of the custom, unless there is internal evidence in the wajib-u-larz itself or some other evidence or circumstance to rebut it. [p. 323, col. 1.]

Where in the very clause of a wajib-ul-arz in which reference is made to pre-emption, reference is also made to a number of other matters which cannot possibly be matters of custom, the presumption is rebutted. [p. 323, col. 1.]

Held, that the presumption which would ordinarily arise from an entry of a right of pre-emption in the wajib-ul-arz had been sufficiently rebutted and there was internal evidence in the clause itself to show that the recitals contained therein were not at all records of custom. [p. 323, col. 2.]

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant-vendee's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The defendant had denied the existence of any custom and the Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge set aside the decree of the First Court and decreed the suit, holding that the custom of pre-emption alleged by the plaintiff had been established. The evidence as to the existence of the custom produced by the plaintiff consists of an entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 as well as decrees of the years 1885 and 1916. As against that the defendant relied on the judgment and decree of the year 1913.

An entry as to the right of pre-emption recorded in a wajib-ul-arz is certainly good prima facie evidence of the existence of the custom unless there is internal evidence in the wajib-ul-arz itself or some other evidence or circumstance to rebut it. In the present case, although it appears that there was an earlier wajib-ul-arz of 1860 in existence, none was filed. We have only the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 which in the early portion of it does contain an express statement as to the existence of a right of pre-emption in favour of bhai haqiqi and then qaribi, then pattidars and then co-sharers in other pattis as against strangers. The clause in the wajib-ul-arz containing this recital, however, contains a large number of other matters over a dozen in number.

It has been contended very strongly on behalf of the defendant-appellant that, reading the clause as a whole, this entry cannot be a record of custom. The test to be applied in such cases was laid down by the Special Bench in Fazal Hussain v. Muhammad Sharif (1) where it was pointed out that if a wajib-ul-arz was of an unusual nature and in the very same clause in which reference was made to pre-emption, reference was also made to a number of other matters which could not possibly have been matters of custom, the presumption would be rebutted. This case has been followed in a number of other cases, vide the case in Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nasir (2) where the right of one co-sharer to redeem a mortgage made by another co-sharer, was held not to be a possible record of custom.

In the present case as it is not necessary for us to give in detail all the matters recited in the clause which may or may not be the record of custom, we need only to refer in particular to that portion of it which says that an issuless co-sharer shall have no right to make a gift of his property in favour of a person not entitled (gair mustahiq), and if such a transfer takes place, then on the death of the co-sharer his legal heirs would be the owners of the property.

It is obvious that this is an unreasonable restraint on an owner's power of alienation, and, even though intended for the benefit of his relations, it cannot possibly be enforced in a Court of Law. An entry which lays down that a right exists which cannot be based on a custom having the force of law, is valueless as evidence to prove such custom. This being so, we are of opinion that the presumption which would ordinarily arise from an entry of a right of pre-emption in the wajib-ul-arz has in this case been sufficiently rebutted, and that there is internal evidence in the clause itself to show that the recitals contained therein are not all records of custom.

In addition to this wajib-ul-arz, the plaintiff relied on a decree for pre-emption of the year 1885. It is, however, to be noted that the Settlement of 1870 had not expired by that year and that the right of pre-emption, even if based on contract, was then enforceable. In that judgment the question of custom was neither raised nor decided. The decree of the year 1916 is a mere compromise decree. Although it is certainly evidence of an assertion of the right of pre-emption on the part of the co-sharers, it cannot be conclusive inasmuch as the question of the existence of any custom was not gone into by the Court and decided. As against this we have the Munsif's judgment of the year 1913 where the plaintiff's case that a custom existed had been found not to have been established. Our conclusion, therefore, is that in this case the plaintiff has failed to establish that there is a custom of pre-emption under which he is entitled to pre-empt the property. The result is that this appeal must be allowed. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Partnership, dissolution of—Accounts not settled—Goods purchased before but received after dissolution of partnership—Profits, whether to be accounted for—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 263.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a partnership for carrying on a business. The partnership was subsequently dissolved, but all that was done at this dissolution was the division of the stock in the shop between the parties. No accounts were settled on that date. Before the dissolution of the partnership orders had been placed for the purchase of certain goods on behalf of the firm and the payment of the price was also made on behalf of the firm; but the goods were received after the dissolution of the partnership. The defendant sold those goods. The plaintiff filed a suit for settlement of accounts and claimed his share of the profits arising out of the sale of the said goods:

Held, that, although the terms of s. 263 of the Contract Act did not cover the case in its entirety, yet on principles of equity the plaintiff was entitled to his share of the profits made by the defendant in selling the goods in question. [p. 325, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 29th March 1922, upholding that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 30th July 1921.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and the defendants were separately carrying on the business of selling salt in Sultanpur early in the year 1919. On the 1st of July of that year the plaintiff, on the one hand, and the defendants, on the other hand, entered into a partnership for carrying on the same business, to which was also added the selling of Kerosene Oil. There was a written agreement of partnership drawn but so much of the terms of it as were admitted in the pleadings of the case were as follows:—

(a) that the plaintiff and the defendants shall each have a half share in the profits of the business and bear losses in the same proportion:

(b) that for any advances which one or the other of the parties may make towards the capital of the firm he or they, as the case may be, shall receive interest on the sum advanced at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem;

(c) that the plaintiff will work without any remuneration at the shop at which the salt and the oil would be sold.

It is common ground now in appeal that the partnership was dissolved on the 4th March 1920 but all that was done at this dissolution was the division of the stock in the shop between the partners of the firm. No accounts were settled on that date. About the middle of November 1919, that is, before the partnership was technically dissolved, orders were placed for the purchase of 7 wagons of salt, the price of which was paid in two instalments of Rs. 905-10-0 on the 13th November 1919 and Rs. 2,264-1-0 on the 17th November 1919. This salt so indented for was not received until after the dissolution of the partnership, the first instalment of it was received on the 26th October 1920.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was to obtain a settlement of accounts as between the parties relating to the business of the firm and within the claim were included the profits made by the defendants over this sale of 7 wagons of salt. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit in respect of his claim of the sums of money other than the one which represented the profits made by the defendants by selling 7 wagons of salt. The sum of money representing the plaintiff's share of profits in the sale mentioned above was put at the figure of Rs. 402 odd and its accuracy is no longer a matter in controversy between the parties. Both the parties appealed from the decision of the Court of first instance to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur. The result was that the defendants' appeal was dismissed and the plaintiff's appeal in respect of his claim of Rs. 402 odd was allowed. The defendants have filed two appeals in this Court against two decrees of the lower Appellate Court.

These are Appeals No. 136 of 1922 and 197 of 1922. Appeal No. 137 is withdrawn by the learned Counsel who appears on behalf of the defendants-appellants and is consequently dismissed with costs.

As regards Appeal No. 136 of 1922, I am of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The account-books produced in the case immediately prove that order for the purchase of the 7 wagons of salt was made on behalf of the firm and further that the payment of the price in two instalments was also made on behalf of the firm; but by mere accident the goods were received after the dissolution of the partnership. There is no doubt, in my mind, that on principles of equity the plaintiff is entitled to his share of the profits made by the defendants in selling the salt in question. It may be that the terms of section 263 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) do not cover the case in its entirety to deliver to the plaintiff his share of the profits made in the sale of the goods, the price of which went out of the funds of the firm.

The appeals fails and is dismissed with costs.

HARDEO SAHAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage of family property—Legal necessity—Burden of proof—Series of renewals of mortgage—Presumption—Transferee of mortgaged property—Right to question validity of mortgage—Admission of validity of mortgage by family, effect of—Voidable transaction—Transferee of rights—Option, exercise of.

Where a person wishes to enforce a mortgage against Hindu joint family property, the burden lies on him to satisfy the Court that the transaction was entered into for family necessity, or in lieu of antecedent debt, or with the consent, express or implied, of all the members of the family. [p. 328, col. 2; p. 329, col. 1.]

As regards legal necessity, all that a transferee of Hindu joint family property is required to show is that like an ordinary person he was reasonably satisfied as to its existence. [p. 329, col. 1.]

A long series of renewals of mortgage transactions concerning Hindu joint family property extending over a generation without any protest from any member of the family would show its acquiescence and raise a fair presumption that if there had not been a valid necessity for them, some objection would have been raised. [p. 329, col. 1.]

It is open to a transferee of Hindu joint family property to plead that a prior mortgage on the property was without legal necessity. [p. 327, col. 1.]

Muhammad Muzamilullah Khan v. Mithulal, 11 Ind. Cas. 220; 33 A. 783; 8 A. L. J. 901 (F. B.), followed.

The members of a Hindu joint family transferred certain property subject to some mortgages, expressly admitting that they were binding on them, and actually left with the vendee the whole sum due in order that the same may be paid to the prior mortgagees. The vendee, however, refused to pay the money alleging that the mortgages were not binding on the family:

Held, that, though the admission by the members of the family that the mortgages were binding on them could not operate as an estoppel against the vendee inasmuch as there was no privity of contract between the mortgagees and him, the admission was a very strong piece of evidence in favour of the view that the transactions were valid and binding on the family. [p. 327, col. 2.]

A transaction which is voidable remains good so long as it is not challenged by the person who has the option to have it set aside. It is for him to exercise or not to exercise the option. If without exercising the option and in fact admitting the validity of the transaction, he transfers his rights, the transferee cannot be allowed to say that he has acquired that option by the transfer. [p. 326, col. 2.]

Quaere:—Whether a mortgage of Hindu joint family property without legal necessity and not in lieu of any antecedent debt and without the consent, express or implied, of all members of the family, is void or only voidable. [p. 326, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpur.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, Dr. Surendro Nath Sen and Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—First Appeals Nos. 136 and 137 of 1921 are connected appeals by certain defendants arising out of two suits for sale on the basis of two mortgage-deeds of the same date, namely, the 2nd of June 1914.

The first of the two mortgage-deeds was executed by Bhawani Prasad and others

In favour of Hardeo Sahai, and the second by the same mortgagors in favour of Hukam Chand and Gauri Shankar. Under these two deeds amounts due under to prior mortgage-deeds dated 16th of June 1894, and the first of March 1897 were paid off and only a sum or Rs. 500 was paid in cash which was said to have been required for the pruchase of corn for daily consumption and for the completion of the mortgage-deeds in question.

In the one case the only contesting defendant was a subsequent transferee Inayat Ilahi and in the other Maharaj Singh, one of the members of the mortgagor's family, also contested the suit. The other defendants did not put in any appearance. On behalf of the contesting defendants the execution of the documents as well as the passing of consideration were denied. It was further pleaded that there had been no legal necessity for the transfers, and that the mortgage-deeds were, therefore, not binding on the family.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it was not open to Inayat Ilahi, he being a transferee only, to raise such a plea and he further held that the other contesting defendant, Maharaj Singh, not having been born at the time when the two prior mortgage-deeds were executed, was not competent to challegnge the transactions. He accordingly decreed both the suits in full. Inayat Ilahi and some of the defendants, other than Maharaj Singh, have preferred two appeals, and on their behalf, although the findings as to the execution and the passing of consideration are not challenged, it has been strongly contended that there was in fact no legal necessity for these transfers.

The first question which arises is as to whether it is open to the transferee, Inayat Ilahi, to raise the question of want of legal necessity. This question we would have thought depended on the further question whether a mortgage of joint property by a Hindu father without any legal necessity and not in lieu of any antecedent debt and without the consent, express or implied, of the other members of the family, was void or only voidable. If such a transfer were void there can be no doubt whatsoever that any subsequent transferee who comes into possession of the property would be entitled to raise the point that the transaction was not binding on the property.

On the other hand, if the mortgage transaction were merely voidable at the option of the non-consenting members of the family, then it is difficult to see how a subsequent transferee of the property itself could be allowed to question it. A transaction which is voidable remains good so long as it is not challenged by the members who have the option to have it set aside. It is for them to exercise or not to exercise the option. If without exercising that option and in fact admitting the validity of the mortgage they transfer the property, the transferee cannot be allowed to say that he has acquired that option by the transfer.

Undoubtedly, it has been held in a number of cases that a transfer by a Hindu widow, who represents the whole estate for the time being and who certainly has power to transfer the property for her life-time is only voidable at the option of the reversioners and not absolutely void. But as to a Hindu father, the whole estate does not vest exclusively in him but in the family of which he is the head. He may also, as the manager, be the agent of the family in relation to the outside world. The question whether a transfer by him without legal necessity is void or voidable is another matter. There are certainly observations in some old cases which go to show that such a transfer is not absolutely void but only voidable. In the case of Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed at page 126 that the sale by a Hindu father "was not necessarily void but only voidable if objection were taken to it by the other members of the joint family." And the same view was expressed by a single Judge of this Court in the case of Bishumbhar Dayal v. Parshadi Lal (2). On the other hand, the learned Advocate for the appellants relies on the observations in the cases reported as Balgobind Das v.

(1) 19 C. 123; 18 I. A. 158; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 911; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 527 (P. C.).
(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 629; 10 A. L. J. 112.

INAYAT ILAHI v. HARDEO SAHAI.

Narain Lal (3) and Muhammad Muzamilullah Khan v. Mithlulal (4) where it was distinctly held that such a transfer without the consent of the other members of the family was 'invalid'.

Their Lordships in the leading case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (5) observed: "any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid; the estate is wholly unaffected by it and its entirety stands free of it." It may be that the word "invalid" is not necessarily the same thing as void. We do not, however, think it necessary to go any further into this question as we feel ourselves bound by the ruling of the Full Bench in Muhammad Muzamilullah Khan v. Mithulal (4) which laid down that it is open to a subsequent transferee to take the plea that the prior mortgage was without legal necessity.

The question still remains how far the present transferee, Inayat Ilahi, is bound by his undertaking to pay off the prior debts. In the sale-deed which was executed on the 6th January 1919 in his favour it was admitted by the vendors in the clearest terms that the prior debts contracted by their ancestors were binding on them. They purported to transfer only the equity of redemption (i. e., property subject to those mortgages) and actually left in deposit with the vendee the whole sum due in order that the same may be paid to the representatives of the prior mortgagees. Having undertaken to pay off these debts the vendee now turns round and says that he is not bound to pay them, though his sale-deed contains a very clear admission on behalf of all the members of the family who were parties to it that the prior mortgage-debts had been incurred for legal necessity and were binding on the family.

It is to be noted that 12 years have not yet expired since the execution of the sale-deed. The vendee's title as against the whole family, therefore, rests on this document alone, that is to say, he must admit that it is under this document that he has acquired the property from the whole family. This, in our opinion, means that the persons who executed the document in his favour were acting on behalf of the whole family. It follows, therefore, that the admission contained in this document must, so far as the vendee is concerned, be taken to be an admission made on behalf of the whole family and that admission is that the prior mortgage-deeds were binding on the family.

And, therefore, even though it is true that such an admission cannot operate as an estoppel against the defendant inasmuch as there was no privity of contract between the mortgagees and him, and further because the plaintiffs' position has in no way been compromised, there can be no doubt that this admission is a very strong piece of evidence in favour of the view that the transactions must have been for valid necessity, otherwise they would not have been accepted as such by all the members.

Coming to the facts, we find that the dealings really go back to a very early period. The earliest document that was executed was dated the 22nd January 1873 by Har Deo, the grandfather of the present mortgagors, in favour of one Ajit Singh, for a sum of Rs. 98 the whole of which had been paid in cash. It is true that this amount being secured on the family property cannot be treated as an antecedent debt in the strict sense of the term. But it having been borrowed as early as 1873 and evidence as to the actual necessity having disappeared, subsequent admission of its validity would be a very strong piece of evidence to be considered. This deed was followed by a mortgage-deed of the 19th May 1873 by the same mortgagor, in favour of the same person for a further sum of Rs. 200 the whole of which was either acknowledged to have been received before-hand or was paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. The third document was of the 26th January 1874 for a sum of Rs. 250 out of which Rs. 113-8 were given credit for on account of the amount due on the first mentioned document and Rs. 136-8 were received in cash. The 4th mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 400 under which Rs. 229 were paid off on account of the amount due under the deed of the 19th May 1873 and a sum of Rs. 171 was received in cash. There is a recital in this document that this sum of Rs. 171 was required for the purpose of paying Government Revenue for the June instalment and for meeting certain personal expenses.

The 5th document was dated the 5th January 1875 for a sum of Rs. 400 under which the earlier document of the 26th January 1874 was paid off and a further sum of Rs. 118 was advanced. Then we have the document of the 5th August 1875 under which the 4th and 5th mortgage-deeds were paid off and the balance was received in cash. All these transactions are transactions entered into by Hardeo, the grandfather of the mortgagors, as early as the seventies.

On the 31st January 1887 a mortgage by conditional sale for a sum of Rs. 3,100 was executed in favour of the same mortgagee, Ajit Singh, under which he was put in possession of the mortgaged properties and the amounts due on the earlier document of the 5th August 1875 was paid off. There is a further recital in this document that Rs. 505-7-3 were due on account of a Munsif's Court decree and Rs. 64-8-9 were due on account of prior debts. Rupees 150 were paid in cash. There can be no doubt that this mortgage by conditional sale was fully acted upon and the mortgagee entered into possession soon after. He and his representative have been in possession of the property since then, which means that during the whole of a period of over thirty years the mortgagors' family has allowed this property to remain out of its possession.

On the 16th June 1894 another mortgage-deed was executed by Durga Prasad, Munna Lal and Bhawani Prasad, the sons of Hardeo, in favour of one Musammat Lachmi Bai, for a sum of Rs. 6,400. Under this document Rs. 6,100 were left with the mortgagee to pay off the mortgage by conditional sale the validity of which was of course accepted and Rs. 300 were acknowledged to have been received in cash. There can be no doubt that, subsequently, Musammat Lachmi Bai, the mortgagee, paid off the prior mortgage and entered into possession of the property in place of the previous mortgagee. On the 1st of March 1897 another mortgage-deed by the same three persons was executed for a sum of Rs. 900 and the recital is to the effect that the money was required to pay off a decree for arrears of rent held by Choudhuri Sunder Singh and another and to meet certain personal expenses. The property hypothecated under this bond was the same as covered by the mortgage by conditional sale.

Up to the year 1914 no attempt was made by any member of the mortgagor's family to challenge any of these mortgage-deeds or to recover the property from the possession of the mortgagees. The family seems to have acquiesced in these transfers. A third party would, therefore, be quite justified in presuming that the debts must have been incurred for family necessity. On the second June 1914 six members of the family, namely, Bhawani Prasad, acting in his own right and as guardian of his sons Bansi Dhar and Raghubar Singh. (2) Gaya Prasad, (3) Kalka Prasad for self and as guardian of his minor son Sarup Singh, (4) Murlidhar, (5) Sheo Narain for self and as guardian of his minor sons, Sughar Singh, Babu Ram and Chute Tua and (6) Sanet Singh in his own right and as guardian of Maharaj Singh executed the documents in suit under which the amounts due under the previous mortgage-deeds of 1894 and 1897 mentioned above were left with the mortgagees to be paid of and the balance of Rs. 500 was said to have been required for purchasing corn for daily consumption and meeting the expenses of the execution and the registration of the deeds.

It was some years after these mortgage-deeds that Inayat Ilahi obtained a sale-deed on the 6th January 1919 in which there was a fresh admission on behalf of the mortgagors that the two mortgage-debts in question had been validly incurred and were binding on the family.

It is true that in a case where a mortgagee whishes to enforce a charge against the family property the burden lies on him to satisfy the Court that the mortgage transaction has been entered into for family necessity or in lieu of antecedent debt or with the consent, express or implied, of all the members of the family. In the present case we are of opinion that this burden has been sufficiently discharged. In the first place, the transactions extend back to the year 1873 and for all this long period there never has been any protest made by any member of the family. Furthermore, there is nothing to show that in the years 1894 and 1897 there were any major members of the family alive who were not parties to the transactions and whose consent ought to have been obtained and was not obtained. In fact, the ages of the various defendants as given in the plaint would rather go to show that all of them or at least most of them were not even born in those years. A long series of renewals of mortgage transactions extending for over a generation without any protest by any member of the family would show its acquiescence and raise a fair presumption that if there had not been a valid necessity for them, some objection would have been raised. The present mortgagees were not the mortgagees in the years 1894 and 1897 and so it is not a matter whithin their sepecial means of knowledge as to whether the amounts borrowed on these dates had been incurred for legal necessity. In view of the long continued acquiescence of all the members of the family, at any rate by all the adult members of the family, and the express admission contained in the sale-deed of 6th January 1919, we are of opinion that it must be held that in this case the burden of proof of legal necessity has been completely discharged. It is not now possible after the lapse of so many years to produce evidence to show for what purpose the money was borrowed or how it was actually spent by the mortgagors. All that the mortgagees are required to show is that like ordinary men they were reasonably satisfied that legal necessity must have existed. In view of the conduct of all the members of the family in allowing the property to remain out of their possession for such a long time we think that this must be taken to have been so. Even though all these sums were borrowed on the security of the family property and although there is no direct evidence to show the actual necessity to meet which all the sums were borrowed, we are of opinion that the burden of proving the existence of legal necessity must be held to have been discharged. It was to pay off these debts, and in that way to recover the property from the mortgagees, that the mortgage-deeds in suit were executed. The family cannot now be allowed to retain the benefit and repudiate the liability.

We think it right to note that in the Court below, with the exception of the transferee, only one defendant, Maharaj Singh, contested one of the suits. All the other defendants did not put in any appearance nor file any written statement. The question of want of legal necessity was a mixed question of law and fact and none of these defendants ever attempted to raise it. None of them went into the witness-box to explain away their own admissions. The plaintiffs produced some oral evidence also, which, under the circumstances, we do not propose to discuss. After the decrees in the two suits were passed, Maharaj Singh, the only defendant, who was a member of the family, submitted to the decrees and has not appealed. The persons who now appeal are the transferee, Sheikh Inayat Ilahi, and certain other defendants who did not put in an appearance in the Court below and who did not raise the question at all. Their reluctance to submit themselves to the cross-examination suggests to some extent that they did not feel confident that they would be able to explain their previous admissions. The evidence of Jhau Lal and Hardeo Sahai is to the effect that Rs. 500 were taken to meet private expenses and the expenses of registration. The recital in the deed is to the same effect. The defendants have given no oral evidence to rebut it. Their own evidence would at least have shown for what purpose Rs. 500 were required. Neither the transferee nor these other defendants, who never contested the claim, can, therefore, succeed. The result is that both these appeals fail and are hereby dismissed with costs.

But in order to have the effect of varying the rules contained in the First Schedule, the rules made under section 122 must first have been considered and submitted by a Rule Committee appointed under section 123 of the Code. [p. 331, col. 1.]

Rule 6 of Chapter VII of the Patna High Court Rules requiring a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court to be filed along wth the Memorandum of Appeal in a second appeal has not been made under section 122 of the Civil Procedure Code and has not, therefore, the effect of adding to r. 1 of O. XLI of the Code. [p. 331, col. 1.]

A second appeal filed within limitation cannot be rejected as barred by limitation merely because a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court was not filed within limitation, as required by r. 6 of Chapter VII of the Patna High Court Rules. [p. 331, col. 1.]

ORDER.—This second appeal was originally filed on the 25th November 1921 within time. The Memorandum of Appeal was accompanied by copies of the decree and the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The copy of the judgment of the Trial Court was not filed as is required by rule 6 of Chapter VII of the High Court Rules. Accordingly, the Memorandum of Appeal was returned. It was filed on the 30th November after the time for filing it had expired. It was suggested that in accordance with the order passed in a similar case in M. J. C. No. 176 of 1921 on the 29th November 1921 by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Coutts, the appeal is out of time and should be rejected.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant says that the appeal filed on the 25th November 1921 was competent under O. XLI, r. 1, which requires that only a copy of the judgment on which the decree of the lower Appellate Court sought to be set aside is founded to be filed, and does not require the filing of the judgment of the Trial Court. He further contends that the rule of this Court referred to above, No. 6, Chap. VII, cannot affect the rule of limitation and the non-compliance with that rule will not necessarily subject the appellant's appeal to be dismissed.

Reference was made to a Full Bench decision in the case of Narsingh Sahai v Sheo Prasad (1) but the question in the present case did not arise in that case except that the observation made at page 7* of the report might throw some light as to the power of the High Court to make rules so as to alter the Rules of Limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act.

However, the decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in the case of Chunilal Jethabhai v Barot Dahyabhai Amulakh (2) is on all fours with the present one and fully supports the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant.

Rule 6, Chapter VII, of this Court's Rules was based upon the old Code of Civil Procedure, section 652 of that Code was held not to give power to the High Court to frame a rule modifiying any rule or mode as to computation of limitation prescribed expressly or by necessary implication in the Limitation Act; and that the rules framed by the High Court must be "consistent with the Code"; in other words, the rule was held not to annul, modify or add to section 541 of the old Code requiring the appellant to file a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court failing which the presentation of the appeal would be deemed to be incompetent. The present r. 1 of O. XLI, has not made any change in regard to section 652 of the old Code and, therefore, will be governed by the above cited Bombay case. No doubt, under the present Code, section 122 gives power to the High Court to make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subordinate to their superintendence and by such rules "to annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules of the First Schedule". Accordingly, this High Court has power to make rules under section 122 so as to annul, alter or add to r. 1 of O. XLI of the First Schedule to the Code. Rule 6 of Chapter VII of this Court has not, however, been made under section 122 for which a special provision has been made in rules 123 to 128. In fact, the rules under section 122 in order to have the effect of varying the rules in the First Schedule to the Code must first have been considered and submitted by a Rule Committee appointed under section 123. Section 124 says that "before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration." Therefore, there is a good deal of force in the contention of the learned Vakil that r. 6 of Chapter VII cannot apply to the present case.

An exactly similar rule in the Bombay High Court was construed in the said Full Bench case empowering the Registrar to refuse to admit an appeal unless it was accompanied by the judgment of the Trial Court, but not to throw out the appeal as being time-barred.

The High Court Rule referred to was apparently framed under section 130 of the Code and the Court Rules framed under that section relate to matters "other than procedure".

We do not think that the order in M. J. C. No 176 of 1921 was intended to decide any quest on of limitation. We, therefore, hold that the appeal is not out of time.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1499 OF 1921.

March 28, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

Musammat SARJO KUAR AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sheikh ENAIT AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pleadings—Declaratory suit—Alternative prayer for joint possession—Plaintiff, whether can claim joint possession as additional relief in appeal.

In a village owned by a number of co sharers, some of the co-sharers granted perpetual leases to the defendants. Other co-sharers sued for a declaration that these leases were improper, null and void and unenforceable. They added an alternative prayer for a decree for joint possession with the other co-sharer-defendants. The Trial Court granted the declaration asked for. In appeal, the plaintiffs prayed for joint possession by ejectment of the lessee-defendants, not by way of an alternative relief, but in addition to the declaration already granted, alleging that that their prayer for a simple declaration alone was barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act:

Held, that the prayer for ejectment could not be granted under the circumstances, as it had been preferred in the plaint only as an alternative, in the event of the Court's holding that a mere suit for declaration did not lie. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpore, dated the 14th July 1921.

FACTS.—The village in question is owned by a number of co-sharers, but there is no Lambardar. The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 3 to 20 are co-sharers. The waste land in the village is undivided, and co-sharers are entitled by custom to take possession of pieces of this waste land and bring them into their exclusive use, by planting trees thereon or bringing them under cultivation. One co-sharer, defendant No. 19, on 19th November 1917 gave a perpetual lease of a portion of this parti land to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, claiming to be in exclusive possession of the same. On 27th February 1919 the said lessees further obtained a perpetual lease of the same land from some other co-sharer-defendants. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the perpetual lease granted to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were illegal and void. They further said, that "if for any reason the passing of a declaratory decree be not thought proper", the Court may grant them a decree for joint possession. Both the Courts granted the declaration that the perpetual leases are illegal and void, that the lessees are tenants-at-will; but have refused the relief for joint possession. Hence the appeal.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants—The Trial Court refused the decree for joint possession on the ground that the leases being leases of agricultural land, a Civil Court is not competent to give such a decree; and the lower Appellate Court has simply said that in view of the ruling in Nihal Chand v. Rustam Ali Khan (1) such a relief cannot be granted. It is submitted that the lower Courts have taken a wrong view of law, and a decree for joint possession not only can be given but ought to be given. The leases having been declared illegal and void, they are avoided not only from the date of the decree but from the date of their inception. This being so, the lessees are not tenants-at-will but mere trespassers from the date of their entry on the land, and they can be ejected by the Civil Court. The Trial Court appears to have based its conclusions on Bhola Nath v. Buskin (2), the decision in which case is based on the Privy Council ruling in Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (3), but this decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council has been explained in Jagar Nath Ojha v. Ramphal (4), which is an authority for the fact that joint possession can be given not only in cases where the plaintiff who was in possession has been dispossessed but also cases where he never was in possession. A decree for joint possession was also granted in Bhairon Rai v. Saran Rai (5), Nannki Debi v. Daulat Singh (6), Bishcshar Singh v. Hanuman Singh (7) and Sarbji Singh v. Raj Kumar Rai (8). The case relied on by the lower Appellate Court, viz., Nihal Chand v. Rustam Ali Khan (1), gives no reasons for the view held by the learned Judges. The lessees have, by securing perpetual leases from some of the co-sharers, attempted to deprive the plaintiffs and some other defendants of the benefit they could have derived from the use of the land.

[Piggott, J.—But the defendant lessees have made a profitable use of the land which hitherto was lying waste.].

It is submitted that the idea of profitable use of the waste land is entirely foreign to the right of a co-sharer to demand that a trespasser must be ejected. This right is an absolute right. Section 194 of the Tenancy Act lays down that "all things required or permitted to be done by the possessors of a right, title or interest shall be done by them conjointly unless they have appointed an agent to act on behalf of them all." The section is mandatory. That is why the leases have been declared illegal. Such leases are void not only in respect of the persons who were no parties to their execution, but even in respect of those who executed them. I rely on Jagan Nath v. Har Gopal (9) Bansidhar v. Dip Singh (10), Eyunni Raghavacharyulu v. Epuri Govindasari (11). The case of such leases is analogous to that of an illegal alienation by a member of a Hindu joint family or a Hindu widow, which when avoided is invalid in respect of all members of the joint family and not only the transferor. If leases like the present were to hold good, it would open a door to fraud of co-sharers who could, by executing such leases, deprive other co-sharers of their legitimate rights.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Respondent.—Before the case-law is discussed it is necessary to clearly grasp the facts of the case as found by the lower Courts. The constitution of the village is that the co-sharers have divided the culturable land in pattis, but the parti land is common and has been lying waste. Only now and then a co-sharer has taken possession of a small piece by bringing it under cultivation or by planting trees thereon, and his exclusive possession has not been disturbed. The question, therefore, which arises is whether a co-sharer who can take possession of a piece of land and keep it exclusively to himself, can also let out that piece and remain the exclusive landlord of his tenant. It is submitted, under the circumstances of the case, he can. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 thus are tenants of their lessors only and the plaintiffs are entitled only to a declaration as to their title, but not to a decree for joint possession. The plaintiffs can hold their lessors to account in a suit for profits; but nothing more.

It is submitted that, in any case, the plaintiffs-appellants are not entitled to a decree for joint possession, inasmuch as the principal relief they claimed was one for declaration, and the relief for joint possession was only prayed for in the alternative. The plaintiffs must be held down to their own pleadings, and the declaratory relief having been granted, the relief for joint possession must be refused. Further, it would only be equitable to refuse the prayer for joint possession inasmuch as the lessees have by bringing into cultivation a land which lay fallow, have conferred a boon not only on their lessors but on the entire proprietary body.

As a strict question of law, it is submitted that the decision in Watson & Co v. Ramchund Dutt (3) followed in Bhola Nath v. Buskin (2) and many other similar cases such as Jagannath Singh v. Jainath Singh (12) lays down the correct proposition of law. The case in Jagar Nath Ojha v. Ramphal (4) is clearly distinguishable. The facts were peculiar. The property in suit belonged to one Lachmi Ojha. On his death it passed to his widow and on her death to the appellant, to respondent and to some others. As the plaintiff did not obtain possession, he sued for it, and he was entitled to a decree for joint possession. It is are that this was a proper case for such a decree, Bhairon Rai v. Saran Rai (5) is a case in which plaintiff was in actual possession and had been dispossessed. It was, therefore, held that he was entitled to joint possession. Nannhi Debi v. Daulat Singh (6) has been overruled in Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh (13). Bisheshar Singh v. Hanuman Singh (7) and Sarabjit Singh v. Raj Kumar Rai (8) are again cases in which the plaintiffs, who jointly with defendants, were in actual physical possession and were dispossessed. The case in Raja Ram Misra v. Lalji Misra (14) is also a similar case. Thus, a review of the entire case-law establishes the following propositions, viz: (a) if the plaintiff was in actual physical possession jointly with the defendant, and was illegally ousted by the defendant, he is entitled to be restored to his former position, and the Court will grant a decree for joint possession. But (b) if the plaintiff was never in actual physical possession, he will be entitled to a declaratory decree only and not one for joint physical possession. The present case evidently falls under the second category, and the decree for joint possession was rightly refused.

It is further submitted that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 can by no means be called trespassers. A trespasser is a person who enters upon the land in a manner contrary to law, i.e., the essential ingredient of trespass is the illegality of his act at the time of his entry. Any subsequent declaration would not make the entry illegal The effect of the perpetual leases being declared invalid is to make the defendants tenants-at-will, liable to ejectment in accordance with provisions of law Further, after the declaration of the invalidity of the leases the position of the parties is this, that, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, the leases are totally void, but so far as the defendant-lessors are concerned, they could not be heard in a Court of Law if they were to come as plaintiffs and try to eject the lessees, i. e., the lessees could successfully put the leases in defence against the lessors, though not against the lessors The defendant-lessees could not, therefore, be treated as trespassers. The analogy of alienation by a member of a Hindu joint family or a Hindu widow is quite inapplicable to the circumstances of this case inasmuch as a joint Hindu or a Hindu widow has no right to treat a particular piece of property as his or her own to the exclusion of the rest; whereas, on the facts found in this case, a co-sharer who takes possession of a piece of patti land is entitled to exclusive possession of the same.

Upon the above observations, it is clear that the principle of law applied by the lower Court, viz, that contained in Nihal Chand v Rustam Ali Khan (1), holds good, and a decree for joint physical possession and ejectment of defendants-lessees cannot be passed. A prayer for such a relief means asking the Civil Courts to pass an order which is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. And it has been established by a series of rulings of this Court the Civil Courts will refuse to pass such an order.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, in reply, referred to Eyunni Raghavacharyulu v. Epuri Govindasari. (11).

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal which could never have come into Court if the plaintiffs had been definitely held to their own pleadings, as they certainly ought to have been. It appears that in the village in suit there was a certain area of waste land, appertaining to a sahamilat patti the proprietary rights in which vested jointly in twenty or more co-sharers. One of these determined to bring a number of plots of this waste land under cultivation; but instead of occupying them himself he granted a perpetual lease of the same to two lessees. About a year and a quarter later the lessees, finding that their rights were being questioned, induced seven more of the co-sharers in the patti to grant them another perpetual lease. The present suit was brought by two co-sharers (subsequently joined by three others) who were dissatisfied with this arrangement They impleaded as defendants the two lessees, the lessors, and all the remaining co-sharers who had not joined in the suit. The principal relief sought was a declaration that the two leases above referred to "are improper, null and void, and are not fit to be enforced." There was an alternative prayer for a decree for joint possession, in favour of the plaintiffs and all the co-sharer defendants, "if, for any reason, the passing of a declaratory decree be not thought proper by the Court."

The suit was effectively contested by the lessees-defendants alone. They set up a plea which has been found to be unsustainable, alleging a complete partition of the waste lands amongst the co-sharers. They neglected to set up any alternative case, in the event of the Court's holding that the lessors-defendants had exceeded their rights in granting leases in perpetuity; and it seems to me that this was directly due to the frame of the plaint, in which the prayer for joint possession by actual ejectment of the lessees was preferred in the alternative only, and not as a relief consequential on the declaration of the invalidity of the leases.

The fourth issue fixed by the Trial Court was:—"To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?" The Court found the plaintiffs entitled to the declaration sought for and framed its decree accordingly. Incidentally, it remarked that the actual ejectment of the lessees-defendants could only be carried out by the Revenue Court.

The latter appealed, and tried to raise the plea that the entire suit as framed was not cognizable by the Civil Court: this plea was repelled and their appeal dismissed. The plaintiffs also appealed. They very coolly alleged that their own prayer for relief by way of a simple declaration was barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and now prayed for joint possession by actual ejectment of the lessees-defendants in addition to the declaration already granted, and not by way of alternative,

The learned Subordinate Judge devoted almost the whole of his judgment to the appeal of the lessees, he disposed of the plaintiffs' appeal in a few lines, quoting authority for the proposition that the ejectment of the lessees could not be ordered in a suit like the present, but neglecting to point out that the prayer for ejectment had only been preferred in the plaint as an alternative, in the event of the Court's holding that a mere suit for a declaration would not lie.

In appeal to this Court the plaintiffs rely mainly on the case of Jagar Nath Ojha v. Ramphal (4). There were no lessees concerned in that case and no question arose as to the existence of an agricultural tenancy, I should not myself have ordered the actual ejectment of the lessees-defendants, because I do not regard them as "mere trespassers;" but I do not think this is a proper case for a general examination of the question of the right of one co-sharer in joint lands to appropriate to his personal use a portion of the area constructively in the possession of all the joint owners, where they are none of them making any particular use of it. In this litigation such questions could only arise in the event of the Courts holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a mere declaration without consequential relief, this contingency has not arisen, and the plaintiffs cannot complain of the fact. I dismiss their appeal with costs.

CIVIL APPLICATION No. 147 OF 1922.

January 31, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Simpson, A. J. C., and Mr. Dalal, A. J. C.

Raja BHAGWAN BAKHSH SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT

versus

SURENDRA BIKRAM SINGH—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, O. XXXIX, O. XL—Security for mesne profits—Order not provided in Code—Inherent power of Court—Appeal—Revision—Possession—Mutation.

No Court ought to allow itself to be prevented from doing substantial justice merely because it cannot find a section of the Civil Procedure Code under which its order will fall. [p. 338, col. 1.]

Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Chaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited, 41 Ind. Cas. 598; 44 C. 929; 21 C. W. N. 877; 26 C. L. J. 49, relied upon.

The Civil Procedure Code does not provide for an order for the taking of security for mesne profits. But if such an order is passed by a Court in exercise of its inherent power under section 151 of the Code, the order is not appealable. [p. 337, col. 2.]

The position of a trustee in possession of the trust property is wholly different from the position of the full owner. Therefore, while it is always reasonable to take security from a person who holds property in trust, it is a different thing to call a man to account for his expenditure of his own income. [p. 338, col. 2.]

Sivaji Raja Sahib v. Aiswariyanandaji Sahib, 29 Ind. Cas. 485; 29 M. L. J. 209; 18 M. L. T. 155, referred to.

If in a suit for possession and mesne profits a Court, acting under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, directs security for mesne profits to be taken yearly during the pendency of the suit and in fact takes security for one year's mesne profits from the defendant, who is in possession of the property in dispute, and whose possession has been recognised by a mutation order, it does not act without jurisdiction, but if its order is not essential for the ends of justice, it acts with material irregularity in inventing a form of relief not expressly mentioned in the Code. [p. 337, col. 2; p. 338, col. 1.]

Section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to receive rather a liberal than a narrow interpretation. [p. 539, col. 1.]

Bai Atrani v. Deepsing Barla, 33 Ind. Cas. 358; 40 B. 86; 17 Bom. L. R. 1097, relied upon.

Therefore, where a Subordinate Court has an express jurisdiction to pass an appealable order, but goes out of its way to invent a novel form of procedure, and consequently makes an order for which no appeal is provided in the Code, the High Court should consider whether the course adopted by the Subordinate Court was really necessary, and ought not to hold itself precluded from setting aside the order by taking a strict and narow view of the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 338, col. 2; p. 339, col. 1.]

If an order passed by a Subordinate Court under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, in exercise of its inherent power, is not open to revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court in dealing with such an order may exercise its own inherent power under section 151 of the Code. [p. 338, cols. 1 & 2.]

Obiter.—Possession is prima facie evidence of ownership, and an order of mutation is a determination of the question which of the parties is entitled to possession. [p. 337, col. 1.]

Surendra Bikram Singh v. Empreor, 73 Ind. Cas. 153; 25 O. C. 242; (1922) A. I. R. (O.) 300, referred to.

Application against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 17th August 1922.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Sheikh Ali Abbas, for the Applicant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Daya Kishan Seth, Oudh Bahadur, Hargobind Dayal Srivastava and Bisheshar Nath, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.

Simpson, A. J. C.—This is an application in revision. Raja Inder Bikram Singh, deceased, was the Taluqdar of Itaunja. He died on 22nd January 1921.

There were two claimants to his estate. The present applicant, Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh, claimed as next of kin; the opposite party, Surendra Bikram Singh, minor, claimed as the adopted son of the deceased Taluqdar.

The District Authorities were disposed at first to take the adopted son under the Court of Wards, and Mr. Macleod, the Manager of the Court of Wards, was directed to take possession of the estate.

It appeared, however, that there was a flaw in the adoption, at least in so far as the Taluqa itself was concerned, arising out of the provisions of section 29 of Act I of 1869, under which the adoption must be by registered instrument. Both parties claimed to be in possession and applied for mutation. Both parties also filed applications under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate was unable to decide anything on the basis of possession, Mr. Macleod having taken possession shortly after the death of the late Taluqdar. He, therefore, acted under section 146 and put Mr. Macleod in possession again as a Receiver subject to the control of the Magistrate.

The Revenue Court was in the same position and had to decide the question of mutation on the basis of title. This enquiry was keenly contested and occupied some time. The deed of the declaration of adoption dated 13th January 1921, nine days before the late Taluqdar's death, but not registered until 24th February 1921, was produced, but the learned Assistant Collector found against its genuineness.

It was held that the adoption had taken place and that the adopted son could inherit other properties but that it was invalid in respect of the Taluqa itself. Accordingly, the present applicant, Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh, got mutation in respect of the Taluqa while the opposite party Surendra Bikram Singh, got mutation in respect of the non-Taluqdari estate.

Bikram Singh appealed to the Deputy Commissoner who came to the same finding as regards the genuineness of the deed of adoption and accordingly dismissed the appeal. Bikram Singh appealed to the Commissioner but on 7th March 1922 he withdrew this appeal because he had filed the present suit. The date of the institution of the present suit is 6th March 1922.

In the plaint Bikram Singh sued for possession of Taluqdari and non-Taluqdari properties but as he was already in possession of the non-Taluqdari property he afterwards cut this out of the plaint. He also asked for mense profits both past and future of the Taluqdari property.

Having got mutation in respect of the Taluqdari property, the present applicant applied to the Magistrate (who was holding it under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code) to give him possession. The Magistrate passed an order accordingly. There was an application to the Deputy Commissioner which he dismissed on 8th March 1922. and there was an application in revision to this Court which was dismissed on 19th May 1922. The result of these proceedings was that the applicant remained in possession of the Taluqdari property.

On 11th March 1922 Bikaram Singh applied to have a Receiver appointed.

The learned Subordinate Judge wrote a very lengthy order. He did appoint a Receiver for certain properties with which we are not now concerned, but as regards the Taluqa he refused to appoint a Receiver, mainly on the ground that the applicant had failed to make out a prima facie title to the property.

In discussing one of the grounds pressed by the plaintiff, namely, that the defendant is a poor man and his property is subject to mortgages, he said that this was not in itself a sufficient ground for the appointment of a Receiver, and added, "the plaintiff may apply for security if he thinks that the defendant would not pay the mesne profits if the plaintiff's suit would be decreed. I would have disposed of the question of security at once but the application under consideration is silent on this point. There is no prayer for security in it and the defendant cannot be taken by surprise."

On this hint the plaintiff applied to have security taken for mesne profits, and the learned Subordinate Judge passed the order which is now objected to by the defendant. The mesne profits were taken by agreement of the parties to be Rs. 75,082-5 per annum. The defendant was ordered to give security to the extent of one year's mesne profits, and it was added that if the suit would not be finished within one year, it would be open to the plaintiff to apply for additional security.

Against this order the present application has been filed. Our decision is, that the order cannot stand. It is a very harsh order. The defendant is in possession of the estate, and possession is prima facie evidence of ownership. It has already been decided between the parties by this Court that the order of mutation was a determination of the question which of the parties is entitled to possession [Surendra Bikram Singh v. Emperor (1).] So the defendants' position is stronger than that of a person who is merely found to be in possession. Yet the defendant is to be prevented from enjoying the income of the estate except on condition that he files security for the whole of that income, for the expression "mesne profits" covers the whole net income of the estate.

The reason for this order is the possibility that the plaintiff may win his case and obtain a decree for mesne profits and may then find himself unable to realize his decree from the defendant. But there is no reason to presume that the plaintiff will win this case.

If the Court is to presume anything before the case is decided, the presumption must be based on the possession of the defendant and the decision of the Revenue Court. If the defendant should win his case, he will not be able to recover from the plaintiff anything which he may have spent in furnishing this security.

We note that he has furnished security for the first year, and that he has had to divide the sum up among several sureties. It is quite probable that he has had to pay for it. The order contemplates the filing of fresh security, year after year, if the litigation should be protracted. It may involve serious hardship to the defendant.

Secondly, the procedure adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge is a novel one.

The Code of Civil Procedure has provided for cases of this kind.

O. XL provides for the appointment of a Receiver; O. XXXIX provides for temporary injunctions.

The Code does not provide for the taking of security for mesne profits.

The learned Subordinate Judge does not profess to act under any power expressly conferred by the Code, but falls back upon the inherent power of the Court.

It is this which raises a point of some difficulty in disposing of the present application.

If the order had been passed under O. XL, or under O. XXXIX, it would have been subject to appeal. But no appeal is provided for such an order as has been passed here, because the Code has not contemplated any such order. We have to deal with the matter, therefore, unless we also invoke our inherent powers, in revision, and our powers in revision are defined under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. We cannot act in revision at all unless the Subordinate Court appears to have (a) exercised a jurisdiction not vested by law, (b) failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or (c) acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

It has been strenuously argued before us that this order is without jurisdiction. But we are not prepared to go so far. We do hold, however, that the Court acted with material irregularity in inventing a form of relief not expressly mentioned in the Code, when such action was not essential in order to do justice in the case.

We desire to say as little as possible in the way of limiting the inherent powers of the Courts. Under the older Code these powers were not mentioned but it was repeatedly held that such powers existed. They are recognised in the present Procedure Code under section 151, which runs as follows:—

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

This section to a certain extent codifies the inherent power itself.

The inherent power can be exercised to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.

There was no question of abuse of the process of the Court. The order can only be defended if it is necessary for the ends of justice.

As we have said already, we are not prepared to say that the order lacks jurisdiction because it is dangerous to attempt definition of the inherent power of the Court.

No Court ought to allow itself to be prevented from doing substantial justice merely because that Court cannot find a section of the Civil Procedure Code under which its order will fall. Abdul Karim Abu Ahmad Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (2).

Whether there are, or whether there are not, any cases in which an order to file security for mesne profits would be a proper order, we are not prepared to say. But we are quite clear that in this case the order ought not to have been passed.

Suits for possession of landed property usually include a prayer for mesne profits.

Although the plaintiff has often a reasonable fear that if he gets a decree he will fail to realise mesne profits, (because the money would be spent up by the party in possession who may not possess any other property) yet the Code has made no express provisions for such an order. We are unable to find any reported case in which such an order has been passed.

The learned Subordiante Judge has founded himself upon Sivaji Raja Sahib v. Aiswariyanandaji Sahib (3).

In that case the defendants were called upon (a) to furnish quarterly accounts of their management to the Court, (b) to take permission of the Court for any lease for over a year, (c) to furnish security for Rs. 10,000. But that was a case of trust property. The defendants were not entitled to any beneficial interest in the property. The order of the Madras High Court obtains some support from O. XXXIX, r. 10. The position of a trustee in possession of the trust property is wholly different from the position of the full owner. It is always reasonable to take security from a person who holds property in trust. It is a different thing to call a man to account for his expenditure of his own income.

Our finding, therefore, is that the order objected to is bad because it is not an order provided for by the Civil Procedure Code, and, regarded as an exercise of the inherent power of the Court, the order was not demanded for the ends of the justice. We hold that this fact constitutes a material irregularity, sufficient to justify action under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

And, even if it were not so, this is a case in which we should ourselves be prepared to make an order based on our inherent power under the same section 151. Where a Subordinate Court has an express jurisdiction to pass an appealable order, but goes out of its way to invent a novel form of procedure, and consequently makes an order for which no appeal is provided in the Code, the High Court will be ready to consider whether this course was really necessary, and will not hold itself precluded from setting aside the order by taking a strict view of the provisions of section 115.

(3) 29 Ind. Cas. 485; 29 M. L. J. 209; 18 M. L. T. 155

It was said in Bai Atrani v. Deepsing Baria (4)

"Inasmuch as section 115 is merely an empowering section granting certain jurisdiction to the High Court, and as the use or exercise of that jurisdiction will, within the prescribed limits, be regulated by the discretion of the High Court, the section ought to receive rather a liberal than a narrow interpretation."

For these reasons we set aside the order for security. The applicant will get his costs in both the Courts.

Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Pre-emption, provision for—Exteraneous matters also included—Record of custom—Presumption—Pre-emption—Transfer of mortgaged property—Consideration equivalent to mortgage-money—Transaction, whether sale and pre-emptible.

If a wajib-ul-arz contains matters which could not possibly be the subject of a custom then the ordinary presumption that the wajib-ul-arz is a record of custom is overturned. [p. 339, col. 2.]

Fazal Hussain v. Muhammad Sharif, 24 Ind. Cas. 464; 36 A. 471; 12 A. L. J. 800 and Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nisar, 48 Ind. Cas. 220; 16 A. L. J. 879, followed.

But if a wajib-ul-arz, besides mentioning pre-emption, refers to matters such as the manner of inheritance, the power of the widow in possession after her husband's death, the declaration of the manner in which property descends when a deceased co-sharer has left two widows and the exclusion from inheritance of daughters and daughter's sons, i.e., matters which, though not usually customs, can form the subject of customs, it cannot be said that the wajib-ul-arz is necessarily not a record of custom. [p. 340, col. 1]

If the consideration for a transfer of property is only sufficient to pay off a prior mortgage on the property, the personal liability of the mortgagor being still alive on the date of the sale, and the market-value of the property is not higher than the amount of consideration, it cannot be said that the transfer does not amount to a sale, on the ground that the vendor gets nothing under it, for he gets rid of the liability under the mortgage. Such a transaction is a sale and is subject to pre-emption. [p. 340, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated the 1st of July 1921.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Two points have been discussed before us in this second appeal. The first point is whether the Courts below were right in holding that the wajib-ul-arz of 1863 was evidence of a custom.

It is contended before us that, because the wajib-ul-arz in question is so framed as to refer to matters other than pre-emption, it ought not to be treated as a record of custom but merely as a record of contract.

It has, no doubt, been held in a number of cases which have been consistently followed that, if a wajib-ul-arz contains matters which could not possibly be the subject of a custom then the ordinary presumption that the wajib-ul-arz is a record of custom is overturned. That principle is laid down in the case of Fazal Hussain v. Muhammad Sharif (1). It was also enunciated in another case reported as Surajbali Singh v. Mohammad Nisar (2). In this latter case, we may observe, the wajib-ul-arz upon which reliance was placed in addition to providing for pre-emption made provisions for other matters such as redemption of property mortgaged by a person who had no interest in the right to redeem. Clearly, in cases of this latter description the wajib-ul-arz does contain matters which cannot possibly be the subject of custom.

(1) 24 Ind. Cas 464; 36 A. 471; 12 A. L. J. 800.
(2) 48 Ind. Cas 220; 16 A. L. J. 879.

Coming now to the wajib-ul-arz with which we are concerned in this case there can be no doubt that other matters as well as pre-emption are referred to. We find a reference to the manner of inheritance. We find reference to the powers of the widow who is in possession after her husband's death. There are declarations as to how property descends when a deceased co-sharer had left two widows. There are also provisions for the exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons from inheritance. It cannot, however, be said that the matters which we have just referred to cannot be the subject of custom, for it is notorious that there is a widespread custom, for example, of the exclusion of daughters and daughters' sons from inheritance, another well-known custom is the custom of stri-bant or the division of property in accordance with the number of wives.

Looking at this waj b-ul-arz we are unable to hold that it falls within the purview of the rulings to which we have referred and we consider, therefore, that the Courts below were justified in holding that the wajib-ul-arz was a record of custom.

The only other point raised is with regard to certain findings of fact of the Courts below.

The sale in this case purported to be for a sum of Rs. 1,200. It was recited in the sale-deed that a sum of Rs. 550 was being left with the purchaser to redeem a prior mortgage and the balance of Rs. 650 was to be paid before the Registering Officer. Both the Courts below are agreed that the money was handed over to the vendor before the Registering Officer but they are also agreed that after it had been so made over it was returned again to the purchaser. On the findings, therefore, of the Courts below this transfer was made for a sum of Rs. 550 only.

In these circumstances it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that there was no sale at all inasmuch as the vendor got nothing. We see, however, that the learned Judge of the Court below has recorded a finding that the market-value of the property sold was not more than Rs. 500. If, therefore, by this transfer the vendor was getting rid of the liability to pay a sum of Rs. 550 it cannot be said that there was no consideration for the transfer. We may observe that the prior mortgage in respect of which Rs. 550 was left with the purchaser was of the year 1917 and that the suit to enforce the personal obligation of the mortgagor was well within time. It seems to us that the argument that this transfer does not amount to a sale cannot succeed.

The result is that we dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees, if any, on the higher scale.

Landlord and tenant—Rent suit—Ejectment proceedings—Suit for declaration of under-proprietary rights—Limitation, commencement of—Cause of action, continuation of—Shankalap koshist —Under-proprietary tenure—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120.

In 1914 defendant brought a suit under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act for the recovery of rent in respect of the land in suit against the plaintiffs. In that suit interest was also claimed on the rent due. The plaintiffs pleaded that they being under-proprietors of the land in question were not liable to pay interest. On 14th August 1914 the Court decided on the basis of entries in the Revenue papers that the plaintiffs were not under-proprietors of the land and were consequently liable to pay interest. In 1915 defendant instituted proceedings in ejectment against the plaintiffs under the provisions of the Rent Act. The basis of the proceedings was the decree in the rent-suit. Ejectment was ordered by the Rent Court on 30th April 1915. On 6th December 1920 the plaintiffs filed the present suit for a declaration that they were under-proprietors of the land. It was contended by the defendant that the suit was barred by time:

Held, that the limitation for the suit being six years under Art. 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, it was not time-barred, inasmuch as time was to be calculated from the date of the decision of the ejectment proceedings, as those proceedings were corollary to the decree in the suit for recovery of rent and were expressly founded on the decree, and as the cause of action which arose on the passing of the decree in the rent-suit continued until the order in the ejectment proceedings was pronounced. [p. 342, col. 1.]

A shankalap koshist may or may not be an under-proprietary tenure. The expression is not a term of art always denoting an under-proprietary tenure. [p. 342, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 10th February 1922, setting aside an order of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 31st May 1921.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Sultanputr for a declaration that they were under-proprietors of 44 bighas 15 biswansis of land specified in the list attached to the plaint situate in Mauza Shafipur, Pargana Chanda, in the District of Sultanpur. The defendant is the proprietor of the village. So much of the defence w th which I am now concerned in this appeal was that the relief as to the declaration was barred by limitation and that the plaintiffs were not under-proprietors of the land in suit. Both these points were decided in favour of the defendant by the Court of first instance with the result that the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur the decree of the Court of first instance was reversed and the suit was decreed.

The first question to be considered in the appeal is whether the suit is barred by time. In the year 1914 the defendant brought a suit under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act for the recovery of rent in respect of the land in suit against the plaintiffs. In that suit interest was also claimed on the rent due. The plaintiffs pleaded that they, being under-proprietors of the land in question, were not liable to pay interest. The Court decided on the basis of entries in some of the revenue papers that the plaintiffs were not under-proprietors of this land and were consequently liable to pay interest. The decision is dated the 14th August 1914. It is not shown that the decree for the arrears of rent including the interest payable thereon was ever put into execution by the present defendant. In 1915, however, he instituted proceedings in ejectment against the present plaintiffs under the provisions of section 52 of Oudh Rent Act. The basis of the proceedings was the decree in the rent-suit. Ejectment was ordered by the Rent Court on the 30th April 1915.

The plaint in the present suit was originally filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur on 13th August 1920. The value of the property in suit for the purposes of jurisdiction was fixed at Rs. 4,000. The defendant objected to the valuation made by the plaintiffs. At the hearing of the suit in that Court on the 6th December 1920 the plaintiffs admitted the value of the property as given by the defendant to be Rs. 1,000. The plaint was accordingly returned by the Subordinate Judge for presentation to the proper Court and it was presented on the same day in the Court of the Munsif. The plaintiffs base their cause of action on the decision of the Revenue Court in the ejectment proceedings dated the 30th April 1915 and if that basis is correct the suit was well within time when it was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and also when it was filed in the Court of the Munsif, the period of limitation being six years under Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act. The defendant, however, contends in this Court that the cause of action for the suit arose when the decision relating to the question of interest was passed adversely to the plaintiffs on the 14th August 1914. The plaintiffs in the alternative urged that if the cause of action arose on the date when the decision in the rent-suit was passed the suit as originally filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was within time and they are entitled in calculating the limitation to the exclusion of the period during which the suit was pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge under the provisions of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the ejectment proceedings gave a fresh cause of action to the plaintiffs and, therefore, the suit was within time. He did not consider the question of the applicability or otherwise of the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act.

I am of opinion that the time should be calculated from the date of the decision of the ejectment proceedings. These proceedings were a corollary to the decree in the suit for recovery of rent and they were expressly founded on that decree. The cause of action which arose on the passing of the decree in the rent-suit continued until the order in the ejectment proceedings was pronounced. It is common ground that, in spite of the decree in the suit for the recovery of rent and in spite of the order for ejectment in the subsequent proceedings, the plaintiffs are still in possession of the land in suit and have paid neither rent nor interest under the previous decree. On these grounds I hold that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by time.

The second point urged is that the plaintiffs are not under-proprietors of the land in suit. It appears that at the first Regular Settlement, 1877, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant moved the Settlement Court for assessment of rent on the entire land held by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs. The land in suit is only a part of that holding. The agent of the taluqdar stated that, "originally there was a shankalap koshist of bighas 131-4 given by the ancestors of my client to Har Nandan Goshain" and that the defendants in those proceedings "were the descendants of the three sons of Har Nandan Goshain and held the land in rent-free possession up to date but the taluqdar now desires that the shankalapdars should pay the muka jama.....and that this should be formally declared as otherwise defendants won't pay." The Court in its judgment dated the 5th July 1877 held that there was no question as to the existence of the shankalap and all that the taluqdar desired was to have his right to demand rent on the shankalap holding declared. Finally, a decree in the following terms was passed:—

"Declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff who is declared to have a right as taluqdar to demand rent from defendants shankalapdars on bighas 131-4, such rent being calculated as the incidence of the Government demand plus 10 per cent., or Rs. 197 per annum during the currency of present Regular Settlement." In the khewat of 1265 Fasli the ancestors of the plaintiffs were recorded as shankalapdars but in the subsequent years they were entered in the Revenue papers in respect of the land as qabzadars.

Now a shankalap koshist may or may not be an under-proprietary tenure. The expression is not a term of art always denoting an under-proprietary tenure. There is an exhaustive discussion of the nature of this tenure in the introduction of Mr. Sykes' well-known book, Compendium of the Oudh Taluqdari Law, on pages 181 to 183. I have to determine in the present case whether the admitted shankalap koshist was an under-proprietary tenure or not. The statement of the agent already recorded distinctly shows that the land was held as shankalap koshist rent-free by the ancestors of the plaintiffs from a time long before the year 1877 when a claim was made by the taluqdars for assessment of rent only. The Settlement decree, therefore, did not for the first time create, the tenure, of shankalap koshist but merely recognised it as a pre-existing tenure on the admission made by the taluqdar's agent. The assessment of rent, however, was made on the footing of the holding being an under-proprietary tenure. Rule 7, sub-rule 3, of the Rules laid down in the Schedule of Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866 is as follows:—"In no case can the amount payable during the currency of the Settlement by the under-properietor to the taluqdar be less than the amount of the revised demand, with the addition of ten per cent." This method of assessment of rent is to my mind a clear indication of the holding having been treated as an under-proprietary tenure. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court is not incorrect and should be affirmed.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Construction of document—Muhammadan Law—Gift in favour of private individual—Gift, description of, as waqf, effect of.

Where in a deed of gift in favour of a private individual, the donor, in the course of the document, describes it as waqf, the mere use of the word waqf would not, in the absence of a consecration, necessarily involve a transfer of ownership in favour of the deity such as is required to constitute a valid dedication under Muhammadan Law.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar at Meerut.

Messrs. Ibn-i-Ahmad and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar (with him Dr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised by this appeal is whether a certain deed of the 27th of March 1880 was a waqf under Muhammadan Law, that is to say, a dedication of property for charitable and religious purposes, or was a gift in favour of certain specified individuals. Under the terms of the deed certain named persons were to take the property becoming owners thereof immediately and they and their descendants after them were to enjoy the property for ever without any power to alienate. If it was in fact a transfer by way of gift in favour of these specified donees, then, as the Court below has rightly held, the condition against alienation fails and the descendants of the donees take the property with full ownership and power of alienation. If, on the other hand, the document in question is in law a deed of waqf other consequences follow. It is quite true that the word "waqf" is used in more than one place by the executant in describing the document itself. On the other hand, there is nothing in the wording of the deed which can possibly be stretched so as to constitute a transfer of ownership in favour of the deity. It is expressly and in terms a gift to three specified persons. It has been contended before us that the use of word "waqf" overrides all other terms in the document, and necessarily involves a transfer of ownership in favour of the deity such as is required to constitute a valid dedication under Muhammadan Law. We are not prepared to accept this contention. It has been urged once already in this Court in connection with this very document before a Bench of which one of us was a member, and was summarily rejected. The crucial passage, quoted from Mr. Syed Ameer Ali's book on Muhammadan Law, at page 217 of the 4th Edition, is in the following words: "when the word waqf, or any of its synonyms in vogue, is used in making the consecration, the law fixes upon it all the legal incidents of a permanent and valid dedication." This statement of principle implies that there must be a consecration, in the making of which the word waqf is used. It seems to us that what we have before us here is a gift in favour of private individuals, which the donor, in the course of the document, wrongly describes as a "waqf." We think this is a distinction of principle on which this case must be decided. Agreeing with the decision of the Court below, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

SHEO NARAYAN LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXIII, r. 2—Application for leave to sue as pauper—Schedule of immoveable property omitted—Rejection of application—Revision, whether lies.

An application in revision against an order dismissing an application for permission to sue as a pauper is permissible inasmuch as such an application is in itself a case within the meaning of that term as used in section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Shamim-ud-din v. Amir Hussain, 4 Ind. Cas. 777; 12 O. C. 381, followed.

Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram, 63 Ind. Cas. 15; 43 A. 564; 19 A. L. J. 558 and Mahadeo Sahai v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 65 Ind. Cas. 255; 44 A. 248; 20 A. L. J. 55; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 1, dissented from.

Order XXXIII, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code specifically requires that the schedule attached to an application for leave to sue as a pauper shall be both of moveable and immoveable property. Therefore, where an applicant not merely omits to mention an item of immoveable property in the schedule but entirely fails to submit a list of such property, the application cannot be regarded as properly framed.

Kuppusawmy Aiyar v. Muthusamy Aiyar, 27 Ind. Cas. 891; (1915) M. W. N. 31; 1 L. W. 1068, considered.

Application against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 11th March 1922.

Mr. Girja Shankar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi dismissing the applicant's application for permission to sue as a pauper.

The first question that arises is whether an application in revision is permissible under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Shamim-ud-din v. Amir Hussain (1), it was held that such an application for permission to sue as a pauper was in itself a case within the meaning of that term as used in section 115. I have been referred by the non-applicant to a ruling reported as Mahadeo Sahai v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2), where the contrary was held by Walsh, J. He based his opinion on a previous Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (3). This previous case, however, was a case where a decision on the question of the Court's jurisdiction was not held to amount to a case within the meaning of section 115. I consider that Shamim-ud-din v. Amir Hussain (1) should be followed and that application in revision will lie.

As regards the merits of the case the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application to sue as a pauper on the ground that the applicant had failed to enter in his application the fact that he owned 11/4 biswansis in the village of Dhakia. It is urged by the applicant that this omission would not amount to a failure to frame the application in the manner prescribed, and the ruling Kuppusawmy Aiyar v. Muthusamy Aiyar (4), is relied on as authority for the proposition that a mere omission does not constitute a failure to frame the application in the proper manner. The argument of the applicant would, I think, hold good if the omission were the omission to include amongst other items of moveable or immoveable property some single item. In the present case the applicant has entirely failed to submit a list of the immoveable property, he has only submitted a list of moveable property. Order XXXIII, r. 2, specificaly requires that the schedule shall be both of moveable and immoveable property. The application would not, therefore, appear to be properly framed. I might have been disposed to regard the application as properly framed if there had been two lists, one of the immoveable property and another of moveable property, even if the list of immoveable property had been followed by the entry nil, provided that the omission of this particular item of property would conceivably be inadvertent. As, however, the application is framed, it appears that the applicant omitted to embody in his schedule an important category prescribed by law.

The Subordinate Judge was justified in holding the application not properly framed.

This application is, therefore, rejected with costs.

Mortgage—Mortgagor deprived of portion of mortgaged property—Substituted security, doctrine of, application of.

The doctrine of substituted security only applies where possession of a particular property has been awarded to the mortgagor in lieu of an undivided share in the whole property which was the subject of partition. It does not apply when the entire property mortgaged belonged to the mortgagor, and a person with no title subsequently obtained possession of a portion of it behind the back of the mortgagee.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Dehra Dun.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen and Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been argued on one single point. It relates to a shop in Landour, which, together with other properties, was mortgaged by the first four defendants to the defendants Nos. 5 to 12. These defendants brought a suit against their mortgagors and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree they have applied for the sale of the house in suit. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration that the shop was liable to sale. The plaintiff has died during the course of the proceedings and the appellants are his heirs. The facts on which they based their claim are that, in 1905, the 13th defendant instituted a partiton suit against the first four defendants, and obtained a decree declaring her right over 4 sihams out of 84 in this shop and in 9 other houses and a grove. These partition proceedings were subsequent to the mortgage, and the mortgagees were not parties to them. The partition decree is, therefore, not binding on the mortgagees. The plaintiff's case, and the case on which the defendant No. 13 obtained partition, was that the shop originally belonged to one Ghulam Muhammad, whose heirs were admittedly the first four and the 13th defendants. It is now found as a fact by both the Courts below that this particular shop did not belong to Ghulam Muhammad. The 13th defendant, therefore, had no right to any share in it, and as regards this shop had no right to the partition decree, which she obtained. In the partition which was subsequently carried out she was allotted 6/7th of the shop in suit. Her rights have been subsequently transferred to the plaintiff. The appellant's contention is that the doctrine of substituted security should be applied, and that the mortgage instead of attaching to the properties mortgaged should be transferred to the properties which the first four defendants obtained in lieu of the 6/7th share given to the 13th defendant in this house. This contention has been repelled by the Courts below, and, in our opinion, rightly so. The doctrine of substituted security only applies where possession of a particular property has been awarded to one party in lieu of an undivided share in the whole property which was the subject of partition. It does not apply when the entire property mortgaged belonged to the mortgagors, and a person with no title has subsequently obtained possession of a portion of it behind the back of the mortgagees. The mortgage when executed was a perfectly valid mortgage, and the mortgagees are entitled to take out execution against any portion of the mortgaged property. Their right cannot be affected by any subsequent transfer to the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest. We accordingly affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by manager—Interest, excessive rate of—Necessity to borrow at particular rate—Court, power of, to reduce rate—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Suit for partition of Hindu joint family property—Mortgage, validity of, decision as to—Subsequent suit on mortgage—Interest and terms of mortgage, validity of, whether res judicata.

There is no general rule of law that a rate of interest over 10 per cent. per annum must always be treated as excessive where there is ample security for the loan. [p. 347, col. 2.]

Whether a certain rate of interest is excessive or not is a question which must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. [p. 347, col. 2.]

A rate of interest on a mortgage loan at 15 per cent. per annum compoundable yearly is not by itself sufficient to raise the presumption that undue influence was exercised in obtaining it by the mortgagee on the mortgagor. [p. 347, col. 2.]

It is incumbent on those who support a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show, not only that there was necessity to borrow, but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at such rate of interest and upon such terms as are contained in the mortgage, and if it is not shown that there was necessity so to borrow, that rate and those terms cannot stand. Where a Court comes to the conclusion that the rate of interest is excessive and that no necessity for borrowing at that rate existed, it is quite within its right to reduce the contract rate to a reasonable rate of interest. A Hindu father executed a mortgage of family property. His son brought a suit for partition to which the mortgagee was also made a party. One of the reliefs claimed in the suit was that the mortgage was not binding on the plaintiff. It was found that the entire amount of the mortgage was borrowed for legal necessity, and the relief in respect of the mortgage was refused. Subsequently, the mortgagee brought a suit for sale on the mortgage to which the mortgagor's son was made a party. He contended that there was no necessity to borrow at the rate of interest and on the terms stipulated for in the mortgage-deed:

Held, that in the previous suit the only question directly and substantially in issue was the validity of the mortgage, and that the question of the amount which the mortgagor or his son may be called upon to pay in the event of a suit for redemption being brought by him or in the event of a suit for sale being brought by the mortgagee on the basis of the mortgage-deed could not be and was not directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, and that, therefore, the contention of the mortgagor's son in the present suit was not barred by res judicata. JUDGMENT.—On the 30th January 1908 Lala Kesho Ram, defendant No. 1, in the suit out of which this appeal arises, executed a deed of mortgage for a sum of Rs. 6,000 in favour of Lala Sohan Lal and Sardar Shiam Singh. The property mortgaged was a two-annas share in village Mahadeo Jagdish, BASANT RAI v. KESHO RAM.

Pargana Ikauna, in the District of Bahraich, and is admittedly the ancestral joint family property of the mortgagor, Lala Kesho Ram, and his son, Salig Ram. According to the covenant in the deed of mortgage the interest on the money borrowed was fixed at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests and the time for re-payment was stipulated to be a period of two years. The mortgagor, Kesho Ram, died during the pendency of the suit but his death has brought in no fresh party to the suit. His only son, Salig Ram, who was a party to the suit from the very beginning, is now the chief defendant. There was another defendant called Maula Bakhsh but he has dropped out of the litigation altogether. Lala Sohan Lal, one of the co-mortgagees, has also died and the first three plaintiffs in the suit are his sons. The fourth plaintiff is the other mortgagee, Sardar Shiam Singh. The plaintiffs prayed for a decree against the defendants for a sum of Rs. 28,960-1-3 and for sale of the mortgaged property in the event of the defendants failing to pay the amount of the decree within the time fixed by the Court for payment. The lower Court has granted a decree to the plaintiffs for the entire principal money secured by the deed of mortgage and interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum simple. This appeal by the plaintiffs is against that part of the decree of the Court of first instance which reduces the interest from 15 per cent. per annum compound to 12 per cent. per annum simple. There is no other point involved in the case before us.

The grounds on which the learned Subordinate Judge has based his decision with respect to the question of interest are two:—(1) that the mortgagees obtained the consent of the mortgagor relating to the covenant of interest by undue influence; and (2) that there was no necessity for borrowing at such a high rate of interest though there was a necessity to borrow. Both these grounds are impugned in the appeal before us.

Though there is some evidence on the record that the mortgagees were in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagor yet there is no evidence whatsoever that they took advantage of that position and did, as a matter of fact, exercise influence in the settlement of the terms of the mortgage with the mortgagor: nor are the terms of the mortgage unconscionable to a degree which would justify any presumption on the part of the Court that mortgagees obtained the consent of the mortgagor by the exercise of undue influence. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this part of the case seems to be wholly based on a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Abdul Majid v. Ksherode Chandra Pal (1). If that case lays down a general rule of law of the nature which the learned Subordinate Judge thinks it does, we respectfully differ from that decision. On the authority of that case the learned Subordinate Judge says: "Where there is ample security, an excessive rate of interest has been held to be anything over ten per cent." We cannot subscribe to the proposition that a rate of interest over ten per cent. must always be treated as excessive rate where there is a simple security for the loan. We have no doubt in our minds that the security in the present case was ample but whether a certain rate of interest is excessive or not is a question which must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. We are, therefore, of opinion that the rate of interest at 15 per cent. per annum is not by itself sufficient to raise the presumption that undue influence was exercised in obtaining it by the mortgagees on the mortgagor. See the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (2).

As regards the second question in appeal, we are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge's decision rests on firmer grounds. The law on the subject may be quoted from a decision of the Privy Council in the case of Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath (3). In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council Lord Phillimore made the following observation in the case:— "It is incumbent on those who support a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show, not only that there was necessity to borrow, but that it was not unreasonable to borrow at some such high rate and upon some such terms, and if it is not shown that there was necessity to borrow at the rate and upon the terms contained in the mortgage, that rate and those terms cannot stand. The principle being established, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in entering upon the enquiry as to whether the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage in suit was a reasonable one or not: and, if not, was there necessity to borrow such an unreasonable rate of interest. On the consideration of the evidence before him and also of some of the decisions of this Court the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion "that the Mahajan of the defendant No. 1 were ready to advance him a loan of Rs. 6,000 at 9 per cent. per annum, and I see no reason to disbelieve their evidence, because this is the usual rate of interest prevailing in these Provinces." Having come to the conclusion that the rate of interest was excessive and that no necessity for borrowing at that rate existed, the learned Subordinate Judge was quite within his right to reduce it and we think that there are no sufficient grounds for interference on our part with that view of his. In the case already referred to, the High Court had reduced the rate of interest from Rs. 3-2-0 per cent. per mensem with six-monthly rests to 12 per cent. per annum simple on the ground that it had a discretion to do so. In referring to that part of the decision of the High Court Lord Phillimore observed as follows:—"However this may be, their Lordships do not think it safe to rest their decision upon a supposed discretion in the Court or an inference by the Judges as to the sum which would be sufficient to compensate the mortgagee. In their view, as already stated, the question is one of the authority of a manager of a joint Hindu family, and it is because their Lordships agree with the High Court that this authority was exceeded to the extent already stated that they concur in the conclusion at which that Court arrived." In the present case we are of opinion that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge amounts to this, that the authority of the mortgagor in borrowing money at a rate of interest higher than 12 per cent. per annum was exceeded. We agree with that finding.

There is one more matter to which short reference may now be made. It appears that in 1913 Salig Ram, the present respondent, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich for partition of the ancestral joint family property including the property now in suit. To that suit his father, Kesho Ram, was the first defendant. Amongst other defendants were the present mortgagees.

One of the reliefs claimed was that it might be declared that the deed of mortgage, dated the 30th January 1908, now in suit, was not binding on the plaintiff. The mortgagees joined issue with the plaintiff in respect of this relief. The result was that the Court of first instance and this Court on appeal dismissed the claim of Salig Ram in respect of the declaration which he sought with rgeard to the deed of the 30th January 1908. The Courts found that the entire sum of Rs. 6,000 borrowed under the deed of mortgage was borrowed for legal necessity. One of the issues framed in the present suit in view of the pleadings in the case was, "Whether the plea as to immorality and want of family necessity is res judicata between the parties." This issue has been decided in favour of the plaintiffs and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is no longer contested in appeal before us. The defendants led evidence to show that the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage in suit was excessive. The plaintiffs then produced evidence to show that it was not so. After the plaintiffs had examined their first witness the defendants' Pleader filed an application on the 26th May 1921, the object of which was to give notice to the plaintiffs that the defendants wanted to argue the point that, "the rate of interest itself is so exorbitant that there was no necessity to take a loan at such a rate of interest by hypothecating the mortgaged property." The Court drew the plaintiffs' attention to this application and the plaintiffs' Pleader stated that in view of the application he wanted to examine the defendant No. 4. At the hearing of the suit following this the plaintiffs produced the defendant No. 4 as their first witness. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question thus raised in respect of the propriety of the interest charged in the deed of mortgage has already been noted, discussed and decided by us in the preceding portion of our judgment.

The appellants' learned Couusel urged before us that in view of the previous litigation the question as to the rate of interest was res judicata between the parties and consequently the defendants could not be permitted to challenge it in the present suit. In the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court no ground was taken with respect to this matter nor was any issue asked for to be framed by the plaintiffs in the lower Court after the petition of the 26th May 1921 was made. On the other hand, they proceeded to adduce evidence relating to that question. We think that, in the circumstances, it would not be fair to the respondents to allow this plea of res judicata to be now taken in the Court of Appeal: but as at the hearing of the appeal we were not disposed to decide this matter then and there we permitted arguments to be addressed to us on that question, our conclusion is that the plea of res judicata in respect of the interest is devoid of substance. In the previous suit the only question directly and substantially in issue was the validity of the mortgage. The question of the amount which the mortgagor or his son may be called upon to pay in the event of a suit for redemption being brought by him or in the event of a suit for sale being brought by the mortgagees on the basis of the mortgage-deed could not and was not directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. Any decision as to the exact amount of mortgage payable in either of the two events would have been premature.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Pilibhit, dated the 17th November 1921.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case brought a suit in a Rent Court for the ejectment of the plaintiff-respondent from certain land.

The respondent put forward the plea that he was the owner of the land and that it was grove land.

LALTA PRASAD v. RAM BAHADUR.

The Rent Court took action under section 199 of the Tenancy Act and directed the respondent to file a suit in order to have the disputed question of title determined. It is out of this suit that this second appeal has arisen.

In his plaint the respondent claimed to be the owner of the land in question as also of the trees situated upon it. He further claimed that he had sunk a well and had constructed a house on the land and he asked for a declaration of his proprietary title with respect to all this property. In the second paragrapgh of his plaint he stated that, even on the assumption that he was a grove-holder, the opposite party had no right in law to eject him.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit finding that the plaintiff was not the owner of the soil. The Munsif was of opinion, however, that the plaintiff was a grove-holder. He held that he had no power to give any declaration to that effect in proceedings which had come into his Court in accordance with the provisions of section 199 of the Tenancy Act. In appeal the Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff is not the owner of the land but he found him to be the owner of the trees in the grove and he has given him a decree to the effect that he is entitled to hold the grove as long as the grove exists.

The contention before us is that the Civil Court had no authority to give a declaration regarding the right of the plaintiff to hold the grove as long as the grove exists. It is said that the only question which the Civil Court could properly entertain was the question of proprietary title.

We have been referred to the judgment of a Bench of this Court, Letters Patent Appeal No. 44 of 1916, decided on the 3rd April 1917.) [Manna v. Rang Lal (1)]. That was a case somewhat similar to the present. There the lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff had not succeeded in proving himself to be the proprietor of the land but had come to the conclusion that he was entitled to the trees and had passed a decree in the following terms :—

" The decree of the lower Court is modified and it is declared that the plaintiff is the owner of the trees in grove No. 111 as entered in the Former Settlement and No. 117 as entered in the Recent Settlement and that he is not the owner of the land."

It was held in the case that that was a perfectly good declaration which was within the competence of the Civil Court and had the decree in the present case been in that form, we could not have interfered with it. It seems to us that, following the case just mentioned, we ought to alter the form of the decree of the Court below and bring it into conformity with the decree which was passed in the case to which we have just referred.

It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that there is no finding that the plaintiff is the owner of the trees on this land but we think that this point is clearly established. The lower Appellate Court found that the grove had been transferred to the father of the present appellants in the year 1890. There is on the record a sale-deed by which this property was transferred and the sale-deed clearly makes mention of the trees in this grove being transferred by way of sale. It is impossible to doubt, therefore, that the Court below really found that the plaintiff is the owner of the trees.

We, therefore, allow the appeal to this extent that we modify the decree of the Court below and substitute for the declaration given by the learned Subordinate Judge the following declaration, namely, that it be decreed that the plaintiff though not owner of the land is owner of the trees on the plots in suit. With this modification in the lower Court's order we dismiss the appeal. We make no order as to costs.

The cross-objections have not been pressed. They are also dismissed without any order as to costs.

The granting of a review is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the Judge who passed the decree; no other Judge can hear an application for review, and if the Judge who tried the case refuses to grant a review, his order is by r. 7 of O. XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code expressly declared not to be appealable; nor is an application for revision against such order competent.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Applicants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Niamat Ullah, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur refusing to review his order. It appears that the learned Judge had made a mistake as to a Will which was before him in thinking that it was registered in the lifetime of the testator. No appeal was preferred from his decision but the applicants applied for review. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to review his decision on the ground that his decision was based not solely on the fact of registration in the testator's lifetime but also on oral evidence. This is no doubt true though certainly the fact of registration appears to have been the main point influencing his decision. My chief reason for rejecting this application, however, is that the granting of a review is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the Judge who passed the decree. No other Judge can hear such an application and if the Judge who tried the case refuses to grant a review, his order is by r. 7 of O. XLVII expressly declared not to be appealable. If this Court is on revision to consider the sufficiency of the Subordinate Judge's grounds for not allowing a review it would be difficult to distinguish a revision from the appeal which the law expressly refuses. I accordingly reject the present application though under the circumstances without costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 22nd of September 1921.

Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant appeal arising out of the following circumstances. It appears that there were two decrees outstanding against the plaintiff, one No. 1653, and the other No. 1307. The defendant Lal Hans was a decree-holder in both these decrees but in decree No. 1653 there were other decree-holders also. A contract was entered into between the present plaintiff and Lal Hans, the decree-holder aforesaid, that the latter would pay off both the decrees and the plaintiff would transfer 14½ bighas to him out of 16 bighas and odd share which the plaintiff had purchased at auction on the 20th of July 1905. The plaintiff carried out his part of the contract and executed a sale-deed of the property in favour of Lal Hans. Lal Hans satisfied the decree No. 1307 only but did not pay off the other decree-holders in decree No. 1653. Lal Hans, however, got mutation of names effected in his favour of only 4 bighas and odd out of 14 bighas and odd share sold to him. The decree-holders, other than Lal Hans, of the decree No. 1653 executed the decree and put up to sale the 11 bighas and odd share which stood in the name of the plaintff because Lal Hans had obtained mutation of names in only 4 bighas and odd out of the 14 bighas and odd sold to him by the plaintiff. These 11 bighas and odd were sold, the decree was satisfied and a surplus amount was left over. This surplus amount of Rs. 55 was withdrawn by the plaintiff Zalim Singh. This was in the year 1914. On the 23rd March 1920 the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover from Narain Singh who had purchased the property at auction-sale. The property sought to be recovered was one bigha and odd the difference between the 16 bighas and odd owned by the plaintiff originally and the 14 bighas and odd sold by him to Lal Hans. This Narain Singh, defendant, is the son of Lal Hans aforesaid who has also been made a defendant. The defence pleaded was that defendant Lal Hans had not committed any fraud on the plaintiff and the plaintiff had no right to sue, that he was estopped from contesting the validity of the sale because he had taken back the surplus money. It was also contended that the suit did not lie having regard to the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Trial Court decreed the claim subject to the plaintiff paying Rs. 50 a part of the surplus amount to the defendant Lal Hans. The defendant Narain Singh the auction-purchaser went up in appeal and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has confirmed the decree of the Court below except in so far as it modified the decree of the First Court by allowing Rs. 55 to the defendant Lal Hans. The defendant comes here in second appeal and the only ground urged by him is that the suit is barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Vakil for the appellant has relied upon the case of Prosunno Kuma Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1) in support of the contention that the proceedings could have been taken under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure in this matter. I cannot agree to this contention. This ruling was passed under the old Code of Civil Procedure and laid down that the question of fraud also between the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser could be determined under section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. In the present suit, however, the question of fraud has arisen in this way that the judgment-debtor pleads that one of the decree-holders who had agreed to pay up his co-decree-holder did not do so with the result that the property was sold in execution taken out by the co-decree-holder and the plaintiff was damnified and justified to sue to recover his property. This was neither fraud in publishing nor conducting the sale. I hold that an application like the present suit could not have been made under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 51 OF 1923.
May 31, 1923.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Promissory-note—Admission of execution not inter partes—Acknowledgment.

The mere fact that in some other case between different parties the defendant admitted the execution of a promissory-note, the basis of the suit, is not an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act.

Sri Ram v. Firm Sobha Ram-Gopal Rai, 67 Ind. Cas. 513; 20 A. L. J. 315 (1923) A. I. R. (A) 213; 4 U. P. L. R. (A) 153; 44 A. 521, distinguished.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagina, dated the 7th November 1922.

Mr. M. N. Raina, for the Applicant.

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a civil revision from a decree of the Court of Small Causes. The suit was based on a promissory-note executed by the defendant on the 15th of April 1919. The suit was filed on the 28th of April 1922. The defendant put in a written statement, the second paragraph of which runs as follows:—

"The plaintiff (who is a Jotshi) led the defendant to believe that he would perform adequate puja which would have the effect of saving the lives of his children and they would survive the age of one year, and for this the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 30 to the plaintiff out of which Rs. 8 was paid in cash and the balance was payable after the child had survived the age of one year.' It was on this understanding that the promissory-note was written. The child died within a year of its birth and hence nothing was payable. The other ground taken was that the suit was barred by limitation. It appears from the record that five witnesses on behalf of the defendant were present but, as a matter of fact, the Court took no evidence at all, holding that it was not open to the defendant who admitted the execution of the promissory-note to plead want of consideration and reliance was placed on Sri Ram v. Firm Sobha Ram-Gopal Rai (1). I do not think that, ruling is applicable in this case. I think under the 3rd proviso to section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, the Court should have allowed evidence to be taken on this point. But it is unnecessary to decide this as I hold against the plaintiff on the second point. On the face of it, the suit is barred by limitation as it was not filed until the 28th of April 1922. In order to bring it within limitation it was pointed out that, in some other suit (not between these parties) this promissory-note had been exhibited and on that occasion, some time in 1920, the defendant had admitted its execution. The Court has held that the mere fact that on the back of the note there is in the handwriting of the defendant the words "Execution admitted," and the endorsement of the Munsif showing the date is a sufficient compliance of the provisions of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. It seems to me that the mere fact that in some other case the defendant merely admitted the execution of the document is not an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of the section. No evidence was taken and there is nothing but the endorsement. In my opinion it has not been shown that the suit was within limitation, it, therefore, should have been dismissed. I accordingly allow this application and set aside the decree of the Court below with costs.

—Enquiry, proof of—Antecedent debt, what is —Debt whether binding on son during lifetime of father—Pre-emptor from vendee, position of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 2—Appeal—Issue disposed of on two grounds —Decision on one ground attacked—Appellate Court, power of, to deal with issue generally.

A recital in a deed by the manager of a joint Hindu family, which is impugned by the other members of the family, is not by itself sufficient to establish necessity, but it is clear evidence of the representation, and when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital coupled with circumstances, such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the recital, would be sufficient evidence to support the necessity stated. [p. 356, col. 1.]

A representation by the father, even if he is not the manager, is, for the purpose of affecting the question whether the deed was in consideration of the payment of antecedent debts, no less and no more admissible in evidence than the representation of the father as manager: for, the real value of the representation is that it indicates the scope of enquiry that has or may be presumed to have been made. The definition of an antecedent debt as a debt "incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from joint family property" is to be regarded as one to be construed in the light of the particular facts before a Court, and as not excluding from the category of antecedent debts money borrowed on a hypothecation-bond, since the personal liability for debts so secured continues to exist independently of the hypothecation. A pre-emptor cannot stand in a better position against the sons of the vendor than the vendee from the father, except that, being in a less favourable situation than the vendee to prove proper enquiry as to the existence of necessity or of antecedent debts of the father, less strict proof of enquiry may be required of him. The burden of proving their existence, however, is not shifted by pre-emption from the transferee to the sons, unless the sons were parties to the pre-emption decree. [p. 358, col. 2.]

Where an issue is disposed of by the Trial Court on two grounds and the decision on one of them is attacked in appeal, it may be taken that the appellant desires to impugn the decision on the issue generally, and the Appellate Court has power, under O. XLI, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, to deal with the whole matter. [p. 355, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th January 1922, upholding that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 31st July 1920.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.
Mr. Lal Behari Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of the suit brought by respondent No. 1, Balbhaddar, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad. The plaintiff in the suit, Balbhaddar, brought the suit to obtain possession of a certain mahal which had been alienated by his father Lachhmi Dat who was made defendant No. 1. This defendant died after the decision of the Court of first hearing and before the first appeal. The sale by Lachhmi Dat was in favour of certain persons but they lost the property by a pre-emption suit brought by one Udit. Udit again lost the property by a pre-emption suit to the defendant No. 2, Jamna Pershad, the present appellant.

Hence the suit is really one against Jamna Pershad. Both the lower Courts found that the property was to be considered ancestral property and not the self-acquired property of Lachhmi Dat. This finding is not impugned. The Court of first hearing held that the burden of proving that the deed by Lachhmi

Dat was either for legal necessity or for payment of antecedent debts was on the defendant No. 2 and found against him as he produced no evidence. An appeal was filed before the lower Appellate Court calling in question the decision that the sale was not for legal necessity. The decision that it was not on account of antecedent debts was not impugned in the Memorandum of Appeal. When, however, the case was argued in the Court the appellant did not argue on the point whether the sale was for legal necessity but only on the question whether it was on account of antecedent debts, the latter point, as stated above, not having been urged in the Memorandum of Appeal. The lower Appellate Court, however, excused this omission and decided the appeal as if the First Court's decision that the sale was not on account of antencedent debts had been impugned. The District Judge held that the only evidence tendered to prove that the sale was for antecedent debts consisted in the recital by Lachhmi Dat in the sale-deed. He held that this recital would be no evidence unless it was made by Lachhmi Dat in the capacity of manager. He held that Lachhmi Dat could not be held to be manager on the evidence. In this appeal the following questions arise:—

Was the lower Appellate Court debarred from considering the question whether the sale could be upheld on the ground of its being for the purpose of liquidating antecedent debts, in view of the fact that the decision of the First Court against the appellant on this point was not impugned in the Memorandum of Appeal?

The lower Appellate Court was not so debarred as it had power to do this under O. XLI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. Both questions were dealt with under one issue in the Court of first hearing and the fact that the appellant in his Memorandum of Appeal impugned one question could be taken as meaning that he wished to impugn the decision on the issue generally.

The second question is whether a recital in a deed by the manager of a Hindu family is binding on the other members of the family as an admission or otherwise. Reliance is placed by the appellant on a case heard by two Judges of this Court, Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal (1). At the bottom of page 636* it is there stated that, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (2), statements made by a manager are admissible in evidence against the other members of the family, (to prove that certain debts were antecedent debts of the father at the date of transfer impugned by sons) The Privy Council ruling referred to, though in the report stated to be 19 O. C., p. 211, is really to be found at page 211 of 20 O. C. In that case the question was whether certain properties were acquired by successive managers on behalf of the estate or were their self-acquired properties. One of the parties was Ratan Lal, the son-in-law of an ex-manager, named Ram Narain. Their Lordships of the Privy Council treated as important evidence the deposition made by this Ram Narain three years after he became manager or karta. A study of the ruling, however, will show that this statement was treated as an admission by Ram Narain as the predecessor-in-interest of Ratan Lal and not because he happened to be manager. Moreover, in that case the suit was between members of a joint family and not against an outsider. The case is no authority for the proposition that the recital in a deed by a manager will bind other members of the family in respect of an alienation by him which they are impugning. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (3) and Nanda

Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (4). that a recital by a Hindu widow in a deed is not by itself sufficient to establish necessity, but that it is clear evidence of the representation and that when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible the recital coupled with circumstances such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the recital; would be sufficient evidence to support the necessity stated. I do not think that a recital by a manager impugned by other members of the family is entitled to higher value than a recital by a Hindu widow impugned by reversioners.

It is, however, objected that there was a finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court which cannot be set aside in second appeal that Lachhmi Dat was not the manager when he executed the sale-deed. The representation by the father, even if he were not manager, would for the purpose of affecting the question whether the sale-deed was in consideration of the payment of antecedent debts appear to me to be no less (and no more) admissible in evidence than the representation of father as manager. It is obvious from the Privy Council ruling referred to above that the real value of the representation is that it indicates the scope of enquiry that has or may be presumed to have been made. I do not see what difference it makes as to the fact of this representation whether it was by the father acting as guardian or not. Apart from this, I can find no evidence whatever to justify the decision of the lower Appellate Court that Lachhmi Dat was not manager. The matter was not considered by the Court of first hearing. The lower Appellate Court has relied, as proof that he was not the manager, on the fact that a witness stated that some one else was manager after the death of Lachhmi Dat's father, namely a maternal uncle. Now such maternal uncle in the presence of the father could not have been the de jure manager. The family at the time of the sale-deed consisted of Lachhmi Dat and Balbhaddar only, Balbhaddar being a minor at the time. In the absence of evidence that the father was incapacitated from being guardian it seems an irresistible conclusion that he was guardian.

The next question is whether, treating this recital as a representation, proof of actual enquiry can be said to have become impossible to the appellant, if so, are there such circumstances as will justify a reasonable belief that enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the recital. The appellant is the pre-emptor of a pre-emptor of the vendee of the father and manager Lachhmi Dat. It may be regarded as for practical purposes impossible for him to prove actual enquiry by the vendee, as the vendee would not be likely if called as a witness by a pre-emptor to give evidence in his favour. The sale-deed recited, as debts to be paid by the vendees, various sums amounting to Rs 2,800 composed as follows:--

Rs 1,300 due on a hypothecation-deed
Rs. 900 due under a pro-note, and
Rs. 600 due on some possessory mortgages.

These sums were all to be paid off by the vendee and their payment was treated as the sale consideration. He had not paid them off before he was pre-empted by the first pre-empting person but that pre-emptor did pay them off. The appellant, as second pre-emptor, repaid the first pre-emptor the whole Rs. 2,800. Now it is not unreasonable to suppose that the first pre-emptor would have challenged any part of the consideration in the sale deed which was open to objection in his pre-emption suit. That the pre-emptor paid up all these sums is in the circumstances of this case sufficient evidence that enquiry by himself had, and consequently enquiry by the vendee would have, proved these debts to be in existence as debts against the father, even if not valid against the property; that is to say, the recital may be regarded as true as far as it goes.

Treating the recital then as evidence to this extent, it has to be seen how for it is of use to the appellant. The Rs. 900 due under the pro-note was clearly an antecedent debt of the father, and the re-payment of this sum cannot be impugned as forming consideration for the sale. As to the Rs. 1,300 due on the hypothecation-bond, it was not a debt "incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from joint family property" and, therefore, would not appear to have been an antecedent debt as defined by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (5). It is, however, settled law of this Court to regard that definition of their Lordships, as one to be construed in the light of the particular facts before it, and as not excluding from the category of antecedent debts money borrowed on a hypothecation-bond, since the personal liability for debts so secured continues to exist independently of the hypothecation. [See Ram Del v. Suraj Bakhsh (6)]. The Rs. 1,300 must, therefore, also be regarded as consideration binding on the sons. As to the Rs. 600 secured by the possessory mortgages, it is not possible to say merely from the recital whether after execution of these mortgages the father had remained personally liable for the sums secured by them. A usufructuary mortgagor as such is not personally liable to re-pay a loan. In respect of this Ghose, in his Law of Mortgage, page 93 of the 4th Edition, says :—

"In a purely usufructuary mortgage where the mortgagee takes possession of the estate, on the understanding that he shall re-pay himself out of the rents and profits, the mortgagor undertakes no personal liability, and the mortgagee must, therefore, look exclusively to the land for re-payment of the debt. In the case of Jhanoo Bibi decided many years ago, the Sudder Dewany of Calcutta held that in the absence of any covenant, the mortgagor cannot be sued personally, and this may be taken to be the established rule on the subject."

He then quotes a list of rulings to support his statement. If Lachhmi Dat then was not personally liable for the money obtained by this bond, it was not an antecedent debt at the date of the sale. The burden of proving that the consideration of the sale-deed consisted of antecedent debts is on the appellant and the recital, therefore, fails to help him to prove this in respect of the Rs. 600. In conclusion, I find that the consideration for the sale was valid and binding on the sons to the extent of the total less Rs. 600.

It is, however, urged on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that he is not affected by the sale-deed having liquidated antecedent debts of his father in view of the fact that the father was alive at the time of the bringing of this suit and indeed until the decree of the First Court had been passed. Reliance is placed on a passage in their Lordships' judgment in the Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (5), case already referred to. That passage is :—

"While the father, however, remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts, and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, that attempt must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing."

A careful study, however, of the judgment of their Lordships leads to the conclusion that to this statement their Lordships adimitted an exception, namely, that the pious obligation of the sons to defray their father's debts fortified by the necessity of protecting the right of third parties, had given rise to a rule that sons could not impeach a transfer for an antecedent debt. The passage invoked does not qualify, but is subject to, the subsequent portion of the judgment maintaining the validity of a transfer to secure an antecedent debt. In orher words, the antecedency of a debt incurred by a father may be invoked to uphold a transfer by him as against the sons even during the father's lifetime.

There is no plea in this appeal that the burden of proof was wrongly placed on the appellant, though the plea was taken in the first appeal that the sons are bound to prove the immorality of the debts rather than that the transferee should prove their antecedency. It is clear that a pre-emptor cannot stand in a better position against the sons than the vendee from the father except that being in a less favourable situation than the vendee to prove proper enquiry as to the existence of necessity or of antecedent debts of the father, less strict proof of enquiry may be required of him. The burden of proving their existence, however, is not shifted by pre-emption from the transferee to the sons, unless the sons were parties to the pre-emption decree.

In view of the above finding, I vary the decrees of the lower Courts in favour of the plaintiff and direct that decree be framed that the plaintiff shall be put in possession of the property claimed after the expiry of two months from the date of this decree unless the defendant No. 2 within that period pays to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 600 together with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the sale-deed, i.e., from the 2nd June 1916, (See Exhibit I), up to the date of payment, in which case the suit shall stand dismissed. The parties will get proportional costs in all Courts.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 130 OF 1920.
April 5, 1923.
Present:—Mr. Justice Ryves.
RAM DIAL,—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

SHER SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149, O. VII, r. 11—Plaint filed on insufficient Court-fee—Balance made good after expiry of limitation, but within time fixed by Court—Suit, whether time-barred.

A suit filed within limitation but on an insufficiently stamped paper, is not barred by time if the deficiency is made good within the time allowed by the Court even though limitation has in the meantime expired.

Jointi Prasad v. Bechu Singh, 15 A. 65; A. W. N. (1893) 29; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 758, dissented from.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Khurja, dated the 25th August 1922.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Ram Dial, sued to recover money due to him on a bond executed by the defendant. He filed his plaint on the 15th May 1922, which was the last day of limitation. The Munsarim made a report that although the suit had been properly valued the Court-fee paid was insufficient. Thereupon the Court gave the plaintiff time up to the 19th May to make good the deficiency. The deficiency was made good on the 17th May and the plaint was then registered. At the trial the defendant pleaded, amongst other things, that the suit was barred by limitation. The Court found on the merits for the plaintiff, but held that the suit was barred by limitation on the authority of Jainti Prasad v. Bechu Singh (1). The plaintiff in revision urges that that decision is no longer law and that, under O. VII, r. 11, clause (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 149 of the Code of Civil Pocedure, the Court had power in its discretion to allow the plaintiff further time in which to make good the deficiency of Court-fee and that if such deficiency were made good within the time prescribed the fact that in the meantime limitation had expired would not affect the suit. It seems to me that this contention is correct. The rule in Jainti Prasad v. Bechu Singh (1) was not followed in the other High Courts. It seems to me that, under O. VII, r. 11, clause (c), read with section 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Legislature deliberately intended to supersede that decision. A similar view is taken in Gaya Loan Office, Limited v. Awadh Behari Lal (2). In my opinion, the Court below was wrong in dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation. As on all other points the Court below has found in favour of the plaintiff, I set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in both Courts.

PANNA LAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS AND PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Creditor and debtor—Promissory-note, suit on—Independent cause of action, value of.

When a creditor has a cause of action for the recovery of money, for which his debtor has executed a promissory-note, separate from and independent of the note, he can recover upon such cause, in case the note for any reason cannot be put in evidence.

Ram Sarup v. Jasodha Kunwar, 13 Ind. Cas. 138; 34 A. 158; 9 A. L. J. 72, followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 14th of July 1921.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kamuda Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Panna Lal and Shiam Lal against Kashi Prasad, Manni Lal and others for money. The suit was decreed against both. The defence of Kashi Prasad was that he and Manni Lal had been partners in a Commission Agency business and that the partnership had been dissolved, whereupon, according to an arbitration, Manni Lal undertook to pay off this account and gave two hundis in discharge of his share of the debt due by both of them. The decree was against both. Kashi Prasad has appealed on the ground that he was not liable but that Manni Lal alone was liable. He urged,—

(1) that the hundis were not given in discharge of the debt on the gur account, but were on entirely separate loan account;

(2) that as decided by the arbitrators, Manni Lal alone undertook to be responsible for the payment of the hundis.

Both the Courts have found that the hundis were given in satisfaction of the gur account and were not evidence of a separate transaction. They have also found that as the hundis were inadmissible in evidence under section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act because they were improperly stamped, Panna Lal was entitled to go back and prove his case on the original gur account in discharge of which these hundis had been given.

In appeal, the facts cannot be controverted but it is argued that the Court was not entitled to allow the plaintiffs to go behind the hundis. This point is established, at any rate so far as this Court is concerned, in a long series of rulings, of which an example may be given in Ram Sarup v. Jasodha Kunwar (1), in which it was held that "if a creditor has a cause of action for the recovery of money, for which his debtor has executed a promissory-note, separate from and independent of the note, he can recover upon such cause, in case the note for any reason cannot be put in evidence."

The last point taken was that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had given a receipt in full satisfaction of the debt, he was not entitled to go behind it. This point was not raised in the Court below, and, therefore, we cannot allow it to be argued here. On the findings, therefore, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are complicated, but the controversy in appeal is narrowed down to two points. Two brothers, Bhoja and Thamman, owned between them 2½ biswas share in khata No. 6 of Mauza Nayagaon. The two brothers were joint in estate. Thamman died first leaving a widow Musammat Kindar Kuar. Bhoja died subsequently leaving a widow Musammat Bilaso. Then Musammat Bilaso died and last of all Musammat Kindar Kuar. On Thamman's death his share should have passed to his undivided brother, but in fact it was taken possession of by Musammat Kindar Kuar, and on Bilaso's death Kindar Kuar succeeded to her share also and thus became the recorded owner of the whole 2½ biswas share. Musammat Bilaso has after the death of her husband mortgaged to Dirgaj Singh and Baldeo Singh the 1½ biswas share of which she was in possession. The date of this mortgage was 18th May 1897. Baldeo Singh is the fourth defendant in this case. On 6th October 1906 Musammat Kindar Kuar joined with the proprietors of other khatas in two sale-deeds by which they transferred a 4½-biswas share in Nayagaon and a 4-biswas share in another village Kunyan to three persons Dirgaj Singh, Baldeo Singh and Lochan in equal shares. The 4½-biswas share in Nayagaon included Musammat Kindar Kuar's 2½ biswas share referred to above.

The main issue in the appeal is, whether this sale deed put an end to the mortgagee right held by two of the vendees, Dirgaj Singh and Baldeo Singh, in this 2½-biswas share under the mortgage of 1897. The plaintiff obtained pre-emption in respect of part of the property covered by the sale-deed of 1906 and he also obtained the interest of Dirgaj Singh under that deed by direct purchase.

It is argued for the appellants on this issue, first, that section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply, and, secondly that if it does apply there was no merger because the continuance of the mortgage was for the benefit of the purchase and, therefore, there was an implied intention that mortgage should subsist.

KALLOO SINGH v. BAKHTAWAR SINGH.

The ground on which it is urged that section 101 is not applicable is, that the sale-deed of 6th October 1906 was in favour of three purchasers in equal shares, whereas only two of these were parties to the mortgage. This plea must be rejected for two reasons. In the first place the mortgage covered only half the share sold i. e., 1¼-biswas while the mortgagees acquired under the sale-deed two-thirds of 2½ biswas. Thus, excluding the share of the third purchaser, they still became absolute owners of a share larger than that on which they held a mortgage. In the second place, it was held by this Court in Shamshad Ali Khan v. Mohammad Ali Khan (1) that where the mortgagee purchases a portion of the mortgaged property there is a merger and the mortgage is extinguished to the extent of the share purchased by the mortgagee.

The grounds on which it is urged that, even if section 101, applies there is no merger are four in number,—

1. That the purchasers continued to be recorded as mortgagees in the khewat.

2. That at the time of the sale-deed the title of Musammat Kindar Kuar had not become perfected by adverse possession and, therefore, it was to the advantage of the purchasers to keep alive the mortgage in case of a possible claim by the reversioners.

3. That there was an intermediate mortgage on the property executed by Musammat Kindar Kuar and others.

4. That the son of the plaintiff who is joint with him had taken a sub-mortgage of 12½ biswas of the property covered by this intermediate mortgage.

The difficulty in dealing with these points is, that most of them do not appear to have been pressed in this form in the Court below and there is no discussion of them in the judgment. The khewat entry was pressed, but it is of little importance in view of what has been said by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the state of the khewat. The question of the alleged sub-mortgage of 12½ biswansis to the plaintiff's son was put forward as a ground of estoppel on Issue No. 5 but was not pressed at the time of arguments as appears from the judgment on this issue.

(1) 47 Ind. Cas. 200; 21 O. C. 172.

The intermediate mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-interest and the question of possible claim by the reversioners are not referred to in this connection at all.

On the construction of section 101 a recent Bombay case, not yet reported in the regular Law Reports, but reported in 24 Bombay Law Reporter page 720, [Bai Rera v. Valimahomed (2) is cited by the respondents for the proposition that the words "or such continuance would be for his benefit" are only applicable where there is a clear expression of intention in the deed. To quote from the head-note of the case, "the words 'continuance would be for his benefit' are merely a guide to the intenion of the owner." This view was accepted by the appellant for the purpose of his argument. The appellant's learned Advocate relies on the circumstances mentioned above as evidence of an implied intenton. It may be necessary at some future time to examine the correctness of this view, but it is not necessary for me to enter into a controversy which is not raised by either party to the appeal.

If the question is one of intention, there can be no doubt that the parties did definitely intend that the mortgage should be extinguished. The amount of the mortgage-money was set off as part of the sale price and the sale-deed definitely provides that the mortgagor shall have no interest left in the property. In fact, the extinction of this mortgage, on which the mortgagee had already obtained a decree, was the principal object of the execution of the first sale-deed and Rs. 1,200 out of Rs. 1, 500 which constituted the price were set aside for this purpose. On this ground it is contended by the respondents with much reason that there was more than a mere coalescence of two interests resulting in a merger. There was, a very definite contract between the parties extinguishing the mortgage, and certainly there could be no intenton to keep it alive against the plaintiffs who only acquired their title subsequently under a pre-emption decree and later purchase. By virtue of their pre-emption decree they stepped into the shares of the original vendees. The case is very similar to that of Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (2) where also it was sought to keep a mortgage alive against a pre-emptor. It was there held that the mortgagee defendant who had purchased the equity of redemption could not set up his own previous mortgage as still subsisting. The plaintiff paid full value for the property and to hold them liable for a mortgage which was explicitly redeemed out of the sale price would be compelling them to pay a large part of the price twice over.

The second issue also relates to the two sale-deeds executed by Kindar Kuar and others on 6th October 1906 which are the subject of the previous issue. One of the five persons who joined in these sale-deeds was Bhudar who was defendant No. 2 in the present suit and is one of the appellants. Bhudar and his three brothers Chitar, Tilak and Tikam owned one-biswas each in Khata No. 1 of Nayagaon. Tilak predeceased his brothers each of whom obtained on his death one-third of his one-biswa share. The contention of Bhudar, appellant, on this issue is that the one-third share which he obtained on Tilak's death was not included in the sale-deed of 6th October 1906. The chief ground on which this is urged is that Tilak had mortgaged this share in his lifetime and that no mention of the mortgage was made in the same deed. Further, the mortgage continued to be recorded in the khewat after the sale. The latter point is of little importance as the khewat has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be extremely unsatisfactory. It is admitted that it is necessary to include this one third biswa share which admittedly belonged to Bhudar at the time of the execution of the sale-deed, in order to complete the 4½ biswas share in Nayagaon conveyed by that sale-deed. This consideraton is decisive of the issue and I agree with the Court below in rejecting the appellant's contention.

The result is that the appeal fails and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Bombay Regulation (XVI of 1827), ss. 19, 20—Tenant of service watan lands—Adverse possession—Permanent tenancy, acquisition of.

A person who has always claimed to be, and is, a tenant of service Watan lands cannot acquire any title to a permanent tenancy in the lands by adverse possession as against the Watandar from whom he holds the lands. [p. 366, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of Sir Basil Scott, C. J. and Mr. Justice Hayward.

Messrs. G. Lowndes, K.C., and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant.

Mr. Raikes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on 22nd October 1914 in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum by Watandars for the ejectment of the defendants from service Watan lands in Mauza Bhivashi in Taluka Chikodi in the District of Belgaum, and for mesne profits. The defendants are not Watandars, nor is any one of them a Watandar, of the Watan. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in their written statement allege that they, from before 1853, acquired adversely to the family of the plaintiffs a right to the possession of the lands in question as permanent tenants, and enjoyed that right for more than 12 years before suit in the lifetime of the father of the plaintiffs, and that "the cause of action arose in the year 1865, when the plaintiffs' grandfather died." The title, if any, of the other defendants depends on the title of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4.

The facts of the case will be briefly stated presently, but in order to see whether under those facts the defence of adverse possession is maintainable, it is necessary to bear in mind what the law as to the alienation by a Watandar of his service

Watan lands was, in 1853, and has been down to the institution of this suit.

Regulation XVI of 1827 was passed by the Governor of Bombay in Council on the 1st January 1827. Before that Regulation was passed, a Watandar could, apparently without the sanction of the Government, assign or mortgage, his service Watan lands and could grant to any one a permanent lease of them, but the effect of sections 19 and 20 of that Regulation was to prohibit, in the interests of the State, all such Watandars from alienating in any way the service Watan lands which they held as Watandars. Sections 19 and 20 of that Regulation applied to the lands in suit. Sections 19 and 20 of that Regulation continued in force until they were repealed by Bombay Act III of 1874, but the repeal of these sections by Act III of 1874 did not make valid any alienation of service Watan lands which had been prohibited by Regulation XVI of 1827. [Padapa v. Swamirao Shriniwas (1).] Section 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874 now applies to the lands in question. That section is as follows:—

"V. No Watandar shall, without the sanction of Government, sell, mortgage or otherwise alienate or assign any Watan or part thereof or interest therein to any person not a Watandar of the same Watan."

That section of Bombay Act III of 1874 was passed, as was section 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827, in the interests of the State and not in the interests of the Watandars only. The granting by a Watandar of a right of permanent tenancy in lands of his Watan would undoubtedly be an alienation within the meaning of section 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows. The lands in suit are service Watan lands, and were in the possession of Appaji, who was the grandfather of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the uncle of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. In 1853, Appaji held those lands and other service Watan lands of the Watan as a tenant of Venkatrao, the Watandar, at a yearly rent of Rs. 42. Venkatrao was the grandfather of the plaintiffs. Some of these lands which Appaji held as a yearly tenant were, in or before 1853, taken by the Government for the purpose of making a public road, and consequently Appaji and Venkatrao, agreed to re-adjust the rent by reducing it to Rs. 36 a year. That agreement was embodied in a document which was signed by Venkatrao on the 15th March 1853. That document, as translated, is as follows:—

"Shri,

"In the service of Rajashriya Virajit Rajmanya Rajashri Appajipant Appa Saundalgekar residing at Nipani.

"Profound salutations of protege Venatarao Narayan Deshpande, Pant Kagal. Special representation is as follows. Further. Our Deshpandki land measuring 15 bighas, situate in Mouza Bhivshi, Prant aforesaid, stands in the name of Ti. Rajeshri Bajipant Baba, and I am the owner of the same. So from before the said land has been given you for cultivation for a fixed rent of Rs. 42 forty-two in Parali coin and at the time of Survey a road is shown in the said land and in it some land was covered by the road. Therefore, Rs. 6 six out of the said amount of rent are remitted to you and the said land is given you for cultivation by fixing a rent of Rs. 36 thirty-six in Parali coin per year. So from the Fasli year 1262 (1852-1853) you should pay every year thirty-six rupees the amount of siad rent by four instalments, and you should cultivate the land permanently. In the interval we shall never interfere with the land (that is) with you. After you, your heirs also should pay the amount of rent according to the said agreement and permanently enjoy the land. We are entitled to receive the amount of rent of the land and we are not at all entitled to take away the land from you and you should not give it up. Neither we nor our heirs will put forth any obstructions to act according to the agreement. The agreement is duly given in writing as above. Date 15th March 1853 being Sun year

ATTESTATIONS.

1 Keshawa Vithal Mutnalkar, residing at Nipani, my own handwriting.
1 Narhar Yeshwant Dahiwadkar, my own handwriting.

That document was registered, and in accordance with it, Appaji paid the yearly rent of Rs. 36 to Venkatrao until Venkatrao died in 1864 or 1865.

Venkatrao was succeeded as Watandar by his son, Ramchandra, who was the father of the plaintiffs. After Venkatrao had died, one Gundo, in 1869, brought a suit against Venkatrao's widow, to recover a debt which had been due to him by Venkatrao, and obtained against her a decree. In execution of that decree Gundo caused the land now in suit to be attached. Appaji intervened with an application to set aside the attachment on the ground that he held the lands as a permanent tenant, and thereupon the Court on the 20th June 1870, ordered that the landlord's interest in the lands should be sold without affecting Appaji's interest as a permanent tenant. At the sale, in execution of his decree, Gundo became the purchaser. It is not necessary to consider whether the Court had any power to order that sale.

On the 17th January 1872, it was agreed between Gundo and Appaji, by registered document, that Appaji, as the permanent tenant of the lands in suit, should pay to Gundo the Rs. 36 rent and for 20 years an additional sum of Rs. 42 a year. The Rs. 36 and Rs. 42 were paid yearly from 1872 to 1890 to Gundo by Appaji and after his death by his son Waman, who was the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

On the 16th May 1887, Ramchandra, the father of the plaintiffs, who was then the Watandar, executed a document, which was registered, by which he purported to grant to one Sintre a permanent lease of the lands now in suit at a rent of Rs. 50 a year, with a nazrana of Rs. 700, and put Sintre in possession of the lands. This led to disputes between Sintre, Waman, Gundo and one Nana Babaji Patil, who claimed to have bought the lands in execution of some decree; the disputes were referred by those persons to arbitration. Ramchandra was not a party to that arbitration. In that arbitration, Waman stated that he had been temporarily deprived of the possession of the lands. On the 1st January 1894, the arbitrators made their award and by it ordered that Waman should pay Rs. 700 to Sintre, Rs. 340 to Gundo and Rs. 1,150 to Nana Babaji, and should continue to enjoy the lands as a permanent tenant. That award was, on the 29th March 1894, made a decree of Court. The payments so ordered were made by Waman. From 1895 to 1902 Waman paid the rent of Rs. 36 a year to Ramchandra. In Ramchandra's receipts for those payments he acknowledged that Waman held the lands as a permanent tenant. In the Record of Rights of 1911-12 the defendant No. 1 was entered as the permanent tenant of the lands. Upon the death of Ramchandra the defendants tendered to the plaintiffs the rent of Rs. 36 yearly as their rent as permanent tenants, but the plaintiffs refused to receive the money so tendered. Ramchandra died on the 29th October 1902, and the plaintiffs succeeded him as the Watandars. Upon the facts which have briefly been stated being proved the Subordinate Judge found that the evidence in favour of the permanent tenancy alleged by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was overwhelming. He stated in his judgment that:—

"It is undisputed that the land sued for, is a Deshpande Vatan (Watan) Inam. There is no doubt, that the original grantor (Venkatrao) had only a life-interest in it and had no power to lease it beyond his lifetime. Plaintiffs' grandfather (Venkatrao), who passed (granted) the lease of 1853, died in 1864-5, and the plaintiffs' father (Ramchandra) had 12 years from that time for disputing the lease. Not having done so, plaintiffs' right of disputing the permanent lease and of claiming possession is barred. Rama v. Shamrao (2) and Radhabai v. Anantrav (3)."

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for six years' rent at the rate of Rs. 36 a year, amounting to Rs. 216, and otherwise dismissed the suit with costs.

From that decree the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Bombay. The appeal was heard by Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Mr. Justice Hayward. Those learned Judges stated that: "The only question which really arises in this appeal is, whether the defendants can claim to have established a right to a permanent tenancy by adverse possession." They held that adverse possession commenced to run on the death of Venkatrao, but they referred to the agreement of the 17th January 1872, between Gundo and Appaji, and holding that Gundo after the purchase by him in 1870, represented, the Watandar so far as these lands in question are concerned, they decided that it was impossible to hold that adverse possession in favour of the person claiming to be a permanent lessee continued to run after that agreement. If that decision were correct, as to which it is not necessary for their Lordships to express any opinion, Appaji and his son Waman were not holding adversely from January 1872, until 1894. Those learned Judges also held, and their Lordships think rightly, that there had been two breaks in the alleged adverse possession within 12 years of the death of Venkatrao, but they do not base the advice which they will give to His Majesty upon that fact. Those learned Judges, in conclusion, stated in their judgment that: "It appears to us, therefore, that the defendants cannot, on a review of the occurrences during the lifetime of the plaintiffs' father (Ramchandra), contend that there has been any continuous adverse possession for 12 years until the plaintiffs' father's death in 1902, which would entitle them to claim to occupy the land in suit as permanent tenants. It is not disputed that since 1902 the plaintiffs declined to accept rent from the defendants, and that their suit has been filed within 12 years of their father's death. For these reasons we set aside the decree of the lower Court and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession and mesne profits of the land in the occupation of the defendants," with all costs. From that decree this appeal has been brought by the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The other defendants are nominal respondents to this appeal; they have not appeared.

One of the authorities upon which the Subordinate Judge relied for his decision that the suit of the plaintiffs was barred by limitation was Radhabai v. Anantrav (3). That was a Full Bench decision of the High Court of Bombay in which Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., delivered the leading judgment. The judgments of the late Sir Charles Sargent always deserve and receive careful consideration by the Board. The material point of that decision, so far as it has a bearing on the present case, is briefly stated in the head-note to the report of that case thus:—

"Held (1), that, in the absence of fraud and collusion, adverse possession for twelve years during the lifetime of one holder of service Watan lands is a bar to succeeding holders."

The lands there in question were service Watan lands, to which section 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827 applied. The plaintiff there sued for the possession of service Watan lands and for mesne profits. The defendants claimed to be in possession of the lands under a grant of 1838 to them of the lands made by the plaintiffs' grandfather, who was, at the time of the grant, the Watandar, and they pleaded limitation by adverse possession; the adverse possession relied upon by the defendants being apparently their having continued in undisturbed possession for a period of 12 years after the death of the grantor. The plaintiff's case was that his grandfather, the grantor, had no power to make a grant of the lands except for his lifetime and that his (the plaintiff's) father had no authority to allow the lands to continue in the possession of the defendants. Sargent, C. J., and Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas had referred three questions to the Full Bench. It is only necessary to refer to the first of those questoions which was "1. Whether adverse possession for 12 years during the lifetime of one holder is a bar to succeeding holders." The Full Bench decided that, in the absence of fraud and collusion, the first question should be answered in the affirmative, leaving what is to be considered an adverse possession to be determined in each particular case. The question and answer to it of the Full Bench would, when looked at in ignorance of the facts of the case, appear to be general and not confined to a case of an absolute assignment of service Watan lands by a Watandar to a stranger, who alleged that he had obtained title by 12 years of undisturbed possession. It is necessary to see what that answer to the first question really meant. And for that purpose, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, necessary to see what the alienation then in question really was. It was not an alienation by a lease of a permanent tenancy to a tenant of the Watan; it was a sale and absolute assignment to a stranger to the Watan and to the family of the Watandar, followed by a period of 12 years after the death of the grantor, during which the stranger assignee was allowed by the successors of the Watandar grantor to continue in undisturbed possession of the Watan lands. In either case the grant would be beyond doubt an alienation which was prohibited by section 20 of Regulation XVI of 1827, but having regard to the facts of the case which was before Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., and Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas, which justified their order of reference to the Full Bench, all that the Full Bench can be taken as having decided was, that a stranger to the Watan, who had got possession of service Watan lands by an absolute assignment to him by a grantor, who was at the time of the grant the Watandar, could successfully defend a suit for posssession of those lands by a subsequent Watandar by proving that after the death of the grantor he had been in undisturbed possession of the lands for a period of 12 years. A careful consideration of Sir Charles Sargent's judgment, as given in Radhabai v. Anantrav (3), shows that he was considering the question referred to the Full Bench from the point of view of the grantee having been a stranger to the Watan. It is not necessary for their Lordships to decide in this case, whether the answer of the Full Bench limited as it must have been to the case of a stranger to the Watan, setting up as a defence, 12 years' adverse possession, was or was not correct, although they are constrained to say that it is somewhat difficult to see how a stranger to a Watan can acquire a title by adverse possession for 12 years of lands, the alienation of which was, in the interests of the State, prohibited. Their Lordships may say, further, that if it was necessary for them to decide, whether the answer of the Full Bench to the first question referred to that Bench was or was not correct it would be necessary for them to consider whether the Secretary of State for India in Council, as representing the interests and rights of the Crown in service Watan lands, was not a necessary party to a suit in which a stranger claimed that he was entitled to those lands by a right of adverse possession.

(2) 7 Bom. L. R. 135.
(3) 9 B. 198 at p. 210; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 133.

In the present case the defence of 12 years' adverse possession as permanent tenants is set up by persons who and their predecessors-in-title, always claimed to be and were tenants of service Watan lands, and in the opinion of their Lordships neither the defendants not their predecessors-in-title could have acquired any title to a permanent tenancy in the lands by adverse possession as against the Watandars from whom they held the lands.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Where a Hindu widow has mortgaged the property of her minor sons, who form a joint family, not as representing the family, but in the capacity of an owner claiming under a Will from her deceased husband, and the Will is found to be invalid, the mortgagee cannot enforce the charge against the family property on showing that the widow was the de facto guardian of her sons and the mortgage was created for legal necessity, for the widow having transferred as owner property which did not belong to her, the mortgage is void and it is quite irrelevant what was the widows' motive in executing the mortgage or what she did with the mortgage-money.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

The property in suit belonged originally to one Sheo Charan. He died leaving a son Sital. Sital had three sons, Debi now dead, Nandan and Sheo Nandan. On the 6th of August 1906 Sital made a Will in favour of his wife, Musammat Somari, of the property in suit and died soon after its execution. On the 16th August 1908 Musammat Somari mortgaged the property in favour of the wife of the plaintiff. This suit was brought by the heirs of the mortgagee to recover the amount then due under the mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property, and it was brought against Musammat Somari alone. In the plaint she is described as the mortgagor and there is no mention of her sons. Subsequently, on the application of Nandan Prasad for himself and as guardian of his minor brother Sheo Nandan, they were brought on the record as defendants and they alone defend the suit. They denied the execution of the deed or that there was consideration. In their written statement they said that Musammat Somari had no legal right to mortgage the house and that she had no claim whatever in it. In the mortgage deed the Will is recited and Musammat Somari claimed to be in full proprietary possession of the property under the Will and as owner she purports to mortgage the property for a sum of Rs. 250 for the payment of "miscellaneous debts and other needs." There is no mention in the deed itself that the money was required for the use of the minors.

The mortgage was executed by Musammat Somari claiming to be the sole owner of the property under her husband's Will. The suit also was brought on this basis against Musammat Somari alone. Nandan and Sheo Nandan, the two younger sons of Sital, asked to be joined in the suit on the ground that the property belonged to them and not to their mother. In other words, they claimed a title paramount to that of the mortgagor. Under these circumstances, the Trial Court might well have refused to allow them to be joined or to allow the title of the mortgagor to be brought into controversy as against third parties in a mortgage suit. This course was, however, not adopted. The Courts below have found that the Will was invalid, and that Musammat Somari had no title to the property. They have, nevertheless, allowed the suit on the ground that Musammat Somari was the de facto guardian of her minor sons and that the transaction was for legal necessity. That Musammat Somari was not the legal guardian of the minors was admitted. The family was a joint family and they had an elder brother Debi Prasad who was the head of the family.

On the facts found by the Court below, no question of legal necessity ever arose in the case at all. It is elementary law that one person cannot be bound by the act of another unless it is done in a representative capacity either as agent or guardian or in some similar capacity. Here Musammat Somari purported to be dealing as of right with property which was her own. It being found that the property was not her's any dealings with it on her part are ipso facto void, and questions as to the motives which induced her to execute the mortgage or what she did with the purchase-money are entirely irrelevant. If any authority is needed for this proposition it may be found in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balwant Singh v. Rev. Rockwell Clancy (1). In that case a mortgage was executed by one Sheoraj Singh who declared that he was the absolute owner in possession of the mortgaged property and that there was no co-sharer therein, and on this footing purported to mortgage it to the Bank of Upper India. In fact, the property was the joint property of Sheoraj Singh and his younger brother Maharaj Singh. Maharaj Singh did not join in the mortgage nor did it appear by the mortgage-deed that he had any proprietary interest in the mortgaged property. He was, however, induced to sign the mortgage-deed to afford evidence that he had assented to the taking of the loan by Sheoraj Singh and to the granting of the mortgage. A suit was brought on the mortgage against both brothers and was resisted by Maharaj Singh on the ground that he was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage and that the deed was not binding on him. The question of his minority was material on the plea that though he had not joined in the mortgage he has assented to it. The Courts in India found that he was a minor and dismissed the suit. In appeal to the Privy Council it was sought to make him liable on the ground that Sheoraj Singh was his de facto guardian and that the mortgage was executed in lieu of antecedent-debt, and their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:

"Having found as a fact that Maharaj Singh was a minor on the 28th of October 1892 it is not necessry for their Lordships to consider any other issue. This suit has been brought on the mortgage-deed of the 28th of October 1892 by the assignee of that mortgage, and as their Lordships have held that the mortgage was not made by Sheoraj Singh as the manager of the family or in any respect as representing Maharaj Singh, and as Maharaj Singh was then a minor, the mortgage-deed as against him and his interest in the estate was not merely voidable; it was void and of no effect, and must be regarded as a mortgage-deed to which he was not even an assenting party and as a mortgage-deed which did not affect him or his interest in the estate."

In the same way, in the present case, the answering defendants were minors at the execution of the mortgage and there is no question of their having assented to it. The mortgage was not made by Musammat Somari as representing the family estate or in any respect as representing the appellants. As against them and their interests the mortgage-deed is, therefore, not merely voidable; it was void and is of no effect, and was a mortgage-deed which did not affect them or their interest in the estate. Having found that Musammat Somari executed the mortgage not as representing the estate of the minors, but as claiming to be absolute owner of the property, the Courts below should have dismissed the suit as against the appellants and as against the mortgaged property which belonged to them. A personal decree against Musammat Somari herself has not been asked for in this suit. We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts including fees on higher scale.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, THROUGH THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD, AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 90 (d)—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 4, 107—Assignment of grant by Secretary of State—Registration—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 59—Grant of land for consideration for erecting ghat—Right whether runs with land—Pleadings and practice—Court, whether can make new case for parties—Appeal, second—New point, whether can be raised.

The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating to registration of documents must be read as merely supplementary to the provisions of the Registration Act, and the exceptions provided for by section 90 of the Registration Act must be taken to cover cases dealt with by section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 370, col. 2.]

An assignment of a grant by the Secretary of State falls within clause (d) of section 90 of the Registration Act and does not, therefore, require registration. [p. 370, col. 2.]

A grant of land for consideration for the purpose of erecting a Ghat, which provides that the grantee would have a proprietary right in the structure put up by him but not in the soil, is a right which runs with the land and does not fall within the provisions of section 59 of the Easements Act. [p. 371, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court is not competent to set up a case which does not arise out of the pleadings of the parties. [p. 370, col. 2.]

A new plea involving questions of fact cannot be raised in second appeal. [p. 371, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 8th March 1922, upholding a decree of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 28th June 1921.

Mr. Nizmat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff in the Court of first instance, and on appeal to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad the decree was confirmed. The reliefs which the plaintiff asked for in his plaint were as follows:—

(1) A declaratory decree be passed to the effect that the lease, dated the 31st July 1918, in favour of the plaintiff is not fit to be cancelled nor is the plaintiff liable to be ejected from the land, and (2) an injunction be issued that till the decision of the suit the defendant or the Rup Kalan Ghat Committee should not make any interference by building the house or in any other way. The suit as originally brought was against the Secretary of State for India in Council, but at a later stage of the hearing the Rup Kalan Ghat Committee was also made a party defendant and Babu Ganesh Prasad, Secretary of Ghat Institution, was the person whose name was brought on the record as representing that institution.

On the 31st July 1918 the Secretary of State for India in Council, through the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad, granted a lease of certain plots of land for a period of five years to the plaintiff. Amongst these lands is included plot No. 740 which is the subject-matter of dispute in this litigation. On the 11th December 1919 the Nazul Department of Fyzabad, acting on behalf of the Secretary of State, informed the plaintiff that the lease of the 31st July 1918 was forfeited and that the plaintiff should not interfere with the proposed constructions by the Rup Kalan Ghat Committee over plot No. 740 as that plot had been given to that Committee. This notice is stated to give the cause of action for the plaintiff's suit. The defence of the Secretary of State was that the lease was rightly forfeited. The Court of first instance upheld the plea relating to the forfeiture set up by the Deputy Commissioner on behalf of the Secretary of State. The defendant No. 2 put forward several pleas in answer to the plaintiff's case. Some of them were decided against him by the Court of first instance and others in his favour. The Court of first instance held on several grounds that the declaration sought for by the plaintiff could not be granted. One of the chief grounds arising out of the defence of the defendant No. 2, on which the decision of the Court of first instance was based, was that the Secretary of State had by a previous deed, dated the 11th November 1917, granted plot No. 740 to the defendant No. 2 and consequently he had no right left in that land which he could transfer subsequently in favour of the plaintiff. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge from whose decree this appeal is preferred is based on the following findings:—

(1) that the lease of the 31st July 1918 in respect of plot No. 740 was due to a mutual mistake of fact in relation to the Secretary of State's act in assigning the same to the defendant No. 2 under the agreement of the 11th November 1917; (2) that the lease of the 31st July 1918 was void for want of registration; (3) that plot No. 740 is covered by the deed of the 11th November 1917 and could consequently not be assigned by the Secretary of State to the plaintiff under the lease of the 31st July 1918, and (4) that the plaintiff's lease is an unregistered document while the deed of the defendant No. 2, dated the 11th November 1917, is a registered one and the latter should, therefore, give way to the former under section 50 of the Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908).

The appeal before me was argued by the learned Pleader for the appellant on the following lines:—

(1) that the document of the 31st July 1918 did not require registration; (2) that section 50 of the Indian Registration Act did not affect the operation of that document; (3) that the lease of the 31st July 1918 being void for mutual mistake of fact under the provisions of section 20 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) was a case set up by the learned Subordinate Judge; (4) that in any event the document of the 11th November 1917 amounted to a mere license and could consequently be revoked by the Secretary of State and that he revoked it when he executed the lease of the 31st July 1918, and (5) that the agreement set up by the defendant No. 2 of the 11th November 1917 did not include the plot in dispute and, therefore, the Secretary of State was competent to make a lease of it in favour of the plaintiff as he admittedly did under the document of the 31st July 1918.

As to point No. 1 I am of opinion that the contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant that the deed of the 31st July 1913 did not require registration is a sound one. So far as it purports to be an assignment of a grant by the Secretary of State for India in favour of the plaintiff, it clearly falls within the provision of clause (a) of section 90 of the Indian Registration Act, nor do the provisions of section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) invalidate the lease of the 31st July 1918 for want of registration, the reason being that the provisions of the last mentioned Act relating to registration of documents must be read as merely supplementary to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act (vide section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act) and when the provisions of the two Acts, that is to say, the one appearing in section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and the other in section 90 of the Indian Registration Act are read together there is no escape from the conclusion that the exceptions provided for by section 90 of the Registration Act must also cover cases dealt with by section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Point No. 2. Here again I am of opinion that the contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant must be sustained. The answer to the argument of the learned Subordinate Judge based on section 50 of the Indian Registration Act is furnished by sub-section (2) of section 90 of the Act and in view of the provision made in sub-section (2) it must be held that the lease of the 31st July 1918 was a registered document.

Point No. 3. I have gone through the pleadings in the case with the learned Counsel for both the parties and can find no trace of a case founded on mutual mistake of parties invalidating the document of the 31st July 1918. The learned Counsel for the respondent No. 2 frankly admits that there was no specific plea raised to that effect. I, therefore, hold that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in applying the provisions of section 20 of the Indian Contract Act to this case.

Point No. 4. As regards this point the learned Counsel for the respondents points out that this is a new case introduced by the Counsel for the appellant for the first time in the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court ; I agree with the learned Counsel in this respect. It is impossible to predicate of a plea of this nature that it could be decided without reference to questions of fact and it is merely too late to allow a plea involving questions of fact to be raised in the last Court. The learned Pleader for the appellant proceeded to contend that if he was not permitted to argue the case of revocation of license he could certainly rely on the provisions of section 59 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882). It may be that an argument founded on the provisons of that section raised merely a question of law and may be permitted to be raised even in second appeal but the argument is clearly founded on the assumption that the agreement of the 11th November 1917 was nothing but a grant of a license by the Secretary of State to the defendant No. 2 to do a certain act over the land granted thereby. I am of opinion that the true construction of that document is that it was a contract for consideration between the Secretary of State on the one hand and the defendant No. 2 on the other. The object of the agreement was to grant land to the defendant No.2 for the purpose of erecting a Ghat on the banks of the river Sarju in the town of Ajodhya. The money necessary for the masonry construction was to come out of the funds belonging to the defendant No. 2 and the Secretary of State was to obtain the benefit of all profits that may accrue therefrom. The document distinctly says that the defendant No. 2 shall have a proprietary right in the structure and it further says that the defendant No. 2 shall have no right in the soil. If, therefore, the defendant No. 2 did under this agreement acquire a right to build a pacca structure on the land of the Secretary of State for India that was a right which must held to run with the land. Such an interest falls within the first resolution of Spencer s case (Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. I, page 55, 11th Edition). The plaintiff, therefore, cannot be held to have been exonerated of the obligation created under the agreement of the 11th November 1917 by the mere fact that he has taken a lease afterwards of the land in suit from the Secretary of State. The point is, therefore, overruled.

Point No. 5. This part of the case occupied most of the time at the hearing of this appeal both of the Court and the learned Counsel for the parties. I am thankful to them for the exhaustive treatment of the matter underlying this point. After a careful and somewhat anxious consideration I have come to the conclusion that there are no sufficient grounds for interference with the concurrent findings of both the Courts in this behalf. The agreement of the 11th November 1917 specifies the land which is the subject-matter of the agreement in three different ways at the bottom of the document, first by the area made up of the dimensions from East to West and North to South. This area is stated to be 5 biswas, 4 biswansis, 14 kachwansis, the line drawn from East to West indicating a length of 82 feet while the line drawn between the North and the South points is 91 feet. This description, therefore, is made up of two parts and when either is made applicable to the local situation of the land which was the subject-matter of the agreement it would comprise plot No. 740. The third description is given by the boundaries and it is admitted that within those boundaries falls plot No. 740. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that in the body of the document the recital is that the land specified at the bottom of the deed was granted by the order of the 10th February 1917 and that when a reference is made to that order a latent ambiguity arises in respect of the subject-matter of the agreement.

In the first place, I do not think that the order of the 10th February 1917 is referred to in the agreement for the prupose of the specification of the land. In my judgment the reference to that order merely connotes the source of the original grant which was being formally confirmed by means of the agreement of the 11th November 1917, but even if we construe the agreement to mean that it incorporates the order of the 10th February 1917 as a part of the description of the property there is absolutely nothing in that order which comes into conflict with any one of the several descriptions given at the foot of the agreement. As a matter of fact, the order of the 10th February 1917 throws back on some previous correspondence in the matter between the Deputy Commissioner and his subordinate officers who were concerned in the proposal of making a grant of some land to the defendant No. 2 for the purpose of constructing Ghat on the banks of the river Sarju in Ajodhya.

In this correspondence there is a reference to a plan prepared for elucidating the point on which the Deputy Commissioner had originally insisted that the land granted shall in no event extend to a point so as to encroach in any manner on kacha path. This plan is Exhibit B-26, and the kacha path is shown at the South end of plot No. 740. I am, therefore, of opinion that the boundary of the land given in the agreement of the 11th November 1917 as indicating the identity and extent of the land granted is a correct one and should be accepted. Even if we were to come to the conclusion that there is a conflict between the order of the 10th February 1917 and the agreement of the 11th November 1917 in respect of the specification of the property I should have no hesitation in holdng that the specification indicated by the boundaries should be preferred and given effect to. But at its highest the argument of the learned Pleader for the appellant comes to this, that the order of the 10th February 1917 should be treated as a part and parcel of the agreement itself. I am prepared to treat the order as such. The result is that there is discrepancy between one specification of property and another in the same document. This being the result to which I reach, the principle of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Zeenut Ali v. Ram Doyal Poddar (1) applies. That principle was applied to a case decided by a Bench of this Court Ganga Prasad v. Subhag Chand (2).

There remains one more point to be considered. The Court of first instance refused to award any costs to the defendant No. 2 though the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in its entirety. The ground of the refusal was that a large number of pleas urged by that defendant were frivolous and were overruled by that Court. The defendant No. 2 objected to this order of the Court of the first instance when the appeal was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the objecton and modified the decree of the Court of first instance by awarding costs to the defendant No. 2 against the plaintiff. I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge should not have done this. The reasons given by the learned Munsif for the order which he passed relating to the costs were good and the learned Subordinate Judge gives no reason whatsoever for interfering with that exercise of the discretion by the Court of first instance.

I, therefore, modify the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge only to this extent that his order in so far as it awards costs to the defendant No. 2 in the Court of first instance will be set aside. In other respects the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Decree, preliminary, for sale on mortgage—Confirmation on appeal—Application for decree absolute—Starting point of limitation.

In a suit for sale on a mortgage, if an appeal has been preferred against the preliminary decree, and the decree has been confirmed, the starting point of limitation for an application for a final decree is the date of the appellate decree.

Nizamuddin Shah v. Bohra Bhim Sen, 43 Ind. Cas. 870; 40 A. 203; 16 A. L. J. 85 and Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jiwan Lal, 42 Ind. Cas. 93; 39 A. 641; 15 A. L. J. 734, followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 2nd December 1921.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Gulab Singh was the mortgagor, and Gopi Ram was the mortgagee, who is now represented by the plaintiff. Mahabir Prasad was joned as a defendant in the suit by the plaintiff for sale on the mortgage executed by Gulab Singh, as a subsequent purchaser of part of the mortgaged property. He set up, among other defences, that he had a prior mortgage on the property. The plaintiff's suit was decreed subject to his paying off the prior mortgage set up by Mahabir Prasad. A preliminary decree was passed on the 14h of March 1916. From that decree the plaintiff appealed against so much of the decree as directed him to pay off the prior mortgage set up by Mahabir Prasad. That appeal was decreed by the District Judge on the 2nd of June 1916. From that decree Mahabir Prasad appealed to the High Court and his appeal was dismissed on the 1st of August 1918. Then the plaintiff applied for a final decree on the 14th of April 1920. Both Courts have allowed the application. The defendant, Mahabir Prasad, who is now represented by the appellant in this appeal, contended that the application was barred by limitation. Both Courts below have held that limitation began to run from the date of the High Court's decree, namely, the 1st of August 1918 and that, therefore, it was well within limitation. In appeal before us it is argued that inasmuch as in the appeal by the plaintiff before the District Judge against the prior mortgage set up by Mahabir Prasad some of the defendants were not made parties, that decree must be taken to be the starting point of limitation. It seems to us that, inasmuch as Mahabir Prasad himself appealed to this High Court, he cannot be heard to advance that plea. Reliance has been placed on a case reported as Gayan Singh v. Ata Husain (1) but there the objection was upheld in favour of the parties who had not appealed. It seems to us that this case is covered by the authority of Nizamuddin Shah v. Bohra Bhim Sen (2), which followed the Full Bench ruling in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jiwan Lal (3). In our opinion the appeal must be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2), O. XX—Preliminary decree—Order in supplemental proceedings leading to final decree—O. XX, whether exhaustive—Trusts—*Trustee de son tort, liability of—Accounts, nature of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, application of—Suit for accounts against trustee de son tort.

In a suit relating to the administration of a debutter estate and for a declaration that an execution purchase of a portion of the trust estate by the trustee in the name of his son was invalid and inoperative, the Judicial Committee affirming the decree of the High Court held the sale to be invalid directed an account to be taken showing what if anything was due from the shebait to the estate and on the basis of this order of the Judicial Committee the Subordinate Judge made an order defining the extent and character of liability of the shebait to render an account and specifying the mode, the period and the properties:

Held, that this order of the Subordinate Judge was a decree, being an order which was in essence a preliminary decree in the supplementary proceeding leading up to the final decree to be made therein. [p. 376, col. 1.]

It is not essential that an adjudication should be covered by one of the specific cases of preliminary decrees mentioned in O. XX of the Civil Procedure Code in order that it may form the basis of a final decree. Those cases are illustrations of preliminary decrees. Whether an order possesses the qualities of a decree preliminary or final or partly preliminary and partly final clearly depends upon its contents. [p. 376, col. 1.]

It may be that the Legislature contemplated that, ordinarily, there should be one preliminary decree and one final decree in a suit; the preliminary decree ascertaining what is to be done, while the final decree stating the result achieved by means of the preliminary decree, but there may be exceptions. [p. 376, col. 1.]

If a person, by mistake or otherwise, assumes the character of trustee when it really does not belong to him and so becomes a trustee de son tort, he may be called to account by the cestui que trust for the moneys he received under colour of the trust; such a person cannot be heard to say for his own benefit that he had no right to act as a trustee. [p. 376, col. 2.]

Under the Limitation Act a suit for accounts in respect of trust property falls within the scope of section 10 and a trustee de son tort stands in the same position as an express trustee. [p. 376, col. 2.]

There are two forms of account which can be claimed by a cestui que trust against the trustee. One is the common account being an account of all the moneys or funds comprised in the trust deed or from time to time subject to the trusts thereof as have been possessed or received by the trustee or by any person by his order. The other is an account, in addition to the former account, of the moneys or fund comprised in the trust-deed or from time to time subject to the trusts thereof which might without the wilful neglect or default of the trustee have been so possessed or received. [p. 377, col. 1.]

In taking the common account the cestui que trust cannot charge the trustee with anything beyond his actual receipts and is not permitted to show that there is some part of the trust funds which the trustee should have got in and has failed to get in. [p. 377, col. 1.]

But a trustee, when a common account is being taken, can properly be charged with a breach of trust which arises on the accounts themselves; he stands charged with his receipts and if he seeks to discharge himself by improper payments the discharge is disallowed. On the other hand, in order to obtain an account on the footing of wilful default against a trustee the cestui que trust must allege and prove at least one instance of wilful default. [p. 377, col. 1.]

An order on the footing of wilful default is a very strong one to make against an accounting party and is not made unless there has been a loss of assets received or assets which might have been received. [p. 377, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of Hooghly, dated the 5th of September 1921.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravartty, (with him Babus Narendra Kumar Bose, Haradhone Chatterjee and Rama Prasad Mookerjee), for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order for account made in a proceeding supplemental to a suit instituted by the respondent against the appellant, for the administration of a debutter estate, for the removal of the trustee, for the appointment of a new trustee or Receiver, for declaration that an execution sale of a portion of the trust estate when it was purchased by the trustee in the name of his son was invalid and inoperative, for proper investment of a sum of Rs. 11,500 alleged to form part of the trust estate and for other incidental reliefs. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court. On appeal to this Court, the judgment was set aside and the suit was decreed in the following terms:—

"It is declared that the sale of Bahirgora held on the 14th January 1913 is not operative against the debutter estate, but the first defendant (the shebait) is entitled to be reimbursed, the precise amount recoverable by him to be investigated by the Court below. Steps will be taken forthwith to place the debutter estate in the hands of a Receiver to be appointed by this Court and the first defendant will cease to be shebait from the date when the Receiver takes possession:" Manohar Mockerjee v. Peary Mohan Mookerjee (1).

On appeal to the Judicial Committee this decision was affirmed: Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Monohar Mukerji (2). The judgment of the Judicial Committee concluded as follows:—

"An order must be made declaring that the purchase by the second appellant (son of the shebait) was invalid and that proper and necessary steps should be taken to secure the property, and that the first appellant (the shebait) is entitled, subject as herein mentioned, to re-payment of the purchase-money. An account should be directed showing what, if anything, is due from the first appellant (the shebait) to the estate, and such money should be deducted from the purchase-moneys, the balance, if any, of the moneys in Court to be paid out and the first appellant (the shebait) to have a charge on the estate for such sum."

On the basis of this order of the Judicial Committee, the Subordinate Judge has made an order which defines the exte t and character of liability of the shebait to render an account, and specifies the mode, the period, and the properties. The shebait has appealed against this order.

The plaintiff-respondent has raised an objection to the competency of the appeal on the ground that the order is not one of those expressly made appealble as an order by the Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant has urged that the order is in essence a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The term "decree" is defined as the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of; it is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit. A decree may be partly preliminary and partly final. There has been some diverg nce of judicial opinion as to the tests to be applied for ascertaining whether a particular decision constitutes an adjudication on the rights of the parties with regard to any of the matters in controversy in the suit. It was held at one time by the High Court of Bombay that a decision that a suit is not bad for misjoinder or that it is not barred by limitation or a decision that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit was a preliminary decree; Sidhanath Dhondev Garud v. Ganesh Govind Garud (3); Narayan Balkrishna Kulkarni v. Gopal Jiv Ghadi (4). This extreme view was disapproved in this Court in the case of Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath (5), and has subsequently been abandoned in the Bombay High Court itself; see the Full Bench decision in Chanmalswami Rudraswami v. Gangadharappa Baslingappa (6) which was applied in Bharma Shidappa Pujari v. Bhamagavda Shivagavda (7) and Municipal Committee of Nasik v. Collector of Nasik (8). According to the view now adopted in Bombay, the word "matter" in the definition means the actual subject-matter of the suit with reference to which some relief is sought, and the word "right" means substantive rights of the parties, which directly affect the relief to be granted, or which, in the words of the definition, relate to all or any of the matters in controversy. Tested from this point of view, there is really no room for dispute that the order under appeal is a decree. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhup Indar Bahadur v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (9), where Lord Hobhouse held that an adjudication that mesne profits were recoverable in respect of a defined period was in its nature a decree within the meaning of the Code. This is not inconsistent with the decision in Bhartendu v. Yaqub Husain (10) and Gulu sam Bivi v. Ahmadsa Rowther (11), and is in accord with the view adopted in Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath (5). It may be conceded that the Legislature contemplated that, ordinarily, there should be one preliminary decree and one final decree in a suit; the preliminary decree ascertains what is to be done, while the final decree states the result achieved by means of the preliminary decree. But as observed by Piggott, J., in Yakub Husain v. Bharat Indo (12) there may be exceptions, and the case before us furnishes an instance. Here the original suit was for removal of the shebait, for cancellation of the judicial sale, and for recovery of the trust property. The decree made in the suit has directed the removal of the shebait and the cancellation of the sale subject to investigation of accounts to be rendered by the shebait in a supplementary proceeding. The order which has now been made is in essence a preliminary decree in the supplementary proceeding and will lead up to the final decree to be made therein. It is not essential that an adjudication should be covered by one of the specific cases of preliminary decrees mentioned in O. XX of the Code in order that it may form the basis of a final decree; those cases are illustrations of preliminary decrees and help us in determining the true meaning of the definition of the term "decree". Whether the order made by the Judge possesses the qualities of a decree, preliminary or final or partly preliminary and partly final, clearly depends upon its contents. We are of opinion that the order now under appeal is a decree and that the objection to the competency of the appeal cannot be sustained.

The objections urged against the order made by the Subordinate Judge may be grouped, substantially, under two heads, namely, period of account and method of account. The Subordinate Judge has directed the shebait to render an account for the period which has elapsed since the death of his father on the 19th July 1888. As stated in the judgment of this Court, the appellant assumed the office of shebait immediately on the death of his father, though he did not become lawfully entitled thereto till his two uncles, Naba Krishna and Bijoy Krishna, had been removed from the scene by death, the former on the 11th September 1890 and the latter on the 29th January 1894. This plainly does not make any difference in the liability of the appellant. It is well settled that if a person, by mistake or otherwise, assumes the character of trustee when it really does not belong to him and so becomes a trustee de son tort, he may be called to account by the cestui que trust for the moneys he received under colour of the trust, such a person cannot be heard to say for his own benefit that he had no right to act as a trustee; see the judgment of the Earl of Selborne in Lyell v. Kennedy (13), where Rackham v. Siddall (14) and Life Association of Scotland v. Siddall (15) were approved. Nor does any question of limitation arise. No accounts have ever been demanded or rendered, and we are not called upon to consider what period of limitation would be applicable if a suit for accounts were now to be instituted. But we may observe that the decision in Dhanpat Singh v. Mohesh Nath Tewari (16) is an authority for the proposition that under the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, a suit for accounts in respect of trust property falls within the scope of section 10 and a trustee de son tort stands in the same position as an express trustee.

As regards the method of accounting, the Subordinate Judge has held that the Commissioner will enquire if any loss has been occasioned to the debutter estate by the wilful neglect or misconduct of the appellant during the period that he was in charge thereof as shebait, de facto or de jure, and the amount will be added to his liability. The appellant has urged that this direction is erroneous. To test the validity of this contention, we may usefully recall that, as explained by Kindersley, V. C., in Partington v. Reynolds (17), there are two forms of account which can be claimed by a cestui que trust against the trustee. One is an account of all such of the moneys or funds comprised in the trust-deed or from time to time subject to the trust thereof as has been possessed or received by the trustee or by any person by his order or for his use. The other is an account, in addition to the former account, of the moneys or funds comprised in the trust deed or from time to time subject to the trust thereof, which might, without the wilful neglect or default of the trustee, have been so possessed or received; see the judgment of Lord Cottenham, L. C., in Terrell v. Matthews (18). The former is the common account and is given as of course when a decree is made for general administration. In taking the common account, the cestui que trust cannot charge the trustee with anything beyond his actual receipts and it is not permitted to show that there is some part of the trust funds which the trustee should have got in and has failed to get in; Dowse v. Gorton (19). But a trustee, where a common account is being taken, can properly be charged with a breach of trust which arises on the accounts themselves; he stands charged with his receipts and if he seeks to discharge himself by improper payments, the discharge is disallowed; In re Stevens, Cooke v. Stevens (20). On the other hand, in order to obtain an account on the footing of wilful default against a trustee, the cestui que trust must allege and prove at least one instance of wilful default. He must consequently prove that there is some part of the trust funds which should have been received but was not. When an account is ordered in this form he is thus liable not only for rent actually received but also for not letting the property if possible or not obtaining the full rent obtainable, Noyes v. Pollock (21), In re Symons, Luke v. Tonkin (22). An order on the footing of wilful default is a very strong one to make against an accounting party and is not made unless there has been a loss of assets received or assets which might have been received; In re Stevens Cooke v. Stevens (23), In re Stevens, Cooke v. Stevens (20), In re Wrightson, Wrightson v. Cooke (24). It is plain that wilful default is a relative term, and, in the words of Bowen, L. J., in Noyes v. Pollock (21), implies an existing duty on the part of the accounting party in which default has been made and may consist in knowingly doing what he ought not to do or knowingly omitting to do what he ought to do. In re Owens, Jones v. Owens (25) (Cotton, L. J.), In re Young and Harston's Contract (26) (Bowen, L. J.). Unless there is sufficient proof, it is not right to insert in a judgment any declaration of liability or even an enquiry as to liability based upon supposed breach of duty; In re Stevens, Cooke v. Stevens (20) (Lindley, L. J.) It was observed by Stirling, J., In re Barclay, Barclay v. Andrew (27), that the rule as to wilful default is not now so strict as it was before the Judicature Acts, and in a proper case, it is competent for the Court, upon the further consideration of an action to charge trustees with interest on balances although no case of wilful default has been raised by the pleadings and the question of interest was not referred to in the judgment. Shaw v. Turbett (28). Under the former practice, if the cestui qui trust discovered in the course of the suit that the trustee had been guilty of misconduct, his remedy was by filing, with the leave of the Court, a supplemental bill adapted to the state of circumstances. Hodson v. Ball (29), In re Youngs, Doggett v. Revett (30). Under the present practice where the cestui que trust has charged wilful default in his pleadings, either originally or as amended, but has not obtained a judgment on that footing, the Court can at any stage of the proceedings order an account to be taken on that footing, if evidence of wilful default is adduced. Thus, if in the prosecution of enquiries under an ordinary judgment, facts come out which, if proved at the trial, would have enabled the cestui que trust to have then obtained an enquiry as to wilful default that enquiry will be added. Coope v. Carter (31), In re Fryer, Martindale v Picquot (32), Brooker v. Brooker (33), In re Symons, Luke v. Tonkin (22), In re Youngs, Doggett v. Revett (30). We are of opinion that this course may be appropriately followed in the present proceedings. The suit was not expressly framed as a suit for accounts on the footing of wilful default throughout; the accounts directed unavoidably extend over a long period of time, as there has been no adjustment of accounts between the shebait and the debutter estate at any time, and the shebait cannot make good his claim to an indemnity unless the net balance is determined on a scrutiny of the accounts for the whole period. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the direction for account on the footing of wilful default should be expunged and a common account taken as explained above. Liberty will, however, be reserved to the plaintiff or other party interested in the taking of the account, to apply, when the accounts have been lodged, for a direction that the Commissioner should take the account on the footing of wilful default either in respect of any particular matter or generally. It may be pointed out that an account on the footing of wilful default may be taken in two ways, first, the Court may think that the instances of wilful default brought forward are not sufficient to justify a general account upon the footing of wilful default, and in such a case the Court will direct special enquiries only with regard to the particular transactions in question, or, secondly, although only one or two cases of wilful default are proved, they may be of such a character as to induce the Court to direct an account generally on the footing of wilful default, applying to all the acts of the trustee; Coope v. Carter (31), In re Stevens, Cooke v. Stevens (23), Sleight v. Lawson (34), Harvey v. Bradley (35). It would not be right to anticipate at this stage what directions may be found necessary. But we may add that the lower Court will have to give effect to the views previously expressed by this Court upon the question of the sum of Rs. 11,500 and the costs of the previous litigation. We are further of opinion that the direction given by the Subordinate Judge that if the accounts show a balance in favour of the debutter estate, there will be a personal decree against the shebait, should be expunged. It is needless to decide this question hypothetically and in advance before the facts have been ascertained. We are further of opinion that when the accounts are taken, notice should be given to the new shebait or if there is a dispute as to the succession to the shebaitship, to the Receiver who may be appointed in a suit instituted for that purpose. The death of the shebait during the pendency of this appeal does not obviously affect the terms upon which his personal estate can claim an indemnity from the debutter estate, and the decision in Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhya (36) does not touch the matter. We may add, finally, that there is no substance in the technical objection that the order of the Subordinate Judge is ultra vires, because he dealt with the matter before the order of His Majesty in Council had been formally transmitted by this Court to his Court.

In view of the nature of the questions which may require consideration, we reserve liberty to the parties to apply to this Court, should any real difficulty arise in giving effect to our orders; ordinarily, however, applications should be made to the Subordinate Judge for further directions as to the accounts.

Subject to the modifications indicated above, the order of the Subordinate Judge will stand confirmed and each party will pay his costs in this Court.

GOSAWMI RAM PURI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption—Muhammadan Law of pre-emption, adoption of, by Hindus—Principle, whether can be extended—Burden of proof.

There should be no extension of the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption among Hindus beyond the limits established by proof of custom. [p. 380, col. 2.]

Where it has been proved that the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption has been adopted by Hindus with respect for house property, it cannot be presumed that the right of pre-emption extends to other kinds of property also and the burden is on the plaintiff to prove such extension. [p. 380, col. 1.]

Jagjiwan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji, 60 Ind. Cas. 901; 45 B. 604; 23 Bom. L. R. 81, followed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 2nd June 1921.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal, Iqbal Ahmad and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the dispute in this case is a small plot of land, No. 1293, situated in Ramapura, one of the quarters of the city of Benares. According to the finding of the Court below it has been used for the cultivation of fruit trees. The parties to the suit are Hindus and the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to pre-empt a sale of the plot in question made in favour of the defendant-appellant.

It was alleged in the 4th paragraph of the plaint that a custom of pre-emption prevails in the city of Benares upon which the plaintiff relied for his right. It was further pleaded in the 6th paragraph of the plaint that the plaintiff had observed the preliminary formalities on hearing of the sale, from which it is to be understood that the plaintiff admits that pre-emption as exercised in Benares City must be sought and enforced in accordance with the procedure laid down by the Muhammadan Law.

Both Courts have decreed the plaintiff's claim. In appeal the main contention is, that as the plaintiff had failed to prove that the custom alleged extends to the purchase of lands, as distinct from houses his suit should have been dismissed. It is common ground that a custom of pre-emption relating to house property and based upon the Muhammadan Law obtained in the City of Benares. This custom has been affirmed by a long series of judicial decisions. It is argued, however, that no judicial recognition has been extended to pre-emption where the subject of sale is land as distinct from house property.

It is true that, in the course of the trial, the plaintiff was able to produce a copy of a judgment delivered in the year 1865 in which pre-emption of a plot of land within the City was decreed. It is also shown that the judgment in question contains a somewhat obscure reference to a decree for pre-emption of land passed in the year 1853. But it is argued that this is no adequate proof of a custom of pre-emption relating to land in the City. The learned Judge of the Court below took the view that, inasmuch as it had been established that the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption had been adopted with respect to house property, it should be presumed that the right of pre-emption extended to other kinds of property which may be pre-empted under the Muhammadan Law and that consequently the land in suit, viz., an orchard, was so liable to pre-emption. He says there is no proof that the custom in Benares is confined to houses. It was, however, for the plaintiff to prove that the custom he relied upon extended to property other than houses and, in our opinion, he failed to do so. The facts that a decree for pre-emption for a piece of land was passed so far back as the year 1865 and that possibly a similar decree had been passed some years earlier would not be sufficient to show that such a custom extended to lands within the City. The fact that no instance of the pre-emption of such lands could be established between the year 1865 and the year 1920 when this suit was brought, is, in our judgment, the strongest possible proof that no such custom exists. There is no more prolific source of litigation in this Province than the law of pre-emption and it is impossible that had there been such a custom there should not have been many cases brought out in the Courts during this long period during which there must have been numerous instances of sales of plots of land within the City. In the ruling reported as Jagjivan Haribhai v. Kalidas Mulji (1) the Bombay High Court in dealing with a case from the Surat District refused to extend the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption to agricultural lands although it was established that this law had been adopted generally with respect to house property in the district. The learned Judge of the Court below was, however, of opinion that the principle laid down in this judgment should not be followed here because the law of pre-emption has to a large extent been adopted in this Province in the villages and with respect to zemindari property. But the considerations which apply in the case of village property do not apply necessarily to property in the cities. The custom in the villages has grown up out of the desire to prevent the intrusion of strangers into the co-parcenary bodies; no such consideration would arise in the cities, where people of all classes congregate together.

We think the principle laid down in the Bombay case is the right one to follow and that there should be no extension of the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption among Hindus beyond the limits established by proof of custom.

It is here proved that the Hindus of Benares have adopted the Muhammadan Law with respect to the pre-emption of houses. It is not, however, established that this law has been adopted so as to extend to property of other descriptions. The plaintiff has failed to prove his case and, accepting the appeal, we set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the suit of the plaintiff be dismissed with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Application against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 12th August 1922.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Madho Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this application is whether, when an application to have a suit decided ex parte restored to the file has been dismissed for default, an application to set aside that dismissal lies under O. IX, r. 9, read with section 141, Civil Procedure Code. The question is one on which the High Courts of Patna and Calcutta have come to diametrically opposite conclusions. The Patna High Court in Bhubaneswar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (1) and again in Ramgulam Singh v. Sheo Deonarain Singh (2) holds that no such application lies. The Calcutta High Court, on the other hand, in Bepin Behari Saha v. Abdul Barik (3) has held that it does lie. The facts of this case briefly are that on 26th July 1921 an ex parte decree was given against the defendant under O. IX, r. 6. On 29th July 1921 she applied to have that decree set aside. Her application was dismissed for default on 3rd September 1921. On the very same day she applied to have her application restored and the learned Judge was satisfied on the evidence which she produced that she had merely been temporarily absent from the Court for a necessary purpose and that it was not owing to her fault that her application was dismissed. He accordingly restored the application. The only published authority of this Court bearing on the question is a decision of Mr. Lindsay in Gauri v. Hinga (4) where he held that O. IX, r. 9 (read, of course, with section 141) is applicable to an order dismissing for default an application to set aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90. He pointed out that O. IX has been held inapplicable to execution proceedings, as there successive applications for execution can always be brought, but that this was not the case with the order before him. It appears to me on general grounds that the view of Mr. Lindsay and of the Calcutta High Court should be followed. If an application of this kind is dismissed through error the person aggrieved ought in natural justice to have the opportunity of getting the dismissal set aside and I see no reason for so limiting the language of section 141 that it cannot cover such a case. It is suggested that there is another remedy by way of review but this is a limited remedy which is not always available. If I thought that O. IX, read with section 141, did not cover the case I would even be prepared to hold in a case such as this that the Court could restore the application under its inherent powers. As there is a provision of law applicable, however, it is not necessary to resort to section 151. It is brought to my notice by the learned Advocate for the respondent that a similar view has been taken by the High Court at Lahore in Abdul Rahman Shah v. Shahana (5).

For the above reasons I dismiss the present application with costs.

Pre-emption—Three successive suits between same parties—Decrees in two suits—Dismissal of third for default—Defendant becoming co-sharer—Dismissal, whether has retrospective effect.

Plaintiff wanted to pre-empt a sale, but before the institution of his suit, the vendor made another sale of another share in the same village in favour of the same vendee. Subsequent to the suit, the vendee made a gift of the shares sold to him under the two deeds to the defendant. After this transfer a second suit to pre-empt the second sale was instituted. Subsequently, the original vendor executed a deed purporting to be a deed of gift in favour of the same defendant. The plaintiff filed a third suit to pre-empt this transfer. The Court of first instance dismissed all the three suits. On appeal, the first two suits were decreed and the third was remanded, but was ultimately dismissed for default. The defendant appealed to the High Court and urged that, on the dismissal of the third suit, he had become a co-sharer by virtue of the gift and that the dismissal must be given a retrospective effect:

Held, that the claim for pre-emption could not be defeated by virtue of the dismissal of the third suit which took place long after the date of decree of the first Court. [p. 383, col 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muthra, dated the 13th August 1921.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals by a defendant arising out of two suits for pre-emption.

On the 11th of June 1919 defendant No. 2 executed a sale-deed in favour of Jamuna Prasad, defendant No. 1, of a certain share in Mahaban. This was followed by another sale-deed, dated the 11th of May 1920, of another share in the same village. On the 12th of June 1920 a suit for pre-emption was instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents to pre-empt the first sale. After the written statement in that suit had been filed Jamuna Prasad executed a deed of gift on the 17th of August 1920 under which he transferred the shares sold under the previous two sale-deeds in favour of the idol defendant-appellant. It was after this transfer that a second suit to pre-empt the second sale was filed on the 29th of November 1920. Subsequently, on the 14th of February 1921, Muhammad Saddiq-ul-Hussain, one of the original vendors, executed a deed which purported to be a deed of gift in favour of the defendant-appellant. The day after that a third suit was instituted to pre-empt this transfer. The Court of first instance disposed of all the three suits on the 28th of February 1921 and dismissed all the three suits. On appeal the two suits for pre-emption were decreed and the third was remanded. It is suggested before us that the third suit was ultimately dismissed for default.

On behalf of the defendant it is contended that, inasmuch as the third suit finally failed for want of prosecution the dismissal must be given a retrospective effect with the result that the defendant-appellant had become a co-sharer by virtue of the transfer of the 14th of February 1921 and, therefore, the other suits also were liable to be dismissed. We may point out that the learned District Judge in the two cases has come to a distinct finding of fact that the transfer of the 14th of February 1921 was in reality a sale and not a gift. If it had been a gift then there can be no doubt that on the 14th of February 1921 the defendant would have acquired a mature title as a co-sharer. On the finding, however, the transfer was only a sale. The result is that on the 28th of February 1921, when the first Court passed its decree, the defendant's right under the deed of transfer dated the 14th of February 1921 was still being challenged and he had not become a co-sharer in the village. We think, therefore, that there could have been no justification for the Court of first instance to dismiss the other two suits on the sole ground that the defendant had become a co-sharer. We may point out that but for this last transfer the defendant-appellant was a stranger to the mahal.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied on the case of Behari Lal v. Mohan Singh (1). In that case, however, the defendant-vendee had acquired the property under a deed of gift before the decree of the first Court was passed and which deed of gift obviously could not have been challenged by a suit, for pre-emption. That case, therefore, is clearly distinguishable. In the present case we have only got to see what decree the Court of first instance should have passed. If the Court of first instance wrongly dismissed the claim, the plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by acquisition of title by the defendant, on a subsequent dismissal of the third suit. This was the principle accepted in the case of Sakina Bibi v. Amiran (2) with which we agree. The result, therefore, is that the claim for pre-emption of the two previous sales cannot be defeated by virtue of the dismissal of the third suit which took place on the 29th of November 1921 long after the date of decree of the first Court.

The appeals are, in our opinion, without force and are hereby dismissed but without costs as no one appears for the respondents.

KUMAR ARUN CHANDRA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 9, 11, 34, 35—Absence of entry in document, relevancy of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 50, presumption under, rebuttal of—Appeal, second—Error as to admissibility of evidence—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Admission of appeal filed out of time.

Where a document is admissible in evidence, it can be utilised for the purpose of showing that the absence of an entry therein implies the non-existence of a matter. [p. 386, col. 1.]

The fact of absence of entry is relevant but its effect is to be determined in the light of the general evidence in the case. [p. 386, col. 1.]

The question whether a document is admissible in evidence as a public document is fundamentally distinct from the question whether its contents are binding without proof of other matters. [p. 387, col. 1.]

A sub-division of a tenure does not affect the continuity of the tenure or render inapplicable the provisions of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 388, col. 1.]

A slight variation of rent, even though not explained, does not deprive the tenant of the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 388, col. 1.]

When the defect in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is due to an error as to the admissibility of evidence, its findings can be impeached in second appeal. [p. 388, col. 1.]

Where certain connected appeals could not have been brought in without copies of the judgments, until after the main appeal had been lodged with complete sets of papers, the Appellate Court would without hesitation exercise in favour of the appellants its discretion under section 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 388, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decision of the Special Judge, Noakhali, dated the 5th February 1920, reversing those of the Assistant Settlement Officers, Noakhali, dated the 3rd, 13th, 26th August and 12th September 1918.

Babu Mahendranath Roy (with him Babus Dhirendra Lal Khastgir, Nagendra Nath Bose and Asiranjan Chatterjee), for the Appellants.—Batwara papers are not public documents within the meaning of section 35 of the Evidence Act. See Perma Roy v. Kishen Roy (1). They are not admissible in evidence against tenants. See Drobo Moyee Gosmanee v. Dhurmo Doss Koondoo (2), Gopal Chunder Shaha v. Madhub Chunder Saha (3). [MOOKERJEE, J.—The question is whether absence of an entry in a document is relevant.]

See Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (11). The judgment of the High Court is reported as Imam Bandi v. Matasuddi (12). The words used in section 35 of the Evidence Act are "entry" and "stating a fact in issue," so that, strictly speaking, absence of an entry cannot come under that section. But where section 34 of the Evidence Act applies, absence of an entry may be relevant.

In the present case if the partition papers are admitted in evidence, having regard to the language used in section 35, absence of an entry is not relevant. Refers to Sadhu Sahu v. Raja Ram (13). The omission to state a fact in a document which the party is not under any statutory liability to do, is not relevant and is not admissible in evidence.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Charu Chander Biswas and Narayan Chandra Kar), for the Respondent.—The Second Appeals Nos. 1701, 2162, 2163 and 2164 were filed out of time and should not have been admitted.

As regards the other appeals, they are concluded by findings of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The Batwara papers were prepared under Regulation II of 1793, section 8, clause (8). It is a public document and would be admissible in evidence under sections 11 and 13 of the Evidence Act. Refers to section 26 of Regulation VIII of 1793. It is a document which is made by a public servant and is admissible in evidence under sections 9 and 13, if not under section 35 of the Evidence Act.

The cases cited by my learned friend are practically exhaustive except two cases to be found in Sheikh Jaki Mamood v. Dino Bandhu Bhattacharjee (14) and Dinanath Chanda v. Nawabali (15). The other case is Raj Kishore Deo v. Bani Mahto (16). The decision in Nanda Lal Pathak v. Chanurpat Das (4) supports my contention. Refers to Taru Patur v. Abinash Chunder Dutt (17), Akshaya Kumar Dutt v. Shama Charan (18).

With regard to the other branch of the argument regarding the relevancy of the absence of the entry I rely upon Imambandi v. Matasuddi (12) and Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (11). On this point no case except that in Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee (8) is against me.

Babu Charu Chandra Biswas, for the Respondent, in Second Appeal Nos. 1201 and 1439:—The effect of the sub-division of a parent estate is to create separate and distinct estates. See Hem Chandra Chowdhury v. Kali Prasanna (19), Uday Chandra Karji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (20), Sarat Soondary Dabea v. Anund Mohun Surma (21), Adit Singha v. Sukhraji Rai (22) and Chandra Kanta Chakrabartty v. Ram Krishna Mahalnabis (23). Under such circumstances, no presumption arises under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There are also slight variations in the rent. This, if not explained, is sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See Prasanna Deb Raikat v. Mohananda Das (24). See also Bissessur Chuckerbutty v. Wooma Churn Roy (25). But in second appeal your Lordships ought not to interfere on this point with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. On the question of the admissibility of the Butwara papers, refers to Dwarkanauth Roy v. Huronauth Roy (28), Anund Chunder Roy v. Huronath Roy (29) and Bipradas Pal Choudhury v. Monorama Debi (30).

Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee in reply:—Exhibit 2 is not a public document. On the face of it, it does not purport to be made by a public officer nor has it been proved to be so made. Neither is it purported nor proved to have been made under statutory authority.

The Regulations referred to do not apply because these Regulations refer to partition by metes and bounds. Even under the Regulations it was not necessary that the subordinate tenures should be entered. In the present cases the Batwara was made before the estates were permanently settled. And, moreover, there was no partition by metes and bounds and it was no part of the duty of the Collector to record the names of the subordinate taluqs. None of the cases cited are against me, except Drobo Moyee Gosmanee v. Dhurmo Doss Koondoo (2). As pointed out in Sheikh Jaki Mamood v. Dino Bandhu Bhattacharjee (14) and Dinanath Chanda v. Nawabali (15), those decisions are either under the Act of 1876 or of 1897.

On the question of the presumption of fixity of rent arising from uniform payment at a fixed rate, refers to Golab Misser v. Kumar Kalanand Singh (31), Nityananda Pal v. Nanda Kumar (32), and Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd., (33).

JUDGMENT.—These ten appeals arise out of as many proceedings instituted by the respondent for settlement of fair and equitable rents in respect of lands comprised in tenures held under him by the appellants. The tenants contended that their rents were not liable to enhancement under section 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as their tenures had been held from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. The tenants proved, in support of this position, that they and their predecessors had held at a rent or rate of rent which had not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the proceedings. They accordingly claimed the benefit of the presumption formulated in section 50 (2), and maintained that, unless the presumption was rebutted, they were protected from enhancement under section 50 (1). The question thus arose, whether the landlord had or had not proved the contrary within the meaning of section 50 (2). The Assistant Settlement Officer held against the landlord and dismissed the claim for enhancement. Upon appeal the Special Judge has reversed that decision and has granted enhancement. On the present appeals, the conclusion of the Special Judge that the landlord had rebutted the statutory presumption in favour of the tenants, has been assailed as erroneous in law.

To rebut the presumption, the landlord relied upon three papers, namely, first, a writ of attachment issued in 1792; secondly, a writ of attachment issued in 1797, and, thirdly, a partition proceeding of 1800. The contention of the landlord is that, as the tenancies held by the defendants are not mentioned in these documents, there is no escape from the inference that the disputed tenures were not in existence at the time of the Permanant Settlement. This raises two questions, namely, first, whether the documents are admissible in evidence, not to show that they contain entries establishing the existence of the tenures, but to show that as they contain no entries about the tenures, such absence of entry implies their non-existence; and secondly, that if the documents can be received in evidence for the purpose mentioned, whether the absence of entries necessarily justifies the conclusion that the tenures were not in fact in existence.

Upon the first question, there has been some divergence of judicial opinion. As pointed out in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (11) and Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (10), the cases of Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee (8) and In the matter of Juggun Lall (7) assume that though entries in a book of account are relevant to the extent provided by section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act, such a book is not by itself relevant to raise an inference from the absence of any entry. The same view is supported by the observations of Lord Davey and Lord Robertson in Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (9). In Sagurmull v. Manraj (34), it was ruled, however, that the cases just mentioned did not decide that the fact of absence of an entry is no evidence at all under any section of the Indian Evidence Act, and that evidence that there is no entry in the account-books, though not admissible under section 34 may be admissible under sections 9 and 11. The question arose again before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sadhu Sahu v. Raja Ram (13), and the Judges were divided in opinion. The point may now be taken to have been set at rest by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (11), where the fact of absence of entry was held relevant, its effect to be determined in the light of the general evidence in the case. This fits in with the opinion expressed by Turner, L. J., in Wise v. Bhoobun Moyee Debia Chowdrainee (6). In that case, reliance was placed on the fact that a disputed taluk was not mentioned in the Decennial or Quinquennial Settlement as such; the relevancy of the circumstances was not questioned, but the Judicial Committee observed that, even assuming the statements to be accurate, in the absence of particulars of the Settlements, the fact did not seem to afford any strong inference against the existence of the taluk; see also Dwarkanauth Roy v. Huronauth Roy (28). We hold, accordingly, that if the three documents are admissible in evidence, the landlord is entitled to utilise them for the purpose desired. This leads us to the question of the admissibility of the documents themselves.

As regards the writs of attachment issued in 1792 and 1797, it is plain that they must have been prepared when the Collector took possession of the zemindari upon default in payment of revenue by the proprietor. The documents may be relevant in connection with the history of the estate and may be used to show that the proprietor defaulted and the Collector went into possession. They may also be utilised to show that the Collector realised from the tenants the amounts stated during the period of his occupation; but there is nothing to indicate that the duty was cast upon the Collector to prepare a complete record of all the tenures then in existence. That the list of tenures contained in the attachment writs is incomplete has, indeed, been made out by comparison with the list in the partition paper presently to be mentioned. The Special Judge has, in our opinion, correctly held that, in view of the scope of the two attachment writs, no inference favourable to the landlord can be drawn therefrom, and they cannot be treated as relevant under section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act.

We have next to consider what has been called the partition paper dated 1st September 1800 which forms the real foundation of the judgment of the Special Judge. The original was not produced at the trial, and this has led to some controversy as to whether the certified copy filed could be received as secondary evidence of its contents. The certified copy itself was not perfectly legible, and the correctness of the statement in the judgment of the Special Judge that the document had been signed by the Collector and Deputy Collector could not be verified. In these circumstances, we called for the originals of all the three documents from the Noakhali Collectorate. The dilapidated condition of the originals makes the examination of the contents by no means easy. The production of the originals, however, removes the difficulty about the reception of secondary evidence, but the question still remains whether the partition paper is admissible in these proceedings against the tenure-holders. Our attention has been drawn to judicial decisions as to the admissibility of partition papers. But, as will be presently explained, they are not of real assistance in the absence of detailed information as to the history of the document mentioned, when it was prepared, by whom, in whose presence, and for what purpose. There is some diversity of judicial opinion, probably more apparent than real, as to the admissibility of documents of this description; this is traceable, in part at least, to an attempt to apply the same test to documents of different types. In Taru Patur v. Abinash Chunder Dutt (17), a jamabandi prepared by a Deputy Collector in the course of land-settlement under Regulation VII of 1822 was held admissible as a public document. This decision has, however, been doubted: Ram Chunder Sao v. Bunseedhur Naik (35), Akshaya Kumar Dutt v. Shama Charan (18). In Saraswati Dasi v. Dhanpat Singh (36), Sir Richard Garth, C. J., appears to have ruled against the admissibility of such a document under section 35, but this was not acquiesced in by Field, J. The opinion of Garth, C. J., was, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (37), repudiated in Shoshi Bhooshun Bose v. Girish Chunder Mitter (38), which was followed in Secretary of State for India v. Wazed Ali Khan Pani (39), see also Anund Chunder Roy v. Huronath Roy (29); whichever view be adopted, it must be recognised that the question whether a document is admissiable in evidence as a public document is fundamentally distinct from the question whether its contents are binding upon tenants without proof of notice on them or of their consent. The decisions in Drobo Moyee Gosmanee v. Dhurmo Doss Koondoo (2) and Gopal Chunder Shaha v. Madhub Chunder Saha (3), emphasise this distinction. The decision in Khetra Nath Mandal v. Mahomed Alla Rakha (5), which refers to the cases of Perma Roy v. Kishen Roy (1), Nanda Lal Pathak v. Chanurpat Das (4), and Mohi Chowdhury v. Dhiro Missrain (40), deals with the question whether partition chitta and map are admissible as public documents under section 35. The Court, however, also emphasised the distinction we have pointed out, by reference to the decision in Gopal Chunder Shaha v. Madhub Chunder Saha (3), and added the important observation that the law had been differently and more broadly laid down under the Bengal Estates Partition Act, 1897: Janki Dobey v. Kirtarath Roy (41). This had been previously explained in Sheikh Jaki Mamood v. Dino Bandhu Bhattacharjee (14), where the decisions in Drobo Moyee Gosmanee v. Dhurmo Doss Koondoo (2) and Gopal Chunder Shaha v. Madhub Chunder Saha (3) were considered. To the same effect is the decision in Dinanath Chanda v. Nawabali (15). This accords with the decision of the Judicial Committee, in Raj Kishore Deo v. Bani Mahto (16), where a register of revenue-free villages prepared by a Revenue Surveyor was held admissible under section 35 to show the nature of a tenant's holding, in the absence of evidence indicating that the public officer had acted in excess of his official duty. It is consequently necessary that the history of the partition paper dated 1st September 1800 should be fully investigated in all its aspects before the question of its admissibility is finally decided. But even if the document be received in evidence, the further question must be determined, whether it does in fact omit the lands of the disputed tenures. The mere circumstance that the names by which the tenures are known at present, cannot be traced in the list does not show conclusively that the tenures are not included therein. As the Assistant Settlement Officer pointed out, the names of taluqs are frequently changed as they pass from hand to hand, and very often a taluq is sub divided whereupon new names are given to each of the fragments. Such sub-division, it has now been held, does not affect the continuity of the tenure concerned or render inapplicable the provisions of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; see Krishna Kamini Dasi v. Nil Madhab Saha (42). Consequently, it cannot be inferred from the partition paper, without further enquiry, that the disputed tenures are really not mentioned therein. One possible method of enquiry may be to trace the history of all the tenures actually mentioned in the paper, and by the application of the method of elimination or exhaustion, to establish that the disputed tenures are or are not mentioned in the document. We may add that even if it should be ultimately proved that the tenures are not mentioned, it would not necessarily follow that they were not in existence at the time; there may be cogent reasons to explain the absence, as pointed out by Teunon, J., in Bipradas Pal Choudhury v. Monorama Debi (30). Weight will obviously have to be attached to the statutory provisions for the partition of estates in operation at that time; and how far the proceedings did in fact conform to those rules, is plainly a relevant matter: Baboo Hur Gopal Doss v. Ram Gopal Sahee (43). It is we think abundantly clear that the cases require much fuller examination than they have received or than what is practicable upon the materials on the record. The defect in the judgment of the Special Judge is due to an error as to the admissibility of evidence, and, his findings can consequently be impeached in second appeal: Rajah Makund Deb v. Gopi Nath Sahu (26) and Najar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Shukur Sheikh (27).

Two minor points require a brief notice. It was argued, in the first place, that the partition paper indicates a variation in the rent, which, however slight, may rebut the presumption under section 50. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. A slight variation, even though not explained does not deprive the tenant of the benefit of the presumption: Ramrutno Sircar v. Chunder Mookhee Dabea (44), Koroona Moyee Dossee v. Radha Madhub Bose (45), Munsoor Ali v. Bunoo Singh (46), Elahee Buksh Chowdhry v. Roopun Telee (47), which are really not in conflict with Prasanna Deb Raikat v. Mohananda Das (24).

It was urged, in the second place, that four of the appeals had been lodged in this Court after the expiry of the prescribed time and should be rejected on that ground. There is no substance in this contention. This objection arises in cases where copies of the judgments were not attached to the Memorandum of Appeal, and the appellant was prima facie not entitled to deduction of time on that account. It must be remembered, however, that these appeals could not have been brought in without copies of the judgments, until after the main appeals had been lodged with complete sets of papers. In this view, the Court would, without hesitation, exercise in favour of the appellants its discretion under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

The result is that these appeals are allowed; the decrees made by the Special Judge set aside and the cases remanded to the Court of first instance to be re-tried in accordance with law. Each party will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. The papers received from the Collector will be compared with the certified copies on the record, which will be amended, if necessary; this will be carried out by an officer of this Court, and the parties will be allowed to be present. If the parties so desire, they may at their own cost, also take from this Court fresh certified copies of the papers received from the Collector. The originals will thereafter be returned to the Collector.

Costs in this Court will abide the result, the hearing fee in each appeal will be assessed at one gold mohur.

Appeals allowed.
Cases remanded.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 190 OF 1922.
April 23, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ryves and Mr. Justice Daniels.

MUHAMMAD SIDDIQ ALI KHAN —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

ANWARUL HASAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

U. P. Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912), s. 54—"Property", meaning of—Suit by transferee of claim against Court of Wards—Notice, necessity of.

A transferee of a claim against the Court of Wards is bound to give notice under section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act before instituting a suit; a notice given by his transferor who intended to file a similar suit will not enure for his benefit.

Bachchu Singh v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 25 A. 187; A. W. N. (1903) 13, relied upon.

A suit relating to the property inherited by persons in charge of the Courts of Wards is a suit relating to the property of the wards, within the meaning of section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act.

Lal Singh v. Collector of Etah, 25 Ind. Cas. 398; 12 A. L. J. 485; 36 A. 331, distinguished.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 10th of November 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—

Ibrahim Ali Khan owned property some of which is in suit. He died leaving three sons and three daughters one of whom was Musammat Batul-un-nissa who was entitled to 1-9th of the property owned by Ibrahim Ali Khan on his death. She died leaving a son, Anwarul Hasan, who become entitled to 2-3rds of the 1-9th share inherited by his mother. He sold his share to Muhib Ali who sold to Muzhar Hussain who in turn sold to the plaintiff. This is a suit by the plaintiff for declaration and for possession of the property. The defendant No. 1 is Anwarul Hasan the transferor of the property. Defendants Nos. 2 to 9 are the persons who represent the sons and daughters of Ibrahim Ali Khan.

Defendants Nos. 10 to 25 are subsequent transferees from the sons of these defendants Nos. 23 to 25 are wards under the Court of Wards. Defendants Nos. 23 to 25 alone contested the suit, on the ground that the notice required by section 54 of the Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912 of the Local Legislature) had not been duly served. This plea was upheld in both Courts and ex parte decree was passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 22 and the suit was dismissed as against defendants Nos. 23 to 25. The plaintiff brings this appeal on two grounds. Firstly, it is argued that inasmuch as Mazhur Husain who sold the property to the plaintiff had given notice of his intention to bring a suit similar to this one against the Court of Wards, that that notice enured for the benefit of the plaintiff.

Secondly, that in any case section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act was not applicable because the suit did not relate to "the property" of the wards.

With regard to the first plea it is only necessary to say that the ruling in Bachchu Singh v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) is conclusive.

On the second plea it seems to us that on the allegation in the plaint itself in paragraph 12 the plaintiff admits that the wards have an interest in the property. The ruling on which he relies, namely, Lal Singh v. Collector of Etah (2), has no application. There the property did not belong to the ward but to the judgment-debtor of the ward and the mere fact that the ward had attached that property did not create any right in the property in the ward. The very fact that the plaintiff has appealed from the decree of the First Court, dismissing the suit as against the wards shows clearly that the plaintiff himself realises that the suit does relate to the property of the wards. In our opinion the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale. Costs to be in favour of the Court of Wards.

Muhammadan Law—Gift, requisites of—Presumption from possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 1 (e)—Pleadings—Plaint—Ownership relied upon in plaint—Particulars.

Under the Muhammadan Law a gift can be made orally and need not be made by a registered instrument, but there must be evidence from which a declaration by the donor, acceptance by the donee and transfer of possession are proved. [p. 391, col. 1.]

A man might allow his property to be recorded and possessed by his sons without any intention that they should be owners of it, as, for instance, if he wishes to baffle his creditors, but, in the absence of a formal declaration of gift, a gift cannot, under the Muhammadan Law, be presumed from the mere fact of possession. [p. 391, col. 2.]

Ownership is a mixed question of law and fact and a plaintiff who relies on ownership should set forth in the plaint facts justifying the assertion of ownership, as required by clause (e) of r. 1 of Order VII of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 390, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 31st December 1921, upholding that of the Munsif, Safipur, dated the 4th August 1920.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Masih-ud-din Faruqi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of suit brought by the plaintiffs as heirs of one Musammat Aliman Bibi for possession of certain property and mesne profits. The plaint in paragraph 2 merely sets forth that Musammat Aliman Bibi was owner of the property set forth in a list attached to the plaint. It no where stated her title to the property. I would point out that this was not in confirmity with O. VII, r. 1 (e), of the Code of Civil Procedure. Ownership is a mixed question of law and fact and a plaintiff who relies on ownership should set forth the facts justifying the assertion of ownership. I mention this fact as a certain amount of confusion in this case was due to this omission in the plaint. The suit was resisted by Khalil Ullah Shah, the nearest relative surviving of Amirullah Shah, the father-in-law of Musammat Aliman Bibi, on two alternative grounds. He admitted that the property in suit had been recorded in the name of one Amjad Ullah, the deceased husband of Musammat Aliman Bibi, but claimed that at the time that the entry was made the property belonged to a Dargah and not to Amjad Ullah's father, Amir Ullah, so that even if Amir Ullah transferred the property to Amjad Ullah the transfer created no right in Amjad Ullah. He also pleaded that, even if the property had belonged to Amir Ullah there was no valid transfer of it by Amir Ullah to Amjad Ullah.

It is plain from the evidence that the plaintiffs set up title in Aliman Bibi as the sole heir of Amjad Ullah and relied on certain facts for proving that Amir Ullah gave the property to Amjad Ullah. Amongst these facts was the continuous possession of the property by Musammat Aliman Bibi for more than 12 years previous to the suit. The Court of first hearing did not come to a decision as to the alleged gift by Amirullah to Amjad Ullah. What it said was: "There is no direct evidence worthy of the name on record to prove the distribution of his property by Amir Ullah. But the statements of P. W. No. 6 and P. W. No. 7 who saw the property seperate cannot be lightly rejected." It went on to find that Musammat Aliman Bibi had a title to the property by more than twelve years adverse possession, that is to say, adverse to her husband's brother.

In appeal, the Subordinate Judge of Unao held that the fact of Musammat Aliman Bibi's possession for so long, along with other facts and the oral evidence, justified the inference that she was the absolute owner of the property, which I take to mean, in view of his remarks as to what the oral witnesses said, that Amir Ullah gave this property to her husband Amjad Ullah.

The first question that arises for decision in this second appeal is—was there any evidence on which the lower Appellate Court would base a finding that Musam-

mat Aliman Bibi was owner of the property? There is no doubt that her husband Amjad Ullah's name was entered in the papers as owner of the property. Again, there is no doubt that mutation after Amjad Ullah's death was effected in the name of Musammat Aliman Bibi. The Subordinate Judge appears to be incorrect in stating that this mutation was allowed by Amir Ullah. There is no evidence that Amir Ullah was alive at the date when mutation was effected in favour of Musammat Aliman Bibi. On the contrary, it was stated by the defendant-appellant in his written statement that Amir Ullah died on the 31st January 1898 which was previous to the mutation, the latter taking place on the 3rd June 1898. Two witnesses for the plaintiffs-respondents who gave their evidence in 1920 said that he died 22 years ago which would not be inconsistent with the date in the written statement, so that there is nothing to justify this assertion of the Subordinate Judge. In addition to these facts the Subordinate Judge relied on the evidence of plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 6 and 7. P. W. No. 6 Ahmad Shafi says, "Amir Ullah in his lifetime had divided his property over his two surviving sons. Half the property was given to Amjad Ullah and the remaining half to Masih Ullah." There was no cross-examination on this. P. W. No. 7, Daim, said: "In his life-time Amir Ullah divided his property into two shares and gave it to his two sons, Amjad Ullah and Masih Ullah." But in cross-examination this witness said: "Amir Ullah did not partition his property in my presence."

It appears from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that it conceived that the mere fact of a division by the father of his property between his two sons would constitute a valid transfer. The Subordinate Judge has made no attempt to see whether there was evidence showing the necessary constituents of a gift under Muhammadan Law. Such a gift can be made orally and need not be made by a registered instrument but there must be evidence from which a declaration by the donor acceptance by the donee and transfer of possession are proved. The declaration, if proved, acceptance and transfer would be sufficiently proved by the evidence but there is no proof of a formal declaration. The fact that Amir-ullah allowed his two sons to be recorded as owners of the property is no sufficient proof of a declaration of gift. Neither of the witnesses affirm any such declaration. A man might allow property to be recorded and possessed by his sons without any intention that they should be owners; as, for instance, if he wishes to baffle his creditors. Any way, the Muhammadan Law, while dispensing with a registered deed, does require a formal declaration. I, therefore, find that there was no evidence from which the lower Court could infer a declaration of gift.

Another point taken by the appellant is that, even if Amjad Ullah was owner of the property in the absence of custom his widow would only be entitled to one quarter and that there is no sufficient evidence of a custom of excluding the other heirs. The lower Appellate Court has stated that P. W. No. 1 has proved the custom. He says: "According to custom a widow takes the entire estate if there is no issue..... If the property left by the propositus is ancestral and undivided the brother takes his legal share, but if the property is not ancestral the brother who is alive will not take a share and the widow will get the whole." It is claimed by the appellant that this statement is no assistance to the plaintiffs' case because the property was ancestral. But if the property came to Amjad Ullah as a gift from his father it cannot be regarded as his ancestral property. Ancestral property, in the ordinary sense, must mean property of the father which is inherited. It is, however, further contended that the mere statement of this witness could not be relied upon for proving a custom. I see no force in this objection. The witness was not cross-examined on his allegation of the custom and the lower Appellate Court was entitled to rely on this evidence. It is objected that there was no issue on the point but the written statement of the appellant never resisted the plea that Musammat Aliman Bibi was owner by objecting that she would not inherit the whole of her husband's estate. The plaintiffs had to prove her title but they could do so by evidence without any distinct issue on the question of custom. The question of custom was involved in the issue No. 1, whether she was owner. The question is, however, of no importance in view of my finding that a gift was not proved.

The appellant has urged that the lower Appellate Court has not affirmed the First Court's decision that Musammat Aliman Bibi had title by twelve years adverse possession. If this were so, I should have to send the case back to the lower Appellate Court for decision on this finding as I cannot in second appeal decide a question of fact. It is, however, quite clear that the lower Appellate Court did concur in the finding of the Court of first hearing that Musammat Aliman Bibi had all along been in possession. It used the words: "This, conclusively proves Aliman Bibi's possession over her share in Kasba Safipur." It is true that he did not proceed to decide whether the Court of first hearing was right in holding this possession of Aliman Bibi was adverse possession but no other conclusion is possible in view of the rejection of the defendant appellant's appeal that the property was temple property. I, therefore, hold that, in substance, the finding of the Court of first hearing as to adverse possession was upheld by the lower Appellate Court and I cannot go behind it. Even if this were not so, this Court in second appeal may hold that the possession found as a fact by both lower Courts, along with the other facts admitted or proved, justifies the inference (whch is a question of law) that that possession was adverse. It has been urged that the evidence did not show that she was in possession of the whole of the property claimed. It is contended by the respondent's Pleader that he proves this conclusively. It is not necessary to go into the matter because the lower Courts were quite justified in inferring possession of the whole of the property in suit from the evidence as to possession of a part in view of the fact that the defendant never produced any evidence to show that any one else was in possession.

For the above reasons, I find no reasons to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2028 OF 1919.

November 14, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Rankin.

KAMINI KUMAR DEB—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

DURGA CHARAN NAG AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 25, 26—Order remitting issue, whether can be re-considered—Procedure—Appeal, second—Remand order, form of—Possession and title, questions of, whether can be decided piecemeal.

It cannot be affirmed broadly that when an order has been made under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court called upon to determine the appeal finaly under O. XLI, r. 26, is competent to treat the order as erroneously made. [p. 394, col. 2.]

When an order has been made under O. XLI, r. 25, of the Civil Procedure Code, the appeal remains pending and undisposed of on the file of the Court and the order, whether rightly or wrongly made, is an order made with jurisdiction. Its validity may be attacked and reviewed, but till it has been set aside in an appropriate proceeding, it must be treated as an interlocutory order which is operative in law [p. 394, col. 2.]

The evidence and findings on remand become part of the record in the suit, and when the Court proceeds to determine the appeal, such determination must be based upon all the materials on the record; these include whatever was part of the record as it stood before the order under O. XLI, r. 25, was made, as also what has been added in the Court of Appeal, namely, the order together with the evidence taken pursuant thereto and the reasoned findings thereon. No portion of the record can be disregarded, and neither the order nor the materials placed on the record on the basis thereof can be rejected as if brought in without lawful authority. [p. 394, col. 2; p. 395, col. 1.]

In a second appeal, involving several points difficult to disentangle, the appropriate course to follow is to make, not an order under O. XLI, r. 25, but an order of remand in the exercise of the inheren power of the Court. [p. 395, col. 1.]

The principle that a stranger to a deed, which is intended to be real and operative between the parties thereto, cannot dispute the payment or non-payment of consideration, its adequacy or inadequacy, has no bearing in a case where a deed is challenged as fictitious, never designed to operate as a real deed or to effect a transfer of the title. [p. 395, col. 2.]

KAMINI KUMAR DEB v. DURGA CHARAN NAG.

Questions of title and possession cannot always be properly considered piecemeal as disconnected fragments. [p. 396, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Sylhet, dated the 21st of July 1919, modifying that of the Munsif, Second Court at Habiganj, dated the 27th of May 1918.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhuri (with him Babus Sasadhar Roy and Promothanath Banerji), for the Respondents.—I take a preliminary objection that the order of remand made by Greaves and Cuming, JJ., was an entirely misconceived order. The remand order was wholly unnecessary and the appeal was concluded by findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. The question, then, is whether your Lordships in determining the present appeal are barred by the remand order which should not have been made. My submission is that the whole of the appeal being open for consideration by your Lordships, you are competent to enquire whether the remand order was or was not necessary. Refers to Ganendra Nath Roy v. Surja Kanta Roy (1), East Indian Railway Company v. Changa Khan (2) and Hiatunnessa v. Kailash Chandra Saha (3).

Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Appellant.—Now that the appeal is before your Lordships for final disposal under O. XLI, r. 26, of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not open to my learned friend to question the propriety of the remand order under O. XLI, r. 25. If the respondents have any grievance with the remand order, appropriate proceedings should have been taken to set aside that order. Refers to Official Assignee of the Calcutta High Court v. Bidyasundari Dasi (4).

The finding of the lower Appellate Court after remand is in my favour and the appeal should, therefore, be allowed.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhuri replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon declaration of title. The disputed lands are described in two of the Schedules attached to the plaint, namely, the homestead lands in the Second Schedule and the chara or paddy lands in the Fourth Schedule. The lands originally belongd to a family of Nags, and are claimed by the plaintiffs under title by purchase. The Trial Court dismissed the claim in respect of the homestead lands and decreed the claim in respect of a share of the paddy lands. Both the parties were dissatisfied with this decision, the first plaintiff preferred an appeal and the first defendant filed a cross-appeal. The Subordinate Judge varied the decree of the primary Court in favour of the plaintiffs and dismissed the cross-appeal. The result was, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree in respect of the homestead land and share of paddy land which belonged originally to Gopal Chandra Nag, in addition to what had been awarded by the Court of first instance. This decree is now assailed by the first defendant as erroneous in law. The appeal was heard on the 24th January 1922 by Greaves and Cuming, JJ., who made an order under O. XLI, r. 25, for investigation of three questions, which appeared to them essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, namely, first, whether the conveyance by Gopal Chandra Nag, dated the 18th January 1917, which is the root of the title of the plaintiffs, is a genuine document or not; secondly, whether the claim is barred by limitation, and, thirdly, whether the claim is barred by estoppel. The Subordinate Judge has returned his findings and the reasons therefor, and the appeal has now been placed before us for determination under O. XLI, r. 26.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the matters in controversy are concluded by the findings containd in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge now under appeal, and that it was not open to Greaves and Cuming JJ., to make an order under O. XLI, r. 25. The appellant has urged that the respondents are not competent to take up this position and to invite the Court in substance to review the order previously made. In this connection, our attention has been drawn by the respondents to Hiatunnessa Bibi v. Kailash Chandra Saha (3), Ganendra Nath Roy v. Surja Kanta Roy (1), East Indian Railway Company v. Changa Khan (2) and Mubarak Husain v. Bihari (5). In each of these cases, an order of remand was made by a Single Judge under O. XXI, r. 25, of the Code of 1908 or the corresponding provision (section 566) of the Code of 1882, and it was ruled that when the appeal came to be heard ultimately by a Bench of two Judges, that Bench was not bound by the order of the Single Judge. This view has been defended before us on the ground that if, on receipt of the finding, the case had been determined by a Single Judge on the assumption that he was bound by the order previously made, the entire case would have been open for re-consideration in an appeal under the Letters Patent before a Bench of two Judges. The same explanation, however, is not available in justification of the decisions in Hanuman Das v. Gursahay Singh (6) and Lachman Prasad v. Jamna Prasad (7), in each of these cases, the order for further finding was made by a Bench of two Judges, and the appeal was determined, after return of the findings, by another Bench of two Judges. Neither of these decisions, however, can be treated as an authority for the proposition that an order under O XLI. r. 25 once made and carried out can be subsequently pronounced to have been erroneously made. In Hanuman Das v. Gursahay Singh (6) a new aspect of the matters in controversy was, at the final stage, placed before the Court, which had escaped notice at the time when the order for further finding was made. In Lachman Prasad v. Jamna Prasad (7) the findings on remand and the objections thereto were in fact considered before the final judgment was pronounced. We are of opinion that it cannot, as a matter of principle, be affirmed broadly that when an order has been made under O. XLI, r. 25, the Court called upon to determine the appeal finally under O. XLI, r. 26, is competent to treat the order as erroneously made. No doubt, as pointed out in Boncharee Ghose v. Ainoddeen Biswas (8), when an order has been made under O. XLI, r. 25 the appeal remains pending and undisposed of on the file of the Court. The order, however, whether rightly or wrongly made, is an order made with jurisdiction; its validity may be attacked on review, but till it has been set aside in an appropriate proceeding, it must be treated as an interlocutory order which is operative in law; George Henry Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (9), Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (10). There can be no controversy that, if the order had been made under O. XLI, r. 23, its propriety could not have been challenged in an appeal against the final decree made after remand; Ramkuvarbai v. Damodhar Narbheram (11), Brojo Soondur Gossamee v. Juggut Chunder Dey (12), Gungaram Dutt v. Chowdhury Junmajoy Mullick (13) Suraj Din v. Chattar (14) and Latchumammal v. Gengammal (15). The same principle is applicable here, subject to the obvious reservation that, as the appeal remains pending, the ultimate decision must be based upon a consideration of all the findings before and after the order under O. XLI, r. 25. This, indeed, is plain from the language used by the Legislature in O. XLI. r. 26. The evidence and findings become part of the record in the suit, and when the Court proceeds to determine the appeal, such determination must be based upon all the materials on the record; these include whatever was part of the record as it stood before the order under O. XLI, r. 25, was made, as also what has been added in the Court of Appeal, namely, the order together with the evidence taken pursuant thereto and the reasoned findings thereon. No portion of the record can be disregarded and neither the order nor the materials placed on the record on the basis thereof can be rejected as if brought in without lawful authority. This view is in accord with that adopted in Official Assignee of the Calcutta High Court v. Bidyasundari Dasi (4). We may add that we do not overlook that, when a finding is directed upon one or more of several inter-related points, there is a possibility that the new finding may, specially where based on new evidence, not harmonise with the other findings. This would not embarrass the Court in a first appeal, where the entire evidence may be examined, as in the case just mentioned; but it may create a real difficulty in second appeals, where the Court is competent to examine the evidence only to the limited extent mentioned in section 103. This would seem to point to the conclusion that in a second appeal, involving several points difficult to disentangle, the appropriate course to follow is to make, not an order under O. XLI, r. 25, but an order of remand in the exercise of inherent power of the Court; Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (16), Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (17).

We have next to consider the result of the application of these principles to the case before us. In respect of the share of Brojo Govinda Nag and Krishna Govinda Nag, the claim was dismissed by both the Courts below, and we are not concerned with the point in the present appeal. Here we have to deal with the share of Gopal Chandra Nag. The plaintiffs claimed title thereto under a conveyance dated the 18th January 1917. The defendants contended that the conveyance was without consideration and passed no title. The Court of first instance found against the plaintiffs on this point. The Subordinate Judge held that it was not open to the defendants to raise the question of consideration, and in support of this view he relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (18) Greaves and Cuming, JJ., held that the decision mentioned did not apply, and directed the lower Appellate Court to come to an express finding as to the true character of the conveyance. The Subordinate Judge has now found that there was no consideration; that the transaction was fictitious, and that title was not intended to pass. This conclusion makes it manifest that the decision in Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (18) has no application. The principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee that a stranger to a deed, which is intended to be real and operative between the parties thereto, cannot dispute the payment or non-payment of consideration, its adequacy or inadequacy, has no bearing in a case where a deed is challenged as fictitious, never designed to operate as a real deed or to effect a transfer of the title. We hold, accordingly, that the conveyance of the 18th January 1917 did not vest in the plaintiffs the title to the share which originally belonged to Gopal Chandra Nag. In this view, it is superfluous to consider, whether the claim to that share is or is not barred by limitation or estoppel. But we may add that we were not impressed by the argument of the respondents that the findings of the Subordinate Judge on these points were so clear as to render unnecessary an order under O. XLI, r. 25. It cannot be denied that the Subordinate Judge had not distinguished between the question of limitation as applicable to the claim put forward by the plaintiffs and the question of acquisition of title by adverse possession by the defendants or their predecessors. We must further bear in mind that questions of title and possession cannot always be properly considered piecemeal as disconnected fragments. We are consequently of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it varied the decree of the Trial Court cannot be supported, although it cannot be successfully attacked either as to title or as to limitation, in so far as it allowed a part of the claim for the paddy land.

The result is that this appeal is allowed. The decree of the Subordinate Judge set as de, and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs, both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

February 27, 1923.

Present:—Lord Dunedin, Lord Atkinson and Lord Wrenbury.

KESHAVLAL BROTHERS AND COMPANY—APPELLANTS

DIWAN CHAND AND COMPANY—RESPONDENTS.

Contract—Breach—Damages—Impossibility of performance—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56.

The defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiffs to supply them a certain amount of coal from stock within a certain time, and placed an order with a Colliery firm presumably to secure the coal required. At the time, however, the supply of Railway wagons for transport of coal was restricted by Government only to the wants of actual consumers by whom the indents had to be signed. The plaintiffs, who were merchants and not consumers, supplied the defendants with a special indent in favour of a consumer to evade the Government, but in fact did not enter into any contract with that consumer to supply him the coal to be received from defendants. The defendants failed to deliver the full quantity of coal to the plaintiffs and the latter sued them for damages, claiming the difference between the contract price and the market price of the balance. It was urged in defence that the contract had become impossible of performance, as owing to Government restrictions the defendants could not get a supply of wagons for delivery of coal to plaintiffs who were not consumers and that at any rate as the plaintiffs could not sell that coal in the open market, no damages had been suffered by them. It was admitted that coal was available and could be purchased in the local market:

Held, (1) that as the defendants had agreed to supply the plaintiffs with coal from their stock the latter could sell it in the open market, and that as coal could be had in the local market, the contract had not become impossible of performance; [p. 400, col. 2.]

(2) that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the damages they claimed. [p. 400, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Bombay High Court, dated the 23rd February 1920, reversing that of the Single Judge, Bombay, dated the 26th June 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Atkinson.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bombay in its Appellate Jurisdiction dated the 23rd February 1920 reversing a decree of a Single Judge of the said Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 26th June 1919.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by the appellants, as plaintiffs against the respondents claiming over Rs. 40,000 damages for breach of a contract for the sale of steam coal. The suit was decided by the Trial Judge in the plaintiffs' favour. He assessed the damages at Rs. 17,508-6-5, but that decree was set aside by a Divison Bench of the High Court (Macleod, C. J., and Heaton, J.,) which allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that, in the special circumstances which existed, no damage had been suffered by the plaintiffs.

The main question for determination by this Board is whether, in these circumstances, the appellants are entitled to the sum of Rs. 17, 508-6-5 awarded to them by the Trial Judge or are, as decided by the Court of Appeal, not entitled to recover any damages. On the 11th October 1917 the appellant Company and the respondent Company entered into an agreement in writing in the following terms:—

"Keshavlal Brothers & Co.,
" Bombay,
"11th October, 1917.

"The undersigned have this day sold to Messrs. Keshavlal Brothers & Co. quantity of coal amounting to Rs.— — 1,200 tons or thereabouts.

"Description.—Bengal steam coal, good second class.

"Delivery.—To be despatched to Cotton Depot , coal to be weighed and delivered at Cotton Depot, monthly 200 tons from November 1917 to April 1918, in equal instalments.

"Rate—Rs. 17-15, say Rs. seventeen and annas fifteen, per ton net.

"Delivery—At Cotton Depot,

"Terms.—Payment on delivery in Bombay.

"Indent in any class to be furnished by the buyers and the sellers agree and undertake to deliver the cool guaranteed in instalments as above from stock.

"(Signed) Ramavtar Maini,
"Per Pro Diwanchand & Co."

The Cotton Depot mentioned in this agreement is admittedly a place in Bombay where cotton and other goods are deposited for sale. The respondent Company had admittedly a Depot there for coal. It is to be observed that the coal contracted to be sold is not identified. It is to be taken from the vendors' stock.

It is necessary to describe at some length the system for the supply of coal established at this date by the Indian Government. Owing to the shortage of coal due to the War, Committees had been appointed for several districts in India, including Bombay, to regulate the supply of coal, and the means by which it could be obtained. Officials, styled Coal Controllers, were, by the Government of India, appointed to superintend, direct, and control the action of these Committees. On the 30th January 1917 the Coal Controller, having jurisdiction in the matter , issued a notice to the effect that the Committee appointed by Government to regulate coal supplies had directed that wagons would only be supplied after the 5th February then next succeeding, on indents signed by the actual consumer and countersigned by the Authority appointed by the Committee to certify these indents, and further that the indents should be prepared on the prescribed forms, copies of which were obtainable from the coal managers named. These indents were graded for priority into five classes, A, B, C, D, E, not according to the nature of the coal to be supplied, but rather according to the urgency of the need of the different consumers to obtain coal.

The respondent Company had agreed with the Garraria Colliery at Jharia, Bengal, to buy from them the coal necessary, presumably, to implement the above mentioned contract of the 11th October. The whole output from this colliery was placed at the disposal of the Government in December 1917. The indent was thereupon transferred to the Nandkuriki Colliery. Shortly after, the produce of this latter Colliery was restricted, and the indent was transferred to the Fatehpur Colliery.

The appellants wrote to the respondents the following letter or order, it bears date:—

"Bombay,
"8th November 1917.
No. 5951-73.

"Messrs. Divanchand and Company.

"DEAR SIRS,

"Re our Contract for 1,200 tons of steam coal dated 11th October 1917.

"With reference to our above Contract we beg to send you herein enclosed a special indent, No. 719, dated, 7th November 1917, in favour of the Proprietors, The Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory, Mazagaon, Bombay. The special indent has been certified by the Deputy Controller, "Coal supplies," Bombay, recommending the special supply of 10 (ten wagons) monthly up to 120 wagons for despatch to Byculla (Bombay) on their account.

" We are forwarding the third part of the indent to the Coal Manager, Calcutta, requesting him to sanction special supply of wagons to Dullabhji Howjee's Garraria Colliery and instruct the District Superintendent, Dhanbad, to allot wagons against indents from the Colliery. Kindly forward this second part to the colliery concerned instructing them to indent for the wagons regularly and despatch coal without the least delay. We enclose herewith a copy of the Coal Manager's letter.

"Trusting you to do the needful, and hoping to hear soon from you re despatches.

"(Signed) Girjashanker I. Pathek,
"for Keshavlal Brothers and Co.

"Enc. Sp. Indent and Copy."

On the same day the appellant Company addressed to the Coal Manager at Clacutta the following letter;—

"8th November, 1917.

"To the Coal Manager,
"East Indian Railway, Calcutta.

"DEAR SIR,

We beg respectfully to send you herein enclosed a third part of the special indent No. 719, dated 7th November 1917 in favour of the Proprietor, the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory, Mazagaon, Bombay. The special indent has been certified by the Deputy Controller, "Coal Supplies," Bombay, recommending the special supply of ten wagons monthly up to 120 wagons for despatch to Byculla (Bombay) on their account.

"We have to request your goodself to sanction supply of wagons as certified, and instruct the District Superintendent Dhanbad to meet indents from Dulagji Howjee's Garraria Colliery to enable them to expedite despatches.

"Thanking you in anticipation , and hoping to hear soon favourably.

Yours faithfully,

Enc. Sp. Indent.

The indent referred to in this letter was In the follwing form:—

"Keshavlal Brothers and Company
"East Indian Railway,
" Special Indent for Coal.
Indent No, 719.
Dated 7th November 1917.

(1) Full name and address of Consumer: The Proprietors, The Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory, Mazagaon, Bombay.

"(2) Description of Industry: Ice Factory.

"(3) Weekly consumption: 40 ton (forty).

"(4) Stocks held on date, tons: 55 tons.

"(5) Party from whom purchased: Messrs. Bhukhandas Motilal and Company, c/o Dewanchand and Co.

"(6) Name of Colliery : Garraria Colliery.

"(7) Name of managing Agents of the Colliery: Dhulabhji Howji.

"(8) Name of siding: coal will be loaded at Garraria E. I. Railway.

"(9) Description of coal : Steam Coal.

"(10) Toal quantity purchased, tons: 120 wagons.

"(11) Terms of delivery : 10 wagons monthly

"(12) Name of Railway station at which coal will be unloaded: Byculla (Bombay)."

The nature and minuteness of the information inquired after in this specimen indent shows how anxious the officers of the Government of India were that the coal to be carried in the wagons they permitted to be used should be applied to satisfy the needs of consumers and not be trafficked in by middlemen. But the contract which by the use of the requested wagons it was sought to obtain coal to implement, was not the contract entered into between the appellants and the respondents on the 11th October 1917, nor yet a contract entered into between the appellant Company and the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory. It is apparently a contract entered into between the Ice Factory and a Company named the Bhukhandas Motilal Company.

It may well be that the words "c/o Divanchand and Company, " found in the indent after the name of this Company so represented as the vendors was designed to indicate that the purchase was made by the respondents on behalf of the consumers, the Ice Factory. In a letter written by the respondent Company to the appellant Company on the 9th Novembr 1917 the writers state that they have not bought the coal from the persons mentioned in the indent, but from the Colliery, and express a fear that the Colliery proprietors "may refuse to supply coal to these people." The appellants replied on the same day, calming the fears of the respondents in reference to this piece of deception, and begging of them to instruct the Colliery people to despatch coal under this special indent in favour of the proprietors of the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory, Bombay. Thus, by the arrangement of these two middlemen, the indent is falsified, the regulations of the Government evaded and possibly its officers deceived.

On the 26th November 1917 the appellants wrote to the respondents requiring delivery of 200 tons of steam coal under their contract of the 11th October 1917. On the next day the respondents' reply that they are receiving coal from the Deputy Controller, and would be pleased to deliver the appellants 50 tons of it next day, the 28th November 1917. The appellants wrote refusing to take delivery of this comparative small quantity of coal and demanding delivery at the earliest date of the full quantity in arrear. On the 10th December 1917 the appellants wrote to the respondents demanding the delivery next day of 100 tons of coal. To this letter the respondents replied next day that they are expecting to receive soon a good lot of coal and asking the appellants to wait a little. On the 18th January 1918 the appellants wrote to the respondents, referring to their contract of the 11th October 1917, stating that the writers had only received from them 217 tons 19 cwt.; that the instalments for December 1917 and January 1918 were due, and that the writers were ready to accept delivery of these instalments and asking for immediate delivery of them. On the 7th March 1918 the appellants again wrote to the respondents demanding delivery of the instalments due. On the 7th March the respondents wrote making an excuse for non-delivery. To the last letter the appellants on the same day reply, that it is impossible for them to wait longer for the coal due to them; that as they desire to keep up the connection they will wait till Monday, the 11th March, and that if the respondents then fail to deliver to them the coal they are entitled to receive, they will be reluctantly compelled to purchase same in the local market at the risk of the respondents and on their account, and, further, that they will claim the market difference. On the 13th March the appellants wrote to the respondents informing them that being much in want of coal, they had purchased 150 tons at the market price of Rs. 71 per ton. Two days later, they sent to the respondents a bill for Rs. 7,959-6, being Rs. 53-1 per ton difference between the contract price and the price they paid on the 150 tons so purchased. On the 18th March 1918 the appellants wrote to the respondents setting forth precisely how, as regards the fulfilment of the contract of the 11th October 1918, matters stood. They point out that of the 800 tons (200 tons per month for four months) contracted to be delivered, they have only received 335 tons 6 cwt. up to the 28th February 1918; that the balance in arrear on the contract, therefore, amounted on that date to 464 tons 14 cwt.; that the instalment of 200 tons for March was already overdue; that they were compelled to buy 150 tons at the market rate on the account of the respondents, and that they, therefore, claim the difference between the contract price and the market price on the 150 tons so purchased. It will be observed that the respondents never suggest that there is not an open market for the sale and purchase of steam coal in Bombay. Nor up to this do they suggest that the appellants were joint adventurers in this enterprise of selling and delivering or procuring to be sold and delivered to the Ice Factory 1,200 tons of Bombay steam coal, nor yet that the appellants had sub-contracted with the Ice Factory to deliver 1, 200 tons of steam coal to it. On the contrary, the respondents treat the appellants as purchasers from them of this 1,200 tons of steam coal, under the contract of the 11th October 1917, to whom they were bound to deliver the coal purchased. But on the 22nd March 1918, the respondents wrote a letter in which, after stating that they were surpirsed at the appellants making a demand for a difference of Rs. 53-1- on 150 tons, putting forward for the first time the contention that the appellants were bound to deliver the coal deliverable under the contract of the 11th October 1917, to the Ice Factory. They state:—

"You know that the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory is the consumer of the coal, and the contracted coal is to be supplied to them and to no one else. Before we send a reply to you in respect of the damages claimed by you, please let us know at once whether you delivered these coals to the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory or not and if so, what quantity."

And then, after a long explanation as to the causes which prevented the receipt and delivery of the coals they expected, say:—

"We fail to understand the reason of your buying coals from the market for the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory unless they were refused on their application to the Deputy Controller to supply them from Government reserve stock.

"For the present we hasten to inform you that we are not at all liable to pay any damages to you and we repudiate any liability in the matter, and you were not at all justified under the contract and under the circumstances which now prevail to buy coals from market and if you have done so it is at your own risk and responsibility.

"We request you to answer all the queries mentioned above and also to send us the amount of Rs. 3, 940-1-3 due to us which is now very long standing."

To this letter the appellants reply, stating that the respondents know well that they are bound to give the appellants the delivery guaranteed from stock, and that, in spite of their repeated requests, as they have failed to carry out their contract, the appellants are obliged to claim the damages mentioned in their previous letter. They add: "We are convinced that by putting forth such queries your intention is to avoid delivery of the instalment for the month of March 1918, which we regret we are unable to allow you for a moment."

The apellants have sued to recover damages for the respondents' breach of the contract of the 11th October 1917, consisting in the non-delivery of the goods contracted to be delivered. They naturally claimed to recover the difference between the price which they contracted to pay for these goods and the market price at which they could have sold them. Had the goods been delivered and no questions of a sub-contract had arisen, they would have cost the appellants the contract price, and had they been delivered they could have sold them at the market price, which would be presumably their value. The appellants by the non-delivery have lost the money which they might have secured, namely, the difference between these two prices. They have been damnified to that extent. In the 7th paragraph of the statement of defence filed by the respondents it is alleged that on the 8th November 1917, the appellants informed the respondents that they the appellants, had agreed (it is not said with whom) to sell the coal received under this contract to the Dhanjibhoy Ice Factory, Bombay. The whole correspondence which took place between the parties is utterly inconsistent with this assertion, and the parol evidence does not, in any way, sustain it.

It appears to their Lordships that this case does not at all resemble those cases in which, for instance, A contracts with B to sell and deliver to B certain commodities and then contracts with C to buy from him similar commodities in order to implement his contract with B, informing C at the time he buys, of the special purpose to which he intends to devote those commodities. In such a case if C does not deliver the commodities, to A, questions may arise as to whether the damages to which he, C, would become liable for his breach of contract were not to be augmented by the extra loss A sustains by reason of the non-fulfilment of his contract with B. The authorities in England seem to go the length of holding that notice to C of the secial purpose for which A requires the goods is not enough that to make C liable for the additional damage he must have, expressly or impliedly, contracted to run the additional risk, Horne v. Midland Railway Co. (1). Sir George Lowndes contended, however, that under the 73rd section of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, notice would be enough to make a vendor liable though he did not contract to run the risk, to which Blackburn, J., refers in the case just cited. It does not appear to their Lordships to be necessary to decide this question, as in their view there is no evidence, oral or written, to establisish that the appellants had sub-contracted with any person or body to deliver to the Ice Factory the whole, or any porton, of the coal they had purchased from the respondents, when they should receive it or at any time thereafter. The parties agreed that the coal in fact delivered by the respondents to the appellants only amounted to 315 tons 16 cwt. Five issues were settied for the respondents. Two of them alone would seem to be of importance. No issue was raised as to whether the appellants ever contracted to deliver over to the Ice Factory Company the coals they might receive from the respondents. The two important issues were, whether the contract sued upon did not become impossible of performance, and whether the appellants were entitled to any damages, and if so how much. Upon those two issues the respondents appear to have concentrated all their efforts. The Trial Judge, rightly in their Lordships opinion, held in favour of the appellants on those issues. Ramavtar Maini, one of the partners of the respondents' firm, admitted that coal was available and could be purchased in the local market, and it was admitted that at no time was an absolute embargo placed on the supply of coal from the Garraria Colliery,

The Trial Judge awarded to the appellants Rs. 17,508-6-5 as damages. The Court of Appeal set forth their ground of decision in the following passages of their judgment. Macleod, C. J., said: "The defendants knew that the plaintiffs could only deliver coal to the party who signed the indent. The plaintiffs (the appellants) must have known that they could not deal with that coal in the open market. The only profit they could make out of the contract was the difference between the contract price and the price the indentor (The Ice Factory Company) would pay them." It must be taken, therefore, when the contract was made that both the parties knew that the only profit the plaintiffs could make would be the difference between their contract and the contract they might make with either the indentor or an intended party, and would at the most provide the measure of damages."

Heaton, J., expresses a practically identical opinion. He says:—

"The purpose of the contract was to procure coal for one particular customer, and, therefore, under the contract the coal, if procured, had to go to that particular consumer, or as to part might be used to replenish coal in stock from which that consumer had been supplied."

Their Lordhips are unable to accept these views. As between the appellants and the respondents there was no contract to supply to the former the identical coal obtained from the Collieries. On the contrary, it was expressly provided that the coal purchased from the respondents was to be supplied from the respondents' stock. Again, as alrea ly pointed out, no contract was entered into between the appellants and the respondents or between the appellants and the Ice Factory that the appellants should deliver over to the Ice Factory the coal that should be delivered to them under the contract of the 11th October 1917. The indent was, no doubt, mainipulated in the way that has been already pointed out in order to get the use of the wagons. The appellants' name does not appear on the indent. The respondents does appear. No evidence was given as to the particular relations between the respondents and the Ice Factory. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that, whatever those relations may have been, and whatever obligations rest upon the respondents, the appellants would not have been bound, had the agreement of the 11th October been performed, to sell or deliver to the Ice Factory the coals which should be delivered to the appellants out of the respondents' stock. They do not think that the Ice Factory was the appellants' only customer. There view is, that had the coals purchased been delivered to the appellants in pursuance of their contract, the latter would have been entitled to sell them in the open market at the market price, and, that being so, the damages were rightly assessed at the difference between the contract price and that market price. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment appealed from was wrong and should be reversed and the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Kajiji be restored, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondents must pay the costs of the appellants here and in the Courts. below.

JUDGMENT.—These are two applications for revision in two connected cases in which a dispute was referred to arbitration in connection with a pending suit; an award was made, and a decree was passed in accordance with the award under paragraph 16 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure. The main question in the case is, whether the Court acted with illegality or material irregularity so as to bring the case within the provisions of section 115 of the Code.

A preliminary objection has been made that no revision is entertainable in a case of this sort and reference has been made to the well-known remark of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1) that in a case of this sort a revision would be more objectionable than an appeal. This has been interpreted in Merali Visram v. Sheriff Devji (2) as not laying down that in no possible case could a revision be entertained against a decree passed in accordance with an award if the procedure of the lower Court had been altogether irregular and illegal, and indeed there is one case of this Court in which a revision was entertained on the ground that the Court proceeded to pass a decree without giving the objector time to produce evidence in support of his objections, Betana v. Kedar Nath (3). Where, however, the Court has considered the objections to the award on the merits and has come to, what the applicant contends is, a wrong decision as to whether there had been any irregularity on the part of the arbitrator, it is clear that the case will not come within the provisions of section 115 and that no revision will lie. I am in entire agreement with the view expressed by the learned Chief Justice of the Allahbad High Court in Lutawan v. Lachiya (4) and approved by Mr. Justice Piggott in Ajodhya Prasad v. Badarul Husain (5), that it was the clear intention of the Legislature that objections to the award on the ground of invalidity from any cause whatever should be decided by the Court which had made the order of reference and by no other Court. In this case the only point taken is that the arbitrator questioned certain persons in the absence of the parties. The arbitrator himself has given evidence as to this and has stated that on his way back from the Bazar where he had held his enquiry he had a talk with one or two persons on the subject, but that this was mere casual talk and did not in any way influence his decision. The arbitrator is a man of position, against whose faith no suggestion has been made and the Court has accepted his evidence. I do not wish to commit myself to the proposition that it is in no case open to an arbitrator to make private enquiries. It may be that in some cases the parties contemplate that the arbitrator should do so. Assuming, however, that the parties did not contemplate it in this case, the Court below has found as a fact that the decision of the arbitrator was based exclusively on the evidence which he recorded in the presence of both parties. JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—Suit No. 746 of 1919 out of which this appeal arises relates to a 12 annas 6 pies share in Taluk Kamong Zemindari, bearing Tauzi No. 1451, and to a 1 anna 6 pies 17 kranti' share in Taluk Gobindpur Zemindari, bearing Tauzi No. 1844, in the district of Cuttack. The properties are alleged by the plaintiff, Muhammad Fahimul Huq, the son of Maulvi Enamul Haq, to be the subject of a waqf created by his ancestress, Musammat Asmatunnissa, by a deed dated the 31st January 1848, for the endowment of a mosque and khanka in Mauza Farhattabad, appointing herself as the first mutwalli, and, as her successor, her husband, Maulvi Muhammad Faruk, by whom the properties had been conveyed to her by two hibanamas, dated the 1st September 1836 and the 14th October 1840, in lieu of deferred dower. It is alleged that Asmatunnissa was succeeded by Muhammad Faruk, who was succeeded by his son, Muhammad Kamal alias Muhammad Faik, who again, upon his death, was succeeded by his eldest son, Abdul Gunny, defendant No. 3, in this suit. The plaintiff is the son of Enamul Haq who was Muhammad Faruk's step-brother. He does not claim to be the mutwalli but as a member of the founder's family asks for a declaration that the defendant No. 3 had no proprietary right in the properties in suit and that a mortgage-bond in respect thereof, dated the 18th May 1900 in favour of defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 and the auction-sale following thereupon, dated the 15th August 1907, are illegal and inoperative. It is admitted that the defendant No. 3, Abdul Gunny, mortgaged both properties to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 18th May 1900, and that in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage, the mortgagees took possession on the 5th February 1908, and that they subsequently sold property No. 2 to the defendant No. 22, who is Sitanath Roy, shebait marfatdar of Sri Hanuman Jiu Thakur. The second declaration which the plaintiff seeks runs as follows:

"That the possession of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that of a trustee and they ought not to have any connection with the property in claim inasmuch as they are not mutwallis and are unfit to act as such."

In the plaint there were three other prayers as follows:

"(Ga) That if the Court considers that the plaintiff is fit to act as mutwalli then it may be decided that the disputed properties may be managed by the plaintiff for the purpose of discharging religious duties in connection with the aforesaid Farhattabad Mosque;

(Gha) that if the Court so considers it may settle any other scheme for the management of the disputed properties for the benefit of the masjid, and (Cha) that any other relief may be granted to the plaintiff which the Court considers fit."

These prayers were considered by the learned Subordinate Judge to be for consequential relief within the meaning of section 42 of the Indian Specific Relief Act, and, upon the plaintiffs refusing to pay ad valorem Court-fees thereon, the Court, by an order, dated the 1st September 1920, directed that they should be deleted.

The suit was defended at first by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and upon their pleading that it could not proceed in the absence of defendant No. 22, the vendee of property No. 2, the idol Sri Hanuman Jiu, was added as a party through his marfatdar Sitanath Roy who has also filed a written statement.

The Subordinate Judge finds that the waqf created by Asmatunnissa was valid and operative and that as the plaintiff has declined to ask for any consequential relief the suit is not maintainable by reason of the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; he also finds that the suit is barred by the rule of six years' limitation. He has accordingly dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

There was another suit tried jointly with this suit, namely, Suit No. 112 of 1919 in regard to the same properties in which the plaintiff, Abdul Sakur, claimed to be the mutwalli of the waqf upon appointment by Abdul Gunny, three or four years before the suit. In that suit he, in addition to the declaration mentioned above, claimed recovery of possession. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the suit was properly framed but that as Abdul Sakur had not established that he had been appointed mutwalli by his father, Abdul Gunny, he was not competent to maintain it. In the course of the trial Abdul Gunny died and Abdul Sakur asked leave to amend the plaint by adding a claim that he was entitled to succeed to the post of mutwalli as the eldest son of Abdul Gunny. That prayer for amendment was not allowed and in the result the suit was dismissed.

There was a third suit, No. 244 of 1919, in which the plaintiff, Muhammad Fahimul Haq, asked for declarations similar to those in Suit No. 746. That suit was also dismissed. As there are no appeals against decrees in suits Nos. 112 and 244 we are no longer concerned with them.

The only question, therefore, for decision is one of law, namely, whether Suit No. 746 is maintainable.

Taking the position most favourable to the appellants and assuming for the moment that notwithstanding the cross-objections of the respondents the trust in regard to the mosque was in respect of specific properties for a specific purpose, that it was valid under Muhammadan Law and that the transfers made by Abdul Gunny in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and, therefore, also the sales by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of defendant No. 22, were invalid, the sole question for decision is whether the plaintiff, Muhammad Fahimul Haq, is entitled to the declarations which he seeks.

Not being the mutwalli, even though he is a member of the family of the founder, he is no better than a member of the public interested in the trust and it was open to him to bring a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code for the removal of the trustee, the appointment of a new trustee, the vesting of property in the trustee for the settling of a scheme and for the other reliefs enumerated in that section; but the plaintiff has not taken that course and, in my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that he can obtain no relief under the general law unless he asks for consequential relief in the shape of recovery of possession. His suit clearly offends against the express provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

It is now settled that a beneficiary of a trust in respect of a Muhammadan waqf interested in the maintenance of a mosque or other charitable institution may, without having recourse to the provisions of r. 8, O. I., Civil Procedure Code, and without suing in a representative capacity on behalf of the other beneficiaries, sue for recovery of possession of property wrongfully alienated by the trustee and for the incidental declaration that the properties are the subject of the trust and that they cannot be alienated. It is true that in Delrus Banoo Begum v. Nowab Syud Asgur Ali Khan (1) it was held that in respect of a property which is subject to the provisions of Act XX of 1863 no suit could be brought by a beneficiary without the leave of the principal Civil Court as required by section 18 of the Act. But that decision was virtually overruled in Jan Ali v. Ram Nath (2) where it was held that the plaintiff in such a suit may sue without obtaining permission under section 18 of the Religious Endowments Act but he must sue in a representative capacity after complying with the provisions of section 30, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which corresponds to r. 8, O. I, of the present Civil Procedure Code; a still wider view has been taken in the later ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Zafaryab Ali v. Bakhtawar Singh (3) and in a Full Bench decision of the same Court in Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (4). The judgment of Mahmood, J., in this last mentioned case is clear authority for the proposition that the trust property vests in God and the right of a Muhammadan who is entitled to use a mosque to bring a suit for the recovery of property belonging to it is comparable to a right of suit in respect of a private road which many persons have a right to use. Every Mussulman who derives any benefit from such a waqf is entitled to maintain an action against the mutwalli to establish his right thereto or against a trespasser to recover any portion of the waqf property which has been misappropriated, without joining any other person who may participate with him in the benefit. It is clear that, if the mutwalli himself is the offender or if he is unwilling to act, the beneficiary must have the power to recover the property. This also was the view taken in Kazi Hassan v. Sagun Balkrishna (5). The judgment of Parsons, J., in that case is clear authority for the proposition that a right of suit for a declaration and for the recovery of the property for the benefit of the trust will lie. Ranade, J., the other member of the Bench, was of opinion that the suit was maintainable for the declaratory relief which was the principal cause of action and that the relief as to possession might also be claimed under certain circumstances if it was proved that the plaintiff had succeeded to the office of the mutwalli or was rendering service at the mosque. The main question argued before the Hon'ble Judges was whether the suit could be brought without resorting to the procedure of section 539, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and on a careful reading of the judgment of Ranade, J., it would appear that he did not hold that if there was consequential relief open to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was entitled nevertheless to ask for a mere declaration. I think what that learned Judge intended to hold was that if it should turn out that the plaintiff was not, under the circumstances, entitled to recovery of possession then a suit for a mere declaration would lie; this was also the interpretation put upon his decision by Dundas, J., in the Lahore High Court in Afiman v. Hamiduddin Husain (6).

The question then is whether consequential relief being clearly available to the plaintiff in the present suit, he is entitled to a mere declaration. In my opinion he is not so entitled, and I rely upon the observations of Jenkins, C. J., in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (7), where the learned Judge defines the scope of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act as follows: "The limit imposed by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is on decrees which are merely declaratory and does not expressly extend to decrees in which relief is administered and declarations are embodied as introductory to that relief. For such declarations legislative sanction is not required as they rest on long established practice. But for all that the Court should be circumspect and even chary as to the declarations it makes; it is ordinarily enough that relief should be granted without the declaration."

The decision of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Ashraj Ali v. Mahammad Nurajjama (8) would seem to offend against this principle, but the circumstances of that case were peculiar. There the plaintiffs, who were worshippers at a mosque, which was waqf property, sued for a declaration that the alienations made by the mutwalli were void and inoperative and for a decree for khas possession with mesne profits either in favour of the plaintiffs or the mutwalli. The prayers for khas possession and mesne profits were disallowed and the plaintiffs were satisfied with a mere declaration. On second appeal by the contesting defendant the High Court held that a suit by a worshipper was maintainable and they dismissed the appeal. There was no cross-appeal by the plaintiffs in regard to the consequential relief and, under the circumstances, the Court had no option but to maintain the decree of the Court below in the form it was passed. That decision, however, does not seem to be authority for the proposition that a Court can give a decree in violation of the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

It is argued before us that, even though section 42 might be a bar, that section is not exhaustive and that, apart from statutory authority, the general law entitles the plaintiff to a declaration. In my opinion there is no substance whatever in this contention. It is now well settled that the power of Courts in India to entertain suits of a civil nature does not carry with it the general power of making declarations, except in so far as such power is expressly covered by Statute. In Strimathoo Moothoo Vijia Ragoonadah Ranee Kolandapuree Natchiar v. Dorasing Tever (9) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in stating the history of declaratory decrees in India and in construing section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, observed as follows: "Nor does any Court in India, since the passing of the Code, seem to have considered that it had the power of making declaratory decrees independently of that clause," and their Lordships finally held that a declaratory decree could not be made unless there was a right to consequential relief capable of being had in the same Court or in certain cases in some other Court. It may be contended that if a beneficiary is permitted to sue for recovery of alienated trust property and to ask the Court to deliver it to the offending mutwalli the Court will in effect be assisting in a fraud upon the alienee and in violating the general principle that a grantor cannot derogate from his grant. That certainly appears at first sight to be a contention worthy of some attention, but the decided cases all show that the Courts have paid more regard to the protection of the trust than to the protection of the alienee and it is now settled that even if the grantor has himself been implicated in the abuse of the trust the Courts will interfere at his instance to prevent a repetition of the abuse though his previous conduct might be a reason for excluding him from the administration of the trust property. In Juggut Mohini Dossee v. Sokheemoney Dossee (10) thier Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed that they would not decline to protect the property and leave it further exposed to loss and decline to make a declaration that it is trust property merely because they would not trust the plaintiff with its administration. That case was followed in Subbarayudu v. Kotayya (11) where the Court went so far as to hold that a hereditary dharmakarta of a temple, who had assigned his office to a zemindar and consented to a decree being passed on the footing of such assignment, is competent nevertheless to bring a suit to set aside a Court sale of temple lands, treating such assignment as a nullity. To the same effect is Srimati Mallika Dasi v. Ratanmani Chakervarti (12) where a shebait who had mortgaged his priestly office with the emoluments was permitted to plead as a defence to a suit by the mortgagee that the transfer was void and inoperative. The general principle in these cases is that, where the transfer is void in law, no question of equity as between the transferor and the transferee can arise.

The learned Vakil for the appellant finally asks that he may be permitted to amends his plaint as to include a prayer for consequential relief. In my opinion that prayer cannot be allowed at this stage in particular as the prayers (Ga), (Gha) and (Cha) which related to consequential relief were deleted in consequence of his laches in the Trial Court.

The learned Vakil also asks that we should consider the prayer (Kha) as a prayer for consequential relief. That clause runs as follows:—

"That it may be declared that the possession of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of the property in claim is that of a trustee and that they ought not to have any connection with the property in claim inasmuch as they are not mutwallis and are unfit to act as such."

In the first place, it is quite clear that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being Hindus cannot be mutwallis of the trust property. In the second place, the words, "ought not to have any connection with the property in claim" are vague and do not amount to a request for recovery of possession. The plaintiff throughout prosecuted his suit as a suit for a mere declaration and it is too late in the day to contend that the suit complied with the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Therefore, on the question whether the suit is maintainable I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and that the suit has been rightly dismissed.

As to limitation, it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the suit is barred by six years' limitation which runs from the date of alienation. That view is, in my opinion, correct. Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act applies and the judgment of their Lordships of the Madras High Court in Thazhe Vittil Pantheeradi Ananda Varar v. Kavumpreth Illath Vasudevan Nambudiri (13), though very shortly reported, is clearly to the point. There the manager of a Hindu endowment sued for a declaration that certain alienations were void. It was held that the cause of action dated from the date of the patta by which the alienation was made, and that as more than six years had elapsed since that date the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed although the right of the dewaswam to the property might not be barred.

The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that if a suit for possession and declaration is maintainable by the successor of a mutwalli in respect of alienations made by the mutwalli before his death and the period of limitation is twelve years, it should follow a fortiori that a suit during the lifetime of a mutwalli by a beneficiary or by the mutwalli himself cannot be barred; and that, in any event, the period of limitation should not expire till six years from the death of the mutwalli. In my opinion this argument is fallacious. The declaration obtained in a suit for possession is merely ancillary and is generally unnecessary; but where the cause of action is based upon a shadow cast upon the title of a person, who is not entitled to any consequential relief at the moment, limitation must run from the date on which that challenge to his title commences. If the learned Vakil's argument is correct then the death of the mutwalli can make no difference and there ought to be no limitation at all. Cases coming under Art. 134, for recovery of possession after the death of a trustee, have no application to the present case. The question was considered at some length in Chidambaranatha Thambiran v. Nallasiva Mudaliar (14). In that case a beneficiary sued for recovery of property wrongly alienated by a Hindu, and section 120 of the Limitation Act was set up as a bar and the Court held that either Art. 134 or 144 of the Limitation Act would be applicable as the suit was one for possession and not for a mere declaration.

It may, perhaps, be contended on the authority of Chukkun Lal Roy v. Loli Mohan Roy (15) that in the present case the right of suit is a continuing right and that, so long as the plaintiff's right to the property continues, the suit cannot be barred by limitation. Although certain observations in Chukkun Lal's case (15), which was a suit for the construction of a Will by a reversioner, may seem to support this view, I think with great respect that, if it was intended to lay down the general proposition that there is a continuing right to a declaratory decree in respect of property so long as the right to the property is not extinguished, the proposition is too widely stated. The principle of section 23 of the Limitation Act, which deals with continuing wrongs, can have no application to a declaratory suit and there is no recurring cause of action for a declaratory relief. It is to be noted that the decision in Chukkun Lal's case (15) has been reversed by the Privy Council in Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (16) on another point. Their Lordships did not consider the question of limitation but I venture to think that limitation began to run when the defendant did the first act prejudicial to the plaintiff's title.

In any event, the facts of the present suit are different and it is, in my, opinion, clearly barred by limitation as it was instituted more than six years after the date of the alienation.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 15th December 1921, confirming a decree of the Munsif, Partabgarh, dated the 18th April 1921.

Mr. Ram Prasad Varma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Kishen Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the recovery of possession of certain property on the allegation that the father of the defendant-respondent wrongfully took possession of the same during the minority of the plaintiff-appellant. The plaintiff asserted that he attained majority in the month of Jeth 1918 and that the defendant had refused to give him possession. The defence was that the property in dispute had been mortgaged by Ajudhia Singh, the grandfather of the plaintiff, by conditional sale with Mata Prasad, the father of the defendant, in lieu of Rs. 129 on the 8th March 1897 that Mata Prasad subsequently obtained a decree for foreclosure on foot of the said mortgage against the present plaintiff under the guardianship of his mother, Musammat Sughra Kuar, who entered into a compromise agreeing to pay the mortgage money within four months, that she did not pay the mortgage money and that the mortgage was in the end finally foreclosed in favour of Mata Prasad on the 9th August 1907. The defendant further stated that the plaint ff was about 12 years old when the suit to enforce the mortgage was filed against him, that the present age of the plaintiff was at least 26 years, that the claim was barred by limitation, and that the decree for foreclosure was in any case binding on the plaintiff.

The Court of the first instance did not go into the question of limitation and dismissed the suit on the ground that Musammat Sughra Kuar, the guardian ad litem of the present plaintiff, had obtained the sanction of the Court to enter into a compromise, with the mortgagee by agreeing to pay the decretal money within four months of the date of the decree and that the final decree for foreclosure obtained by the mortgagee on her failing to pay the mortgage-money was binding on the plaintiff. It further found that the defendant was in any case not a trespasser and that the suit for his ejectment as such was not maintainable. The lower Appellate Court upheld that decree. It treated the final decree for foreclosure as binding on the plaintiff, though no formal order of appointment of Musammat Sughra Kuar as a guardian ad litem of the plaintiff owing to the weeding out of the papers was traceable. It further refused to treat the present suit as one for redemption.

It appears that the plaintiff was represented in the previous suit by Musammat Sughra Kuar as his guardian ad litem. The learned Subordinate Judge observes that owing to the weeding out of the papers it is not possible to say whether an order for appointment of Musammat Sughra Kuar as a guardian ad litem of the plaintiff was passed or not. Such an order must, in the ordinary course, have been passed on the application made for her appointment in the previous suit accopmanied by an affidavit both of which had been weeded out. On the date fixed for the hearing of that suit Musammat Sughra Kuar actually appeared as guardian ad litem of her minor son and filed a compromise, agreeing to pay the decretal money within four months and the mortgagee agreed to exempt her from the costs of the suit. The compromise was entered into with the consent of the Court and from the fact that such sanction had been granted it may be inferred that every thing necessary had been done to have the minor properly represented by a guardian ad litem. In Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that where the Court by its action had given its sanction to the appearance of a person as such a guardian, the absence of a formal order of appointment was not necessarily fatal to the proceedings. Even an omission to serve the minors concerned or their mother personally was treated as mere irregularities covered by section 578 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and not errors fatal to the suit. In Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (2) it was similarly held that the absence of an affidavit such as is required by the provisions of section 456 of the old Code of Civil Procedure at the time the application for the appointment of a guardian is made, was not sufficient to render the proceedings illegal and void as against the minors on the ground that they were not properly represented therein. In that case an order was made by the Court appointing a person guardian ad litem of certain minors and their Lordships observed that that order being on the record the presumption was, in the absence of the evidence to the contrary, that every thing was regularly and properly done. In Ramlrichh Ram v. Tarak Tewari (3) where the manager of a family had refused to act as a guardian ad litem of one of the minor members of the family and the Court appointed the nazir as his guardian ad litem without issuing the notices required by O. XXXII, r. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Nazir did not put in any defence on behalf of the minor but the manager fully contested the suit, though without success, it was held that, in the absence of any proof of fraud or collusion or prejudice to the minor concerned, the right of the minor to set aside the proceedings in the suit on the the ground of an irregularity in the appointment of a guardian to represent him in that suit could not be sustained. In Sripal Singh v. Jagdish Narayan [Radhe Lal] (4) it was similarly held that where a lawful guardian ad litem had been appointed, any defect or irregularity in the procedure, leading up to such an appointment could not operate to render a decree passed in a suit in which the minor was represented by such a guardian invalid, unless the defect or irregularity has had the effect of prejudicing the interest of the minor or affected the merits of the case. It is not possible to say that no order appointing Musammat Sughra Kuar, a guardian ad litem of the minor, had been passed in that case. The presumption is that the proceeding of the Court had been carried out regularly and in accordance with law and this presumption becomes stronger when it is found that an application and an affidavit such as is filed in connection with the appointment of a person as guardian ad litem of a minor was on the record and that the guardian had subsequently appeared and filed a compromise on behalf of the minor to which the Court had accorded its sanction.

The decisions in Hanuman Parsad v. Muhammad Ishaq (5) and Shivnath Singh v. Manohar Lal (6) to which the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred do not apply, because in those cases it was definitely found that no formal order had been passed appointing a guardian ad litem for the minor concerned. Here the presumption is that some such order had been passed on the back of the petition though, owing to the weeding out of certain papers, it is not traceable. There is no allegation that the mother and guardian ad litem of the minor acted either fraudulently or with gross negligence to the prejudice of the minor.

Moreover, if the allegation made by the plaintiff in the plaint as to his age were to be taken to be correct, he must have been born some years after the mortgage was made and his mother could not have impeached the validity of the mortgage, even if it had not been made to pay the antecedent debts recited therein. The decree passed in the suit for foreclosure is, therefore, in any case binding on the plaintiff.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Second Additional Sub-Judge, Aligarh, dated the 21st August 1920.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit for sale on the basis of a simple mortgage executed by the defendant. One of the pleas in defence was that the rate of interest (2 per cent. per annum compoundable half-yearly) was entered in the deed without the knowledge of the defendant, that it was excessive, and not binding on him.

The first Court allowed interest at the rate mentioned in the mortgage deed but in view of the fact that the mortgage-money had swollen to a high figure it did not give the plaintiff his costs.

Both parties appealed to the District Judge, the defendant complaining against the rate of interest and the plaintiff praying for his costs.

The District Judge allowed the defendant's appeal inasmuch as it reduced the rate of interest from compound to simple. He also allowed the plaintiff's appeal and awarded him costs in proportion to his failure and success.

Two decrees were drawn up in the two appeals in the form prescribed by O. XXXIV, r. 4. These two decrees, so far as the operative portions were concerned, were identical in terms. Both of them mentioned the decretal amount on failure to pay which the property would be sold.

The plaintiff filed an appeal in the High Court against the decree which had cut down the rate of interest. He preferred no appeal against the other decree.

A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of the appeal.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent in support of the preliminary objection submitted: —The plaintiff has filed no appeal against the other decree of the District Judge. That decree has, therefore, become final between the parties and operates as res judicata. The hearing of the present appeal is, therefore barred. If this appeal is heard and allowed, there will come into existence two decrees, inconsistent with each other, yet both binding on the parties. This will lead to anomalous results.

[Banerji, J.—The other decree related to costs and had nothing to do with the matter now before us viz., the rate of interest].

Although it relates to costs yet it mentions the decretal amount. If the High Court changes the rate of interest, and thereby the decretal amount, its decree will clash with the other decree of the District Judge.]

[Banerji, J.—We have to look to the substance of the decree and not to the form.]

If the appeal is allowed and the plaintiff proceeds to execute the decree of this Court the defendant will come forward with the decree of the District Judge and will say that under the terms of that decree, which is binding on the plaintiff, the latter cannot claim more than what is mentioned therein. On the other hand, the plaintiff on the strength of the High Court decree will claim the amount mentioned in that decree. This will be an anamoly. I rely on Balhari Pande v. Shiva Sampat Pande (1), Zaharia v. Debi (2), Dakhni Din v. Syed Ali Asghar (3), Anant Das v. Udaibhan Pargas (4) and Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (5).

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant, was not called upon to reply but he pointed out the fact that both the decrees being preliminary none of them was capable of execution. It would be the final decree that would be executed and, therefore, the apprehended anomaly could not happen.

JUDGMENT.

Mears, C. J., Piggott, Walsh and Ryves, JJ.—This appeal was referred to a Bench of five Judges to decide whether the appellant's right of appeal was barred by what has been called "the principle of res judicata" in accordance with a preliminary objection taken by the respondent; or, in other words, whether the ruling in Zaharia v. Debi (2) applied to it, or whether, as the appellant contended, it was governed by the ruling in Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (6) and in effect, therefore, whether the latter decision was correctly reported as having been overruled by the former.

We are of opinion that there is no such bar, and that the preliminary objection fails. The facts are simple. The plaintiff sues upon a mortgage executed by the defendant in his favour on the 28th May 1914, and claims repayment of the principal amount secured, with interest thereon at the contract rate, or, in the alternative, sale of the mortgaged property. The Munsif decreed the claim but deprived the plaintiff of costs upon the ground that the rate of interest was excessive and that the sum due had swelled to an inordinate amount. From this preliminary decree both parties appealed to the Subordinate Judge who varied the decree by reducing the plaintiff's claim to one for simple interest only resulting in the sum of Rs. 488 and further interest pendente lite, and future interest up to the date of realization, and by awarding the plaintiff proportionate costs upon the amount due. He also directed that each party should pay its own costs of the appeal. Two separate decrees were drawn up in the lower Appellate Court. This fact has given rise to the present difficulty. In spite of the absence from the Code of any provision enabling two cross-appeals from the same decree to be consolidated, the Appellate Court in such a case has inherent jurisdiction, in disposing of the two appeals, as the Court in this case did by one judgment so to mould its decree as to merge the result of the two appeals into one decree, representing the final adjustment of the rights of the parties on all the points raised, in a manner similar to the procedure adopted where there is one appeal, and cross-objections are made on behalf of the respondent. We have, however, to deal with a case in which two decrees were in fact passed, the terms of which were identical, except as regards the contents of the memorandum of costs endorsed on each respectively. The difficulty of carrying out the procedure adopted by the lower Appellate Court in this case, and the practical objection to it, are sufficiently shown by a perusal of the two decrees. Though each is, ex hypothesi, intended to be independent of the other, and to be confined only to the separate appeal to which it relates, each in fact is framed in terms which refer to and operate upon both appeals, thereby defeating the object which the practice of drawing up two decrees must be presumed to be intended to achieve. So far as concerns the decree drawn up in the plaintiff's appeal to the lower Appellate Court, both parties were satisfied. The plaintiff achieved his object by obtaining an order in his favour awarding him proportionate costs, and the defendant did not appeal against this. The present appeal is brought by the plaintiff against the decree drawn up in the defendant's appeal to the lower Appellate Court which reduced the amount of his claim as awarded in his favour by the Trial Court.

It is the absence of any appeal by the plaintiff from the decree in his own favour in the lower Appellate Court, which, except in so far as it repeats the reduced amount of the claim, contains nothing to his prejudice that is said to create a bar to his present appeal. In other words, the very decree against which he appeals is sought to be used against him as a bar to his right of appeal against it. So stated, the objection is contrary to justice and common sense, and must, therefore, be fallacious.

The three-Judge decision relied upon, Zaharia v. Debi (2), certainly did not decide this. In that case there were two suits by two independent plaintiffs asserting inconsistent titles to the same right. One unsuccessful plaintiff appealed, but he did not appeal against the decree in the suit by the successful plaintiff which had been passed against him as defendant. He left outstanding a final decree which so far affected his claim on the merits to his prejudice as to put an end to it altogether in favour of the other party. It would appear that the High Court, as the Appellate Court in that case, might have dismissed the appeal upon the merits, unless the appellant was willing to bring up in appeal the other decree which prejudicially affected his right and that it was not really necessary to invoke the doctrine of res judicata. The case of Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (6) was a very different case, substantially resembling the present case. In our opinion it was rightly decided, and not being in pari materia with the case of Zaharia v. Debi (2) cannot be said to have been overruled by that case. In Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (6) the Court rightly treated the two decrees as being in substance one, though drawn up in duplicate. But it is clear from the subsequent cases, and from the authorized report in Zaharia v. Debi (2) that Zaharia v. Debi (2) has been treated as laying down a general rule to be followed in all cases in which an unappealed decree passed in contemporaneous proceedings arising out of the same dispute is outstanding in the lower Appellate Court. It, therefore, becomes necessary to lay down once and for all the practice which should in future bind the Court and to negative the general applicability of the rule in Zaharia v. Debi (2).

Without differing from that decision as applied to the facts of that and cognate cases, we are of opinion that some of the reasoning and dicta contained in the judgments went further than were necessary, or than we ourselves are prepared to go, and that they have been misapplied in some of the subsequent cases. Where it appears to an Appellate Court that there are two decrees arising out of two suits heard together or raising the same question between the same parties, or arising out of two appeals to a Subordinate Appellate Court, and only one of such decrees is brought before it in appeal, and there is nothing prejudicial to the appellant in the decree from which no appeal has been brought which is not raised and cannot be set right if the appeal which he has brought succeeds, the right of appeal is not barred either by the rule of res judicata, or at all, by reason of his failure to appeal from the decree which does not prejudice him. It would be indeed wrong for an appellant to appeal against a decree which did not prejudice him and to which he did not object or to appeal against two duplicate decrees where an appeal against one of them would be sufficient and he is certainly under no obligation to do so. The ultimate rights of the parties must be adjusted and regulated according to the final decision of the last Court of Appeal.

It follows from this that we hold that Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (6) was rightly decided, and that the following Abdul Basit v. Ashfaq Husain (5), Dakhni Din v. Syed Ali Asghar (3), Ramcharan v. Lachman Pershad (7), Anant Das v. Udaibhan Pargas (4) and Balhari Pande v. Shiva Sampat Pande (1) must be treated as being no longer law.

No doubt, the present case is a particularly strong one. The decree under appeal, which is a counterpart of the decree unappealed, is a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. It is established law that when a preliminary decree has been modified on appeal, the final decree must follow the appellate decree. It would be indeed strange if the existence of a duplicate preliminary decree in the same suit were a bar to an appeal against such preliminary decree.

Banerji, J.—An objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the appellant has not appealed from the decision by the lower Appellate Court of a connected appeal both of which were decided by the same judgment. The circumstances under which the objection arises are these. The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit for sale on a mortgage. The defendant contested the suit on the ground among others that the amount of interest claimed was excessive. The Court of first instance overruled this plea and decreed the claim for interest but it disallowed costs to the plaintiff as the amount of interest had swelled to a large figure. Both parties appealed from this decree, the plaintiff, on the question of costs and the defendant on the question of interest. The defendant's appeal was No. 459 and the plaintiff's appeal was No. 460. Both the appeals were disposed of by the same judgment. The lower Appellate Court allowed both the appeals reduced the amount of interest awarded by the First Court but allowed costs to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's Appeal No. 460 was thus decided in his favour. He accepted the decision and did not appeal from it. As the other Appeal No. 459, which related to interest, was decided against him he preferred the present appeal from the decision in Appeal No. 459. It is contended that as both appeals were decided by the lower Appellate Court by the same judgment and the plaintiff has not appealed from the decision in Appeal No. 460 the present appeal is not maintainable. In support of this contention the Full Bench case of Zaharia v. Debi (2) has been relied upon. In my judgment that case has no bearing on the present case and the objection urged on behalf of the respondent is untenable. The question before us is whether the plaintiff is precluded from maintaining the present appeal by reason of his allowing the decision in the connected appeal to become final and we are not called upon to decide whether the ruling in the case of Zaharia v. Debi (2) or that in the case of Damodar Das v. Sheo- ram Das (6) is right. The case last mentioned was not relied upon by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad on behalf of the appellant though it is referred to in the order of reference to the Full Bench. In my judgment, where the same question in issue arises between the same parties or between persons through whom they claim in two suits or two appeals the party against whom the question or issue is decided is bound to appeal from the decision in both the suits or appeals, and if he allows the decision in one of the suits or appeals to stand unreversed and to become final he is precluded from maintaining the appeal preferred by him from the decision in one of the suits or appeals only where an issue has been decided between the same parties or their predecessors-in-title in two suits or appeals the decision, if unreversed, is binding on the parties. If the party to whose prejudice the question has been decided allows the judgment in one of the cases to become final, and, therefore, binding on him, the Court cannot, in the other case or appeal, go behind the decision which has become final and the necessary result is that the appeal in which the same question is sought to be re-opened cannot be sustained. This is what was held in the case of Zaharia v. Debi (2). In that case two rival suits for pre-emption in respect of the same sale were brought by two claimants each of whom asserted as against the other, that he had a paramount title to pre-empt. The claim of one of the two rival plaintiffs was decreed. The defeated plaintiff appealed from the decision in one of the suits and the judgment and decree in the other suit thus became final as between the parties. It was held that as the same issue had been raised and tried in both the suits and the decision of it in one suit became final as between the parties it operated as res judicata and the issue could not be re-opened and tried in the appeal preferred by the party against whom the issue had been decided. I fully agree with this decision and I can find nothing in the judgment of Stanley, C. J., who delivered the main judgment in the case, from which one may dissent. This case does not, in any way, support the contention of the respondent. The ruling in Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (6) was not rlied upon by the learned Advocate for the appellant and we are not called upon to pronounce any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of the decision in that case. If it be deemed to have laid down any rule of law inconsistent with the decision in Zaharia v. Debi (2), I am not prepared to follow it. No reason is stated in the judgment for overruling the objection taken in that case. If the learned Judges intended to hold that no plea of res judicata could be raised merely because one judgment was delivered in the two cases, as held by the Calcutta High Court in one of the cases cited in the judgment, I am unable, with great respect, to agree with them. In the present case the only question which was decided in the appeal preferred to the Court below by the plaintiff, viz., Appeal No. 460, was the question of costs and that was decided in the plaintiff's favour. He had, therefore, no occasion to appeal against the decision in that case and his omission to appeal from that decision does not bar his present appeal. No issue was decided in Appeal No. 460 which was adverse to him and no issue which arose and was decided in that appeal arises in the appeal now before us. There is, therefore, no bar to the hearing of this appeal. The difficulty which arises in this case is due to the fact that one decree only was prepared in both the appeals and a copy of that decree was filed in each case. This, however, did not entitle the plaintiff to appeal from the decision in the appeal in which he was the successful party. As the suit was a mortgage suit and only one decree could be passed in it, the decree drawn up by the Court below was the decree which was the result of the decision in the two appeals before it. We must look to the substance and not to mere form. Any ruling which militates against the view enunciated in this case cannot be followed. I would overrule the objection taken on behalf of the respondent.

(7) 9 Ind. Cas. 667.

Order accordingly.

When a person pays off a debt which another is bound to pay the ordinary relief that the Courts can give is a personal decree against the defendant for money had and received, as section 69 of the Contract Act does not provide any higher remedy. If that remedy is barred owing to the plantiff's delay he cannot extend the period of limitation by asking for an enlarged relief by way of a charge upon the defendant's property. [p. 422, col. 1.]

Where a vendee's suit for possession is dismissed on the ground that his vendor's title was nominal and that he took the sale with notice of the defect of title, a suit brought by him for recovery of certain sums alleged to have been paid by him in discharge of encumbrances on the property more than three years both from the date when his title was found against by the Court and from the date of the payment of encumbrances, is barred by limitation, whether Art. 62, or 97 of the Limitation Act is the more approp iate Article. Article 132 is inapplicable since the plaintiff can at best obtain only a personal decree against the defendant for money had and received under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act. [p. 420, col. 2; [p. 421, cols. 1 & 2; p. 422, col. 1.]

A covenant for quiet enjoyment between the vendor and the vendee can in law be implied only upon valid sales and not where the sale-deed, to vendee's knowledge, conveys no title whatever. [p. 422, col. 2.]

Article 116 of the Limitation Act is applicable to a suit on failure of consideration for return of any purchase-money paid under a registered sale and must be instituted within six years from the date of sale. [p. 422, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—Though a purchaser may have had notice of the defective title of his vendor, if he makes payments to creditors of the vedor bona fide after a decree for possession is passed in his favour, to preserve the property and stave off attachments and sales, the vendee is not a mere volunteer and would be entitled as to such payments to equitable relief under section 69 of the Contract Act. [p. 420, col. 2; p. 421, col. 1.]

Per Devadoss, J.—A vendee who knows that his vendor has no title and the sale is a sham, is only in the position of a volunteer and is not entitled to any amount for relieving the burden on the properties sold. A Civil Court does Appeals against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 49 of 1916.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopala Chariar, for the Defendants.—I have a memo. of objections in Appeal Suit No. 239 and my contentions go to the root of the whole case and I ask for permission to open the case. I raise two contentions, first, that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation; and, secondly, that plaintiff is purely a volunteer and is not entitled to decree for any amount. (Facts were then stated and the dates given which are contained in full in the judgment of Mr. Justice Devadoss.)

The plaintiff's title was found against by the Sub-Court on 12th July 1911 and the decree was confirmed in second appeal on 14th February 1913 and the present suit was filed on 12th February 1916.

The Article applicable is 97 and the starting point for limitation is 12th July 1911 and not the date of the confirmation of the decree. See the Privy Council decision in Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Boid) (1) applied in Mahomed Ali Sheriff v. Budharaju Venkatapathi Raju (2) and in Viswanatha Sastri v. Sitalakshmi Ammal (3). The case in Rajagopalan v. Tirupananthal Tambiran (4) which was followed in Sarvothama Row v. Chinnasami Pillai (5) is no longer law after the Privy Council decision.

The 42 Madras decision [Sarvothama Row v. Chinnasami Pillai (5)] was given before the Privy Council decision was published.

Plaintiff's suit is one for failure of consideration. He never got possession. His title was found against on 12th July 1911 and his suit is more than three years therefrom and is hence barred under Art. 97.

If the sale is void ab initio and no possession was given, Art. 62 may apply but then the plaintiff's suit is more than three years even from the latest date of payment of money under the sale-deed, i.e., 26th November 1912. See Hanuman Kamal v. Hanuman Mandur (6), Venkatanarasimhulu v. Peramma (7), Kowuri Basivireddy v. Tallaparagada Nagamma (8), Ramanatha Aiyar v. Ozhaloor Pathiriserri Raman Nambudripad (9) and Subbaraya v. Rajagopala (10).

Neither is plaintiff entitled to the benefit of Art. 116, i.e. six years.

The decision in Ramanatha Iyer v. Ozhaloor Pathiriserri Raman Nambudripad (9) is exactly in point. A covenant for title is broken on the date of sale and there is no continuing breach. The sale to plaintiff and his vendor was in 1908 and 1907, respectively. See English decisions Reference was made also to Secretary of State for India v. Pemaraju Venkayya (13); Srinivasa Raghava Dikshadar v. Rangasami Aiyangar (14); Ardesir v. Vajesing (15); Hari Tewari v. Raghunath Tiwari (16).

Article 132 has no application either. In any case plaintiff can get only a money-decree; Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (17).

The suit is barred in any view; Abkan Sahib v. Soran Bivi Saiba Ammal (18), Peary Mohan Mukerji v. Norendra Nath Mukerji (19).

On the second point plaintiff took with knowledge of the nominal sale in favour of his vendor. He was purely a volunteer. Law does not recognise subrogation in favour of a purchaser under a nominal sale where there is no obligation to pay.

Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (20), Karuppan Ambalagaran v. Sakuth Levvai (21), Nadhamuni Iyyan v. Appu Odayan (22), Shiam Lal v. Ram Piari (23), Ammani Ammal v. Ramaswami Naidu (24), Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (25), Narayana Kutty Goundan v. Pechiammal (26) were then referred to.

The decisions in Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27), Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company (28), Govinda Padayachi v. Lokanatha Aiyar (29) and Nand Kishore Jha v. Piraoo Mian (30) are distinguishable. Section 70 of the Contract Act does not apply either where the person making payment does so for manufacturing evidence of title.

Panchkori v. Hari Das (31), Janki Prasad Singh v. Baldeo Prasad (32), Jinnat Ali v. Fateh Ali (33) and Desai Himatsingji v. Bhavabhai (34).

There is no bona fide payment at all and plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of sections 69 and 70, Indian Contract Act.

Yogambal Boyee Ammani Ammal v. Natna Pillai Markayar (35) and Ramasami Naidu v. Muthusamia Pillai (36).

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Plaintiff in reply—The sale in favour of the plaintiff is not a void sale at all. It is only voidable. Plaintiff has a good and subsisting cause of action both against first defendant and the 13th defendant. The suit is not barred by limitation. If Art. 97 applies, the time begins to run not from the date of the appellate decree but from the date of the High Court decree. While the case was pending in the High Court it cannot be said plaintiff's right to sue on failure of consideration had arisen. The Privy Council decision in Hukum Chand Bord v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Bold) (1) is distinguishable. The decision in Sarvothama Row v. Chinnasami Pillai (5) is still good law. It followed an earlier decision in Rajagopalan v. Tirupananthal Tambiran (4). Art. 62 does not apply to this case. The proper Article to apply in this case is Art. 132. Plaintiff has discharged encumbrances existing on the properties and is entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagees. If plaintiff has a charge in law Art. 132 would apply and the suit will be clearly in time. The question for consideration then is if the plaintiff is entitled to a charge. The payments made by plaintiff were mostly at a time when his title was found established in one Court. I also come within section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act. At the time of the payments I was the purchaser of the equity of redemption. The later decree of the District Court does not affect my prior existing right to subrogation. Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somesekhararaz (17), Narayana Kutti Goundan v. Pechiammal (26), Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company (28) and Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (25).

On the second question the plaintiff is in any case entitled to a money-decree.

I rely on sections 70 and 69 of the Indian Contract Act. The plaintiff is not volunteer. The defendant has obviously benefited by the payment of the encumbrances. Plaintiff did not intend to make the payments gratuitously.

Rajah of Pittapur v. Secretary of State (37), Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India (38), Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhubin Mardana [Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana] (39), Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27), Karuppan Ambalagaran v. Sakuth Levvai (21) and Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (40).

Plaintiff's sale is not void. The decisions cited hold that where a payment is bona fide by a person who is interested in paying and the other person has benefited, he is entitled to reimbursement. It is a case of unjust punishment by the defendant at plaintiff's expense.

Mr. Srinivasa Gopala Chariar distinguished the cases cited by the appellant.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 239 OF 1918.

Spencer, J.—This suit was brought to recover from first defendant certain sums of money paid by the plaintiff to first defendant's creditors in pursuance of directions contained in a sale-deed of immoveable property pruchased from 13th defendant who had previously purchased the same property from first defendant.

The sale by first defendant to 13th defendant was effected on January 20th, 1907, through a registered instrument (Exhibit A) and was for Rs. 5,000. That by 13th defendant to the plaintiff was through another registered sale-deed (Exhibit B) dated August 22nd, 1908.

When the plaintiff sued in Original Suit No. 3 of 1909 to recover possession of the lands purchased by him he was successful in the District Munsif's Court, but his suit was dismissed in the Sub-Court owing to a finding by the Subordinate Judge that his vendor's purchase under Exhibit A was a nominal sale which never took effect. There was a second appeal but the High Court declined to interfere for the obvious reason that what was decided by the lower Appellate Court was a question of fact.

The learned Subordinate Judge in the present suit has granted the plaintiff a charge over the suit properties for certain sums of money and a direction for sale in default of payment, (the date by which they are to be paid is not specified in the decree); also a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 13 and a decree against the family properties against first defendant's sons, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, for the unrealised balance after sale of the suit properties; also a personal decree against the 13th defendant for a sum of Rs. 800 paid into the hands of 13th defendant on August 22nd, 1908, and interest thereon up to the date of suit. Plaintiff and 13th defendant appeal.

The memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 to 3 strikes at the root of the plaintiff's case and has, therefore, been heard first. The two main objections to the decree of the lower Court are (1) that the payments made by the plaintiff were made voluntarily by him on his own account and give rise to no legal obligation for his being reimbursed, (2), that the suit is barred by limitation,

The finding of the Subordinate Judge's Court in appeal from the Munsif's decree in Original Suit No. 3 of 1909 to which first defendant was a party, that the sale to 13th defendant was a nominal transaction and never took effect binds the plaintiff in this subsequent suit as res judicata. Exhibit VII, which is a notice sent on May 18th, 1908 by first defendant to the plaintiff, warning him that the sale in favour of 13th defendant was nominal, unenforceable and had not been given effect to, and that he would be liable for any loss consequent on any second sale that he might take from 13th defendant, was sufficient to put him on notice of the defects of 13th defendant's title. After this he cannot put forward any plea that he is a bona fide purchaser without notice. But although plaintiff's purchase was not the bona fide act of a stranger, it does not follow that after he took a sale-deed from 13th defendant the payments he made to preserve the property from the clutches of the original vendor's creditors were not made bona fide, especially those which he made after his title had been established in the Court of first instance. His purchase was, no doubt, speculative as, with his eyes open, he took the risk of his sale-deed turning out to be a worthless bit of paper, but having taken it he was bound by the terms of his contract with 13th defendant and by the provisions of section 55 (5) (d) of the Transfer of Property Act to make these payments. He was interested in the widest sense in which the word is used in section 69 of the Indian Contract Act in making these payments of money which first defendant was bound by law to pay. The decision in Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasi Ram Sen (40) justifies a liberal interpretation of the word "interested".

Whatever may be said of his determination to secure for himself by hook or by crook the first defendant's properties, which adjoined those of first defendant's brother which he had previously purchased, a subject on which the learned Subordinate Judge has enlarged in his judgment, the payments which plaintiff made after purchase in order to discharge encumbrances on the land cannot be characterised as meddlesome or officious. For it is well established that sections 69 and 70 of the Indian Contract Act were not designed for the benefit of persons who intermeddle with the affairs of others [see Rajah of Pittapur v. Secretary of State (37), Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India (38) and Mohendra Ghoshal v. Bhuban Mardana [Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana] (39)]. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that a man who gets a genuine sale-deed and on the strength of that sale-deed obtains a valid decree for possession from a competent Court in a contested suit cannot fairly be accused of an endeavour to manufacture evidence of title if he pays off charges upon the property in order to preserve it from sale.

In Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27), Chinna Swami v. Padula Anandu (25) and Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Export Company (28) transferees for value who in good faith discharged mortgages binding on the property have been treated as entitled to equitable relief on account of the payments made by them although the transfers in their favour turned out to be void or voidable.

In Janki Prasad Singh v. Baldeo Prasad (32) the plaintiff's own purchase was fictitious and inoperative. Here it is his vendor's purchase that failed.

In Karuppan Ambalagaran v. Sakuth Levval (21) it was recognised by Ayling, J., at page 77* and by Tyabji, J., at page 81* that a sale may be invalid and fraudulent, but a person who pays valuable consideration for it may yet in all good faith make perfectly honest payments to discharge liabilities existing on the property. The sale in that case was collusive and without consideration and was not followed by possession and the payments were made long afterwards with the object of strengthening the colourable purchase. The learned Judges, therefore, refused the equitable relief of subrogation to a person who did not come into Court with clean hands. Here the plaintiff after due notice purchased a title which turned out to be nominal and worthless owing to his vendor's collusion with the original owner, but until that title was tested in Court and pronounced to be bad he may have honestly believed that the only course open to him for preserving the property and saving any possible right he might be possessed of through his purchase was to stave off attachments and sales by satisfying the first defendant's creditors and when he acted thus he certainly did not intend to do it gratuitously for the first defendant's benefit. I am of opinion that the first objection fails

Coming now to the question of limitation; the important thing is to see what is the starting point from which limitation began to run on the plaintiff's cause of action. In his plaint he puts it on February 14th, 1913, when the High Court dismissed his second appeal. But this is not supportable in view of the Privy Council decision in Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Boid) (1) which laid down the principle that when an appeal to a superior Court only results in the decree appealed against being confirmed in India there is no interruption in the running of time calculated from the date of the original decree. For the purposes of execution Art. 182 of the Limitation Act especially provides for the final decree of the Appellate Court forming a starting point and the decision in Viswanatha Sastri v. Sitalakshmi Ammal (3) dealt with an application for execution. The case in Sarvthama Row v. Chinnasami Pillai (5) was decided before the Privy Council case in Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Boid) (1) was published in this country and cannot be followed so far as it lays down a different principle from that propounded by the superior Tribunal. Similarly, with Rajagopalan v. Tirupanunthal Tambiran (4). Mahamed Ali Sheriff v. Budharaju Venkatapathi Raju (2) which was later than Sarvothama Row v. Chinnasami Pillai (5) followed Hukum Chand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Boid) (1). I propose to proceed as the Judicial Committee proceeded in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (6), and take either of two alternative Article when it is doubtful which of the two is more appropriate to the facts of the case.

Now, whether the appropriate Article in the present suit is Art. 97, which applies to suits for money paid upon a consideration which afterwards fails or whether Art. 62 applies, the period of limitation in either case is only three years and the starting point in the first alternative is the Subordinate Court's judgment (Exhibit P) dated July 12th, 1911, which dismissed the plaintiff's suit for possession with the observation that his claim to be reimbursed for the debts he paid for the defendant must be separately adjusted, and in the other alternative is the date of payment of each of the debts. The last payment was on November 26th, 1912, and this suit which was instituted on February 17th, 1916, is time-barred whether three years are reckoned from July 12th, 1911, or November 26th 1912.

It appears from Arunachala v. Ramasami (41) and the Secretary of State for India v. Venkayya (13) that a lessee or purchaser who gets possession on the strength of a registered contract and is subsequently evicted for want of title in his lessor or vendor has six years from the date of his dispossession under Art. 11 to sue for damages for breach of the title for quiet enjoyment: but if, from the inception, the vendor had no title to convey and the vendee never gets possession, the starting point of limitation, in the opinion of Seshagiri Iyer, J. in Subbaraya v. Rajagopala (10), is the date of the sale. The present suit was brought within six years of the plaintiff's losing possession on 31st August 1911 in consequence of the First Court's decree being reversed on appeal.

But this suit is not one for damages or for return of the purchase-money, so far as first defendant is concerned, and there is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and first defendant for such a suit to lie.

Lastly, an attempt has been made to bring the plaintiff's case within Art. 132 which gives a period of 12 years from the date of money charged upon immoveable property becoming due. But the plaintiff is not the holder of a charge upon the suit property. If he was in possession and was about to be evicted on the suit of the real owner, the Court might as an equitable relief direct in its decree that on the decree-holder first paying him the cost incurred by him in redeeming the mortgages that existed on the land, delivery of possesson should be given. There would be no limitation against an equitable claim of this sort being set up as a defence to a suit for possession. That, however, is not the plaintiff's position in this suit. Again, the plaintiff has no rights under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act as a purchaser of the equity of redemption, as it has been found that what he purchased was a sham title, and thus he does notstand on the footing of a mortgagor.

(41) 25 Ind. Cas. 618; 38 M. 117; 1 L. W. 849 27 M. L. J. 517; 16 M. L. T. 397;

The case of Rajha of Vizianagaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (17) must be distinguished on the ground that there the plaintiff was a co-sharer with those whose revenue charges he paid off and could take advantage of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act and of the fact that under sections 2 and 44 of Act II of 1864 a statutory charge was created upon every portion of the land in the joint estate. In Narayana Kutti Goundan v. Pechiammal (26) no question of limitation arose.

When one person pays off a debt which another is bound to pay the ordinary relief that the Courts can give is a personal decree against the defendant for money had and received as section 69 of the Contract Act does not provide any higher remedy. If that remedy is barred owing to the plaintiff's delay, he cannot extend the period of limitation by asking for an enlarged relief by way of a charge upon the defendant's property. In the cases above quoted where equitable charges were given, that in Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27) was probably under section 82, Transfer of Property Act, but no provision of law is cited. Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (25) speaks of an equity to re-payment, not an equitable right to a charge. In Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company (28) the defendant was the transferee and it was made conditional on plaintiff's getting a decree setting aside the mortgage that he should reimburse the defendant. Apart from the legal position, the plaintiff's case has little or no merits. In spite of warning he made a speculative purchase from a person who, as it turned out, had no legal title. When plaintiff's case failed in the appeal to the Court which had the final determination of question of fact, he had three years to recover the money he had wasted in paying the debts of another. He chose to await the issue of an appeal to the High Court on a point of law which did not exist. After that appeal failed, one year and five months still remained within which he might have brought this suit. But he waited till three years all but three days had elapsed from the High Court's decree and now finds he is too late.

In the result, the memorandum of objections of respondents Nos. 1 to 3 is allowed with costs, and the suit (Original Suit No. 49 of 1916) is dismissed with the costs of first, second, third and fourth, seventh and 14th defendents (one set but) the decree will stand as against 13th defendant's legal representative as he did not appeal. Appeal Nos. 239 of 1918 is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 4. No order is necessary on fourth respondent's memorandum of objections.

IN APPEAL NO. 166 OF 1918.

This is an appeal by 13th defendant against the direction in the decree for the recovery from him of the sum of Rs. 800 paid to him at the date of his sale by the plaintiff and interest thereon. Assuming that upon valid sales of immoveable property there is an implied covenant for quiet enjoyment between the vendor and the vendee in this case we have found that the sale-deed (Exhibit B) conveyed no title and that the vendee was aware of its defects. There was, therefore, no lawful and enforceable contract of sale and further no implied covenant attached to such an agreement. The plaintiff is only entitled to a return of the money paid by him on a consideration that failed and even if he had six years under Art. 116 as the contract was registered, this suit having been instituted more than six years after Exhibit B must fail. The appeal is allowed. The plaintiff will pay the costs of 13th defendant. The 13th defendant will pay the costs of first defendant.

Devadoss, J.—In Appeal No. 166, 13th defendant is the appellant. In Appeal No. 239 the plaintiff is the appellant.

The first defendant has filed a memorandum of objections in Appeal No. 239.

The facts are: the first defendant executed a sale-deed in favour of the 13th defendant, Exhibit A, on 20th January 1907 in respect of the plaint properties. The 13th defendant sold the plaint properties to the plaintiff by Exhibit B on 22nd August 1908. The plaintiff filed a suit, Appeal Suit No. 3 of 1909, for possession, alleging that the first defendant harvested the crops in February 1907 and that he should be given possession of the property sold to him by the 13th defendant under Exhibit B and prayed for an injunction restraining the defendant from committing waste or interfering with his possession. The plaint was filed on 22nd December 1908 and is marked as Exhibit II in this case. The defendant in the said suit, who is the first defendant herein, pleaded that the sale in favour of Gopala Iyengar, the 13th defendant herein, was a nominal sale, that it was not given effect to and that Gopala Iyengar was not entitled to sell the property to the plaintiff and the plaintiff purchased it with the knowledge that Exhibit A, the sale-deed, evidenced a transaction not intended to be given effect to and was only intended as a shield against the creditors of the first defendant. The District Munsif of Srirangam decreed the plaintiff's suit holding that Exhibit A was a real transaction and that the plaintiff acquired a good title under Exhibit B and that possession should be handed over to the plaintiff. His judgment is marked Exhibit O. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly held that Exhibit A was a nominal transaction not intended to be given effect to and it had not been given effect to and that the plaintiff purchased the plaint properties under Exhibit B in spite of notice to him seven or eight months previous to the date of Exhibit B of the fact that Exhibit A was a nominal sale. His judgment is marked Exhibit P. Against the judgment the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court which was dismissed on 14th February 1913.

The plaintiff in this suit sues for the recovery of certain sums of money said to have been paid by him to discharge encumbrances on the property and he asks for a charge on the plaint property in respect of those items.

The Subordinate Judge has given a decree in favour of the plaintiff as regards the major portion of his claim and has dismissed the suit as regards the rest. Appeal No. 166 is by the 13th defendant who objects to a certain item being decreed against him. Appeal No. 239 is by the plaintiff who appeals against that portion of the decree of the Subordinate Judge which disallows a portion of his claim.

The memorandum of objections by the first defendant is against the decree passed against him in respect of the sums alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff in accordance with the sale-deed, Exhibit B.

As the main question in these appeals is the liability of the plaint property for the amounts said to have been paid by the plaintiff in order to discharge the encumbrances on it, the memorandum of objections was heard first. Upon the decision in the affimative of the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim the amounts paid by him in order to discharge the encumbrances on it depend the other questions, namely, the amount that he would be entitled to and the persons who would be liable to pay the amount.

A few facts are nececssary in order to make the contentions clear. Exhibit A was executed on 23rd January 1907 and Exhibit B on 22nd August 1908. The suit by the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 3 of 1909 (plaint marked Exhibit II) was filed on 22nd December 1908. The judgment of the District Munsif was on 20th January 1910. The judgment in appeal was on 12th July 1911. The judgment of the High Court in second appeal was on 14th February 1913 and the plaint in the present case was filed on 17th February 1916.

Mr. Srinivasa Gopala Chariar on behalf of the first defendant contends that the claim is barred under Art. 97 of the Limitation Act and that even if Art. 62 is held applicable the claim would likewise be barred. The payments were made by the plaintiff as follows: Rs. 1,000 at 7 A. M. on 26th January 1910 (Vide Exhibit [illegible]), Rs. 830 was paid on the same date Vide Exhibit C (1), Rs. 300 on 18th February 1910 Vide Exhibit M, Rs. 188 on 23rd March 1910 Vide Exhibit G, Rs. 350 on 10th February 1910 Vide Exhibit H and Rs. 399 on 26th November 1912 Vide Exhibit E.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation on the ground that time began to run only from the date of the judgment of the High Court in second appeal. This is clearly wrong. In Hukum Chand Bold v. Pirthichand Lal Chowdhury (Juscurn Boid) (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that time began to run from the date of the decree which deprived the plaintiff of the consideration given or paid by him. To quote their Lordships' words: "Both Courts have held that the failure of consideration was at the date of the first Court's decree. Their Lordships feel no doubt that as between these two decrees this is the correct view, for whatever may be the theory under other systems of law, under the Indian law and procedure an original decree is not suspended by presentaton of an appeal, nor is its operation interrupted where the decree on appeal is one of dismissal." Time, therefore, began to run in this case from the date of Exhibit P, the judgment in appeal reversing the decree of the District Munsif, and in order to claim money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed the suit should have been brought within three years of that date. The payments having been made more than three years before the date of the present suit, the claim is barred. It is unnecessary to pursue this question further as Art. 97 has no application to the facts of the present case. There is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the first defendant. The plaintiff did not give any consideration to the first defendant for any sale. Mr. Rangaswamy Iyengar, who appears for the plaintiff, has conceded that his case did not fall within Art. 97 of the Limitation Act. Art. 62 cannot have any application to the present case as the plaintiff does not pretend that the defendant received any amount for the use of the plaintiff, and Art. 61 can have no application as the plaintiff did not pay any money for the defendant.

Mr. Rangaswamy Iyengar for the plaintiff contends that his client has paid off certain encumbrances on the property which had been created by the first defendant and he, therefore, in equity is entitled to be paid those sums on the security of the plaint property burden on which he relieved. His case is that though Exhibit A was a nominal sale not intended to be given effect to, yet Exhibit B was a real transaction, though with the knowledge of the nature of Exhibit A, and the plaintiff wanted to support his title by paying off encumbrances as he was anxious to get a good title to the plaint property. He further contends that in any event the payments being made by him after he obtained the decree of a Civil Court in his favour he was entitled to discharge the burden on the property inasmuch as his title was declared by a Court of Law, and that even though that title was negatived in appeal he is entitled to be reimbursed the amounts which he paid during the time that decree was in force. He further contends that in respect of those sums he should be treated as having a charge on the property, and the period of limitation being 12 years for enforcing a charge no question of limitation arises in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge held in appeal—Vide Exhibit P—that Exhibit A was a nominal transaction and that the plaintiff was aware of the nature of the transaction evidenced by Exhibit A and, therefore, he was not entitled to any relief. Exhibit VII is a very important document which is a letter sent by the first defendant by registered post to the plaintiff on 18th May 1908. Therein he distinctly told the plaintiff that on account of the misunderstandings between him and the plaintiff he was trying to cause loss to him by getting a re-sale from Srirangam Ammanji Gopala Iyengar of his lands mentioned in the sale-deed which he had executed to the aforesaid person and which was not enforceable and had not been given effect to and that it was not at all proper to try to cause loss thereby and he intimated to the plaintiff that in case either he or any other person through him got a sale-deed executed, he should not be bound thereby and that he should be liable for the loss and expenses etc., that might be incurred thereby. With the knowledge conveyed by Exhibit VII the plaintiff purchased the plaint property under Exhibit B on 22nd August 1908. In his evidence before the lower Court the plaintiff admits that he received notice, Exhibit VII, three months before he bought the property under Exhibit B, that he did not give any reply to it, that he knew that his vendor, the 13th defendant, had not possession of the property and that the first defendant was in possession of the property. It may be safely held, therefore, that the plaintiff had knowledge, constructive or express, of all the circumstances attendant upon the execution of Exhibit A and of the circumstances that preceded and followed. When a man makes no enquiry or wilfully abstains from enquiry, the law presumes that he had knowledge of all the facts which an honest enquiry would have laid bare. In these circumstances, it cannot be contended for a moment that the plaintiff is a bona fide purchaser. His object, as stated by the Subordinate Judge, was to get the plaint property by hook or by crook. It appears the plaintiff bought the property for Rs. 5,000 undertaking to discharge certain encumbrances on the property which the 13th defendant had undertaken to discharge by reason of Exhibit A. The consideration for Exhibit B is the same as that for Exhibit A and there is also evidence that the plaintiff is a person who gambles in litigation, and he and the 13th defendant and one Sambasiva Iyer seem to have been friends who were in the habit of entering into speculative transactions. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, be held to have made any payments bona fide for the purpose of preserving the property from execution proceedings for the benefit of the first defendant. His sole object seems to have been to put up a claim for the plaint property by means fair or foul. In order to claim payments made to discharge encumbrances on the property the plaintiff must show that he was not a volunteer and that he did not make payments officiously. The onus is strongly upon him to show his bona fide and I am not prepared to hold that he paid these amounts bona fide. Symalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27) is quoted for the purpose of supporting the contention that the plaintiff, though not a bona fide purchaser, was entitled to be re-paid the amount that he spent in saving the property from execution proceedings. The facts of that case are not similar to those of the present. There A agreed to sell his property to C and then he sold the property by a subsequent conveyance to D. D. in order to secure priority got the sale-deed antedated and paid off the mortgage in favour of B. The learned Judges observe: "We fail to see in this circumstance anything to affect the validity of the payment which was, no doubt, made by the plaintiff for the purpose of strengthening his own claim. The plaintiff's illegal act in antedating his sale-deed also for the purpose of supporting his title does not vitiate the payment subsequently made, and which in itself was legal. There was, therefore, no want of bona fides, and certainly no fraud." There the sale was only a voidable sale. The sale in favour of D was a real transaction and was good till C moved in the matter and, therefore, when a person who has got a defeasible title makes the payment for the purpose of saving the property in his possession, he is entitled to be paid the amounts which he spent for saving the property. In Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (25) it was held that if a purchaser of land, while in possession of the land purchased, pays off an encumbrance on it, he is entitled when his purchase is found invalid, to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee whom he has paid off. The learned Judges observe: "The American Courts apply to cases of this kind an equitable doctrine of subrogation borrowed from the Civil Law, and when equity requires it allow persons paying off mortgages on properties which do not belong to them to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagees. This right of subrogation is not extended to mere volunteers who pay off other people's debts without having any concern in them." The learned Judges make it quite clear that the equitable doctrine of subrogation can have no application on volunteers or persons whose conduct is officious. The plaintiff is only a volunteer for he knew that his vendor had no title at all and that the sale-deed, Exhibit, A, was a sham transaction; and by his taking conveyance from the 13th defendant he cannot be said to have acquired any right to the property when his own vendor had not the shadow of a title to it. If the plaintiff had a voidable or defeasible title he might bring himself within the principle of the decisions in Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27) and Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (25). The Courts do not always make a distinction between a void and a voidable sale and a transaction which is only a sham one. A void sale can never be made good. A voidable sale is good till it is avoided. But a sham or nominal transaction is no transaction at all and is a mere waste paper. In Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company (28) the transferee was a bona fide transferee and though the sale was avoided under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, yet he was entitled to a charge for the amount spent by him in discharging the mortgage. In that case the transferee had a voidable title which is a good title till it was avoided and the payment by him to discharge any incumbrance on the property during the time he was in possession if it was a pro tanto relief of the burden existing on the property and as such the person who defeats his title should in equity pay or make good the amount paid by the transferee during the time his title was considered good. The same principle is applicable to cases of conveyances which are voidable under sections 55 and 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Where a person has paid off certain encumbrances during the time when his title was unchallenged he could in equity claim to stand in the position of the creditor whom has paid. In Karuppan Ambalagaran v. Sakuth Levvai (21). Ayling, J., after referring to Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (27) and Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Company (28) says: "But a perusal of the judgments in these cases shows that in each the person claiming subrogation was at the time of making payment a transferee of the property for valuable consideration. He may have been guilty of fraud or misconduct in connection with the transfer which might render it voidable at the instance of another party; but he had paid consideration for the transfer and was possessed at the time he discharged the mortgage of a substantial interest in the property. The payments for which subrogation was claimed were necessary to protect that interest. This, as it seems to me, is a very real distinction between those cases and the present one." In the case before him and Tyabji, J. the transferee under a nominal sale was held not to be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee as against the purchaser in execution of the decree against the transferor.

The next contention that the plaintiff is entitled to be paid the amounts which he paid for the discharge of encumbrances between the dates of Exhibit C and Exhibit P requires careful consideration. By Exhibit O the plaintiff's title to the property was recognised by a Court of Law and till that decree was upset it was good and could not be questioned by anybody. The question whether payments made subsequent to this for relieving the burden on the property could be considered as payments by persons interested in the property is not free from difficulty. It is urged with some show of reason that when a person gets a decree in his favour from a Civil Court the payments made by him subsequent to the decree must be considered bona fide, for he has an interest to support and protect and if there is no appeal the plaintiff would be entitled to the property. This contention cannot hold good for the reason that a Civil Court does not confer a right to property which the person does not possess but only declares or enforces a right which he has. Except in a few cases where decrees themselves are a source of title, the decrees of Civil Courts cannot confer a title to immoveable property which a person does not possess and, therefore, when the plaintiff had no title at all to the plaint property the mere fact that a Civil Court considered or held that he had title would not confer an interest which he did not possess before, and he must have known that the District Munsif's decree in his favour dated 26th January 1910 was liable to be appealed against and that any payments made by him before the decree was upset were made by him with the knowledge that the decree might be upset on appeal. Therefore, I do not consider that the plaintiff paid the amounts detailed above bona fide with a view to protect the property. It is urged that there was an execution taken out by the mortgagee against the mortgaged property and the plaintiff paid the execution creditor to save the property from execution. It must be remembered that the plaintiff was a mere volunteer and could not claim to have done it by virtue of an interest in the property. In Nadhamuni Iyyan v. Appu Odayan (22) my learned brother (Mr. Justice Spencer) has laid down that a person who claims an equitable relief ought to come into Court with clean hands; and the plaintiff cannot be said to have come into Court with clean hands. Rajah of Vizianagaram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (17) is relied upon by the plaintiff for the contention that he had an interest in the property and that the payment made by him to protect that interest is a bona fide payment. The case at the foot-note does not help the plaintiff as there is clear finding that the plaintiff could not be regarded as having paid Krishana Bathan's debt officiously or as a mere volunteer. In Bhagwati Prasad v. Radha Kishen Sewak Pande (42) the Privy Council held that by the acts of the parties and their relations to one another the money borrowed by an agent for a principal for the purchase of property was rendered a charge upon the latter in the principal's hands he being the real purchaser, and the lender of money, which he advanced to the nominal purchaser of property who was the agent of the real purchaser, was entitled to a declaration that the advance of money for the purchase formed an equitable charge upon the property against the real purchaser. In that case the transactions were all real transactions and there was no contention that the payments were not made bona fide. In Ammani Ammal v. Ramaswami Naidu (24) Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., held that a purchaser in good faith who buys from the guardian of a minor the property which he considers to be the property of the guardian and not that of the minor was entitled to be paid back the amounts which he paid for discharging the encumbrances on the minor's property when the sale was set aside. It was held that the principle of subrogation did not apply to the case of volunteer or stranger. This equitable principle of subrogation need not be considered in this case for the plaintiff does not contend that he is entitled to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee. All that he claims is, to be entitled to be paid back the sums he paid and to have a charge on the property for those sums. In Radha Madhub Samonta v. Sasti Ram Sen (40) it was held that the payment of rent made by a purchaser of a putni taluk after the decision of the first Court in a suit brought by the defaulting putnidars for the setting aside of the putni sale by which it was held that the sale was invalid, and during the pendency of an appeal preferred not by the plaintiff, the auction-purchaser, but by the zemindar at whose instance the said sale had been brought about, is not a voluntary payment, inasmuch as he (the plaintiff) is a person interested in the payment of the money, within the meaning of section 69 of the Contract Act. Here, again, there was a real sale and the purchaser was bound to protect or rather was entitled to protect his interest in the property by payment of the amount due to the zemindar; otherwise the holding might have been lost, and the person who had the real title to the property was in equity bound to reimburse the person who had only voidable title the amount which he paid for preserving the property from sale for arrears of rent. In the present case the plaintiff does not seek to defend his title against an attack but wants a decree against the property for money paid by him to discharge certain encumbrances. He cannot be said to have acquired a charge by reason of payments made by him when he had no title to the property. He was a mere adventurer who was trying to make out a claim for property to which he knew he had absolutely no title. A man cannot create a charge by paying off an encumbrance on a property when he had not any subsisting interest in the property. The law in certain cases creates a charge when payments are made by persons who are either bound or entitled to pay off certain amounts, but the law does not favour an adventurer who makes payments only for the purpose of creating a title to property. The case in Janki Prasad Singh v. Baldeo Prasad (32) is very similar to the present. There the plaintiffs alleging themselves to be the purchasers of the mortgagee's rights in certain land, paid the amount of a decree against the mortgagee in order to save the property from sale. But if had already been found in a suit under section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the sale to the plaintiffs was fictitious and inoperative. It was held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the amount paid from their vendors. The learned Judges quote with approval a passage from the judgment of Straight, J., in Chedi Lal v. Bhagwan Das (43): "If the plaintiffs, as mere volunteers, chose to put their hands into their pockets and to pay a sum of money not for the defendants but for themselves, that was their own look-out, and they cannot now claim the benefits of section 70." The plaintiff in the present case has made the payments as a mere speculator and in the gamble for the title he must lose what he has paid because he was a mere volunteer and made the payments officiously in order to make out a title to property when he had absolutely no title to it.

I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff cannot claim any amount alleged to have been paid by him for relieving the burden on the plaint property from the first defendant either personally or on the security of the plaint property. The plaintiff's suit so far as the first defendant is concerned must be dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections by respondents Nos. 1 to 3 is allowed with costs. The appeal of the plaintiff (No. 239 of 1918) is also dismissed with costs of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. In the result the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs against all but the legal representatives of the 13th defendant.

I concur in allowing Appeal Suit No. 166 of 1918 with costs against the plaintiff. The appellant will pay the costs of the first defendant.

These appeals having been set down to be spoken to this day on the minutes of the decree and respondents Nos. 18 and 19 in Appeal No. 239 of 1918 having filed Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1442 of 1912 under O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, praying for a review of the judgment of this Court, dated the 30th March 1922, in the said Appeal No. 239 of 1918, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Although the 13th defendant did not appeal or join in the memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 to 3, the decree for sale of properties under O. XXXIV, r. 4 was a common decree against all the defendants: and the personal decree for any surplus that might remain due after the sale of the properties was a common decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 13.

Having held that the cause of action arising out of the sale dated 22nd August 1908 to the plaintiff was barred by limitation as against first defendant, we cannot, in the light of section 3 of the Limitation Act, shut our eyes to the fact that it is also time-barred against 13th defendant and his legal representatives and under O. XLI, r. 33 must, to be consistent, make the same order in their case.

The decree has not yet been signed and we have no doubt that there is "sufficient reason" within the meaning of O. XLVII, r. 1 to review our decision apart from our inherent powers under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. [See Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (44), Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (45).] See also In re St. Nazaire Co. (46) and In re Suffield and Watts, Ex parte Brown (47) as to the powers of a Court to correct an error obvious on the face of the record before the order has been completed.

If the Court of first instance had taken the correct view on the question of limitation it would have dismissed the suit, as laid, against all the defendants; and under section 107 (2), Civil Procedure Code, we have the same powers and duties to see that a proper and workable decree is passed as the original Court had. The decree of the lower Court provided that if any surplus remained after the sale of the properties the plaintiff should have a decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 13 for the recovery of such amounts.

Now that the decree for sale has been held to be not maintainable, we should in effect be allowing the nature of the case to be changed, and in effect be varying the decree of the lower Court as against 13th defendant if we were to allow a personal decree to be made against the 13th defendant's legal representatives, irrespective of the charge.

The words in our judgment "but the decree will stand as against 13th defendant's legal representative as he did not appeal" will now be expunged and the decree will be drawn up as if they had never existed.

RUDRA PARTAB SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s 138 (2), (3) (4), applicability of—Partition of lessee mahals—Joint responsibility of lessees for rent, whether affected.

Sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of section 138 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act merely refer to the responsibility for revenue to Government inter se of the owners of a taluqdari mahal which is partitioned and do not refer to the responsibility inter se of the lessees for rent to the taluqdar in the various lessee mahals. A perfect partition of a lessee mahal does not put an end to the joint responsibility of the lessees for rent to the taluqdar. [p. 430, col. 1]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 1st February 1922, confirming a decree of the Assistant Collector of the First Class, Sultanpur, dated the 7th June 1921.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Haider Hussain, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Wasim, Radha Krishna and Raj Kumar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These four second appeals arise out of suits brought by the plaintiff for arrears of rent against a large number of defendants claiming a decree jointly and severally against each of them. The ancestors of the defendants obtained a decree from the Settlement Court giving them perpetual lessee rights, and rent was fixed by the Settlement Court. In 1914 as between the various lessees a perfect partition was effected. The result was that this taluqdari mahal was divided into nine mahals and sub-divided further into 30 or 40 pattis altogether. Both the lower Courts have given a decree in favour of the taluqdar against the whole body of lessees making them jointly and severally responsible. In this appeal it is contended that such a decree was not a proper one inasmuch as it ignored the partition of the taluqdari mahal into lessee mahals and into pattis. Reliance is placed by the appellants on the provisions of section 138, sub-sections (3) and (4), of the Revenue Act. There provision is made for the limitation of the joint responsibility of co-sharers in any newly constituted mahal to the rent due in respect of that mahal only. It is also provided that all objections to distribution of the lands of a mahal into new mahals at the time of partition shall be decided by the Collector. Now, there can be no doubt that the responsibility of the co-sharers mentioned in these provisions would support the contention.

But in the case of Rudra Partap Singh v. Sikandar Khan (1) it was held by Mr. Lindsay that sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of section 138 merely referred to the responsibility for revenue to Government inter se of the owners of a taluqdari mahal which was partitioned and did not refer to the responsibility inter se, of the lessees for rent to the taluqdar in the various lessee mahals. The appellants, on the other hand, rely on a decision of Mr. Daniels which is not yet published in Rent Appeal No. 36 of 1920 decided on 25th November 1920. In this case Mr. Daniels held that the main object of a perfect partition, whether of proprietary or under-proprietary right (incidentally he would have held or also of mahals held by lessees) is to put an end to joint responsibility. I can find nothing in the Act to support the view that when lessees get their land partitioned off into a mahal such partition can affect their relations with the taluqdar. Mr. Lindsay has given good reasons for holding that this was not intended. It is true that Mr. Lindsay mentioned as one of the arguments against his view that his interpretation could not be a correct one in view of the provisions which were contained in the old Oudh Revenue Act of 1876 with respect to the partition of these mahals. I may say that the provisions of the Act of 1876, so far from furnishing any reason against the correctness of Mr. Lindsay's decision, appear to me to support it. In section 101 of the Act of 1876 there was a provision that the person to whom rent was payable might present an application objecting to the distribution of the rental over the several parts into which the mahal has been divided. Now this provision has been omitted in the present Act and it must have been omitted with a purpose. The present Act merely provides that all objections shall be decided by the Collector. It makes no reference to objections by the person to whom the rent is payable. It would, therefore, appear that in the new Act there was no intention to suggest that such objections could be made.

Another ground of appeal is that the appellants have in certain cases been made liable for rent due during the time of their predecessors-in-interest. It is urged that they could only be made liable for such rent to the extent of the assets in their hands derived from their predecessors-in-interest and it is stated that there is no evidence to show that there are any assets in their hands. I find, however, that there was no clear pleading by the appellants in the lower Courts that they were not liable on this ground. If they had set up this plea clearly in the lower Courts it is probable that the Court of first hearing would have fixed an issue as to whether there were assets in their hands. What happened was that the plaintiff, framing his plaint on the khewat, included as defendants some persons who had died. On discovering that he had done this he had the names of their successors entered. If the successors had wished to plead that they were not liable for the rents accruing during the time of their predecessors, they should clearly have pleaded the fact. What they did object to was the joinder as defendants of persons who were dead and this defect is cured by the substitution of their names.

For the above reasons, I dismiss these four appeals with costs.

Present :—Mr. Justice Foster.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—PETITIONERS

Firm SUKHDEO DAS GOBARDHAN DAS—PLAINTIFFS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Pleadings—Suit against Railway Campany for compensation for non-delivery of goods—Risk Note—Failure to plead loss in written statement—Presumption—Loss, whether can be proved during trial—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 103, 106, 114.

If a Railway Company wishes to escape the ordinary liability of a bailee, it should expressly plead the execution of a Risk Note and the loss of goods. [p. 432, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued a Railway Company for compensation for non-delivery of a bale of cotton consigned to him through the defendant Companies. The Company filed a written statement but there was no assertion or suggestion that the bale of cotton had been lost or destroyed. During trial the Company offered to produce evidence to show that the goods had been lost;

Held, (1) that such evidence could not be admitted; [p. 431, col. 2.]

(2) that a presumption could legally be raised that the goods were still in the possession of the Railway Company and that the plaintiff's case rested upon this presumption; [p. 431, col. 2.]

(3) that the defendant Company not having pleaded loss or special agreement was liable to compensate the plaintiff for the loss he had suffered. [p. 432, col. 1.]
